8 And all the elders and all the people said unto him, Harken not unto him, nor consent.

9 Wherefore he said unto the messengers of Ben-hadad, Tell my lord the king, All that thou didst send for to thy servant at the first, I will do: but this thing I may not do. And the messengers departed, and brought him word again.

10 And Ben-hadad sent unto him, and said, The gods do so unto me, and more also, if the dust of Samaria shall suffice for handfuls for all the people that follow me.

11 And the king of Israel answered and said, Tell him, Let not him that girdeth on his harness boast himself as he that putteth it off:

12 And it came to pass, when Ben-hadad heard this message, as he was drinking, he and the kings in the pavilions, that he said unto his servants, Set yourselves in array. And they set themselves in array against the city.

13 ¶ And, behold, there came a prophet unto Ahab king of Israel, saying, Thus saith the LORD, Hast thou seen all this great multitude? behold, I will deliver it into thine hand this day: and thou shalt know that I am the LORD.

14 And Ahab said, By whom? And he said, Thus saith the LORD, Even by the young men of the princes of the provinces. Then he said, Who shall order the battle? And he answered, Thou.

15 Then he numbered the young men of the princes of the provinces, and they were two hundred and thirty-two: and after them he numbered all the people, even all the children of Israel, being seven thousand.

within proper bounds, in repressing immorality, and countenancing zealous ministers in their labours, they only make way for the still small voice of the gospel, by means of which the Holy Spirit performs his gracious work upon the heart. (Notes, Is. xlii. 1-4. Rom. i. 13-16. 1 Cor. ii. 3-5. 2 Cor. x. 1-6.) And the minister, when deprived of this protection, and driven by persecution into obscure corners, may expect great usefulness, by this power accompanying his labours. The word of God is indeed "like a fire, and a hammer, that breaketh the rocks in pieces," and the whole of it should be preached with zealous plainness and faithfulness: but "the ministration of condemnation," and the awful terrors of eternal vengeance, only precede, and make way for, "the ministration of righteousness," and the sweet gospel of Christ, attended by urgent persuasions, melting expostulations, and tender invitations, in which the Lord chiefly comes to seal our hearts for himself.—We shall do well often to imagine, that we hear the Lord enquire, "What doest thou here?" In scenes of worldly dissipation, in trifling company, in riotous feasting, or where unlawful traffic is carrying on, the Christian can have no good answer ready: no more can the minister, if engrossed by needless worldly business, by trifling studies, or by the pursuits of ambition, preferment, pleasure, or reputation, to the neglect of the important duties of his calling. Nay, if we are at home, when we should be in the pulpit; asleep, when we should be at work; or in company, when we should be engaged in prayer and meditation, or reading the Scriptures; such a question must confound us. In short, every station has its proper duties, and every portion of time its proper work, and we should frequently call ourselves to account, whether we be in our place and duty as the season requires.

V. 15-21. It is not easy to convince men of their faults, and silence their excuses or boastings: and whilst the Lord encourages his servants under their difficulties, he sends them back to their proper work, ashamed of their timidity and neglect; and then he gives them both helpers, and success. He hath "a remnant, according to the election of grace," which he reserves to himself, and preserves from prevailing abominations. For their conversion and edification he waits and provides: in the mean time, impenitent sinners ripen for vengeance; and he raises up instruments to execute it upon them, from whom they shall by no means escape: for the word of God, spoken by his despised ministers, ensures their destruction, more than the sword of any enemy. Nor will he ever desert his own cause, however it seems to be run down: he will furnish men for the most perilous and self-denying services: and they who duly understand the importance of the sacred ministry, will renounce every other honour, pleasure, and interest for the sake of it, though called to labour in the midst of hardships, poverty, and persecution. Zeal for the glory of God and the salvation of souls will subordinate, though it will not extinguish, natural affections. Generally the work of the ministry requires the whole man: and when such persons are employed as have not been regularly educated for it, they are especially concerned to attend the instructions, to frequent the company, and to copy the examples, of aged and approved ministers: and "no man having set his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God." Matt. iv. P. O. 12-25.) In difficult times helpers of inferior abilities may be a great comfort to the discouraged servants of God; and this service is carried on to advantage, when different ministers concur, from the same principles, to seek the same great end of his glory in the salvation of souls. May "the Lord of the harvest send forth many such labourers into his harvest!" Amen. (Note, Matt. ix. 36-38.)

NOTES.

CHAP. XX. V. 1. Ben-hadad signifies The son of Hadad; (xi. 14-22;) yet he is said to have been "the son of Tabrimon, the son of Hezion." (xv. 18.) Perhaps Hadad was his father, and Tabrimon and Hezion his more remote ancestors.—The thirty and two kings were petty princes of the adjacent countries, who were either vassals or allies to the king of Syria.—Ben-hadad seems to have been induced by rapacity to wage war against Ahab; and it is probable that he had wasted the country before he besieged Samaria.—The late famine must have diminished the number of the Israelites, by death and emigration, almost beyond calculation: and by the righteous judgment of God, the remainder were so disaffected to Ahab, or so dismayed by Ben-hadad, that they had retired or fled; and thus they left the capital city in a very defenceless condition.

V. 2-11. Ben-hadad's first message was couched in insulting language. He not only considered Ahab's riches as already his property, but his wives and children, even the goodliest of them, as his slaves. Yet Ahab understood this only as a claim to dominion over him and his property, or kingdom; and in abject terms he consented to be his vassal, and to do him homage, and pay him tribute. Ben-hadad, therefore, (perhaps perceiving his terror and pusillanimity,) grew more insolent, and by a second message demanded the immediate possession and use of them all, for himself and his servants, who meant to carry away what was most valuable, whether it belonged to Ahab, or to his people. To this the elders of Israel would not allow the king to consent: the dominion and the public treasures Ben-hadad might have taken, but to plunder the city and enslave the inhabitants, must not be granted. To this answer the king of Syria sent a blustering menace, confirmed with an oath by his idols, implying, that he would enter Samaria with such numbers, that, when the whole city was reduced to a heap of dust, it would not afford them every one a handful. (Notes, Ex. xv. 9, 10. 2 Kings xix. 23, 24. Is. x. 13, 14:.) but Ahab very pertinently reminded him not to triumph till he had gotten the victory, as at present he was only preparing for the battle.

V. 13. Elijah had complained that he was left alone; yet the Lord had other prophets whom he could send to speak before Ahab. (Note, xix. 10.) Probably, Elijah and Elisha were at this time well employed in some distant part of the land; and Ahab and Jezebel were too much engaged, to prevent their labours or usefulness.—The Lord was pleased to predict the victory to this wicked prince, for his further conviction, that JEHOVAH, not Baal, was the living God: for the punishment of Ben-hadad's insolence; for the honour of his own name, and for the benefit of his true worshippers.

V. 14, 15. Ahab, sensible that the promised victory must be miraculous, enquired by whom it was to be obtained; and he was directed to employ, not his bravest soldiers, but the servants, or pages, of the chief men in the different provinces; and also himself to lead on the attack. His whole army consisted of only seven thousand men; (the same number with those preserved from idolatry, but not the same persons;) yet none of them were to be employed till 16 And they went out at noon. But ^{Ben-hadad} was drinking himself drunk in the pavilions, he and the kings, the thirty and two kings that helped him.

17 And ^{the young men of the princes of the provinces} went out first: and Ben-hadad sent out, and they told him, saying, There are men come out of Samaria.

18 And he said, ^{Whether they be come out for peace, take them alive: or whether they be come out for war, take them alive.}

19 So these young men of the princes of the provinces came out of the city, and the army which followed them.

20 And ^{they slew every one his man: and the Syrians fled; and Israel pursued them: and Ben-hadad the king of Syria} escaped on an horse, with the horsemen.

21 And the king of Israel ^{went out, and smote the horses and chariots, and slew the Syrians with a great slaughter.}

22 ¶ And ^{the prophet} came to the king of Israel, and said unto him, Go, ^{strengthen thyself, and mark, and see what thou doest: for at the return of the year the king of Syria will come up against thee.}

23 And the servants of the king of Syria said unto him, ^{Their gods are gods of the hills; therefore they were stronger than we: but let us fight against them in the plain, and surely we shall be stronger than they.}

24 And do this thing; ^{Take the kings away, every man out of his place, and put captains in their rooms:}

25 And number thee an army, like the army that ^{thou hast lost, horse for horse, and chariot for chariot: and we will fight against them in the plain, and surely we shall be stronger than they.} And he hearkened unto their voice, and did so.

26 And it came to pass at the return of the year, that Ben-hadad numbered the Syrians, and went up to ^{Aphek} to fight against Israel.

27 And the children of Israel were numbered, and *were all present, and went against them: and the children of Israel pitched before them ^{like two little flocks of kids}; but the Syrians filled the country.

28 ¶ And ^{there came a man of God, and spake unto the king of Israel, and said, Thus saith the LORD,} ^{Because the Syrians have said, The LORD is God of the hills, but he is not God of the valleys, therefore will I deliver all this great multitude into thine hand, and ye shall know that I am the LORD.}

29 And they pitched one over against the other ^{seven days.} And so it was, that in the seventh day the battle was joined: and the children of Israel slew of the Syrians ^{an hundred thousand footmen} in one day.

30 But the rest fled to Aphek, into the city: and ^{there} a wall fell upon twenty and seven thousand of the men ^{that were left.} And Ben-hadad ^{fled, and came into the city,} ^{into an inner chamber.}

31 ¶ And ^{his servants} said unto him, Behold now, we have heard that the kings of the house of Israel ^{are} ^{merciful kings}: let us, I pray thee, ^{put sackcloth on our loins, and ropes upon our heads, and go out to the king of Israel: peradventure he will save thy life.}

32 So they girded sackcloth on their loins, and ^{put} ropes on their heads, and came to the king of Israel, and said, ^{Thy servant Ben-hadad saith, I pray thee, let me live.} And he said, ^{Is he yet alive?} ^{he is my brother.}

33 Now ^{the men did diligently observe whether any thing would come from him, and did hastily catch it:} and they said, Thy brother Ben-hadad. Then he said, Go ye, bring him. Then Ben-hadad came forth to him; and he caused him to come up into the chariot.

34 And Ben-hadad said unto him, ^{The cities, which my father took from thy father, I will restore; and thou shalt make streets for thee in Damascus, as my father made in Samaria.} Then, ^{said Ahab, I will send thee away with this covenant.} ^{So he made a covenant with him, and sent him away.}

the first assault had been made, and the first advantage gained, by this small company of servants! (Notes, Judg. vii. 8. 16—22. 1 Sam. xiv. 6—10.) And under the present impression of terror and hope, Ahab readily obeyed these uncommon orders; though, in general, he despised and hated both the prophets, and Him that sent them.

V. 16—18. It is probable that Ahab chose to lead out his little troop at noon, when he supposed the Syrians would be at dinner, or reposing themselves. Ben-hadad, despising the Israelites, was indulging to excess; and, on hearing that a small company came out of Samaria, he gave such orders, in pride and intoxication, as were exactly suited to embarrass his officers and soldiers; and to prevent their attacking the assailants with spirit, lest they should slay those whom they had been ordered to take alive! (Marg. Ref.)

V. 20, 21. The two hundred and thirty-two servants, whom especially Ben-hadad had ordered to be taken alive, slew every one the man who attempted to seize him: and this unexpected resistance, by the secret operation of God upon the minds of the Syrians, so dismayed them, that they yielded the army an easy and extensive victory. (Note, 1 Sam. xiv. 11—15.) Ben-hadad might think himself very fortunate, or rather greatly favoured, after all his boasts and menaces, that he escaped with life, drunken as he then was. (Notes, 1 Sam. xxx. 16—18.)

V. 22. It does not appear that Ahab regarded this merciful and seasonable warning, or that he made any suitable return for his late unexpected deliverance!

V. 23—25. The servants of Ben-hadad, either in flattery, as if no human valour could possibly rout his army, or from present conviction, ascribed their defeat to the gods of Israel. They supposed that Israel had many deities, like the gods of other nations, to whom they ascribed a limited power within a certain district, out of which they could do nothing. JEHOVAH had displayed his glory from mount Sinai; the temple was built on mount Zion; Samaria was situated on a hill; and the people loved to sacrifice on high places; therefore the Syrians concluded that the gods of Israel were powerful upon the mountains, but not in the plains; and they foolishly expected to prevail against Israel, and JEHOVAH, by changing their ground. (Note, Num. xxiii. 13.) It is, however, probable, that they considered the plain country as better suited to their army, which was furnished with cavalry and chariots of war, than to the foot-soldiers of Israel.—Their other advice was sensible and pertinent.

The kings served rather for pomp and feasting, than for war; and it could not be expected that they would either be so hearty in the cause of Syria, or so observant of exact discipline, as Syrian captains, appointed by the king, and desirous of signaling themselves, would be. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 27. All, &c. This small company was all that Ahab had collected upon this emergency, or all the seven thousand before mentioned were present; but their appearance conveyed the idea of weakness and timidity. (Notes, 1 Sam. xiii. 6, 7. 13—15. 22.)

V. 23. Ahab and Israel merited the most dreadful vengeance; but it was proper that the ignorance or blasphemy of the Syrians should be confuted, that all might know that JEHOVAH, the God of the whole earth, was almighty in every place. (Notes, Deut. xxxii. 26, 27. Jer. xiv. 7—9. Ez. xx. 7—9. xxxvi. 32.)—Probably, this man of God informed Ahab, that the Lord had devoted Ben-hadad to destruction, and would deliver them into his hands, that he might execute his vengeance upon him.

V. 30. A wall, &c. The falling of this wall, at least the immense slaughter made by it, must be ascribed to the immediate interposition of the Almighty.

V. 31—34. A general opinion seems to have prevailed, that the princes of Israel, the people of God, were more generous and clement than other kings; and, indeed, sentiments, derived from the oracles of God, produce good effects in this respect, on multitudes who do not act habitually on religious principles.—Ben-hadad's ambassadors, appearing in his name before Ahab, clothed in sackcloth, and with ropes on their heads, formed a remarkable contrast to the preceding state of affairs. Thus they acted as penitents and criminals, who were sorry that they had attacked Ahab, and confessed that they deserved to die for that offence. This was a very great mortification to Ben-hadad; and it was equally flattering to Ahab's vanity, who, seduced by it, forgot both the interests of Israel, and his own real honour and security. Indeed, he ought to have given God the glory of his victory, and to have consulted the prophets in what manner to deal with Ben-hadad. But he acknowledged this wicked prince as his brother; being more pleased with the dignity of a king, than the distinction of an Israelite; (Note, 1 Sam. xv. 8, 9.) He even treated him with respect, and made a league with him upon disadvantageous terms; and sent him away, without any security, except his bare word, for the performance of the treaty.—These streets of Damascus were probably allotted the Israelites for the purposes of trade, that in them they might live unmolested according to 35 ¶ And a certain man of the sons of the prophets said unto his neighbour, "in the word of the LORD, 'Smite me, I pray thee. And the man refused to smite him.

36 Then said he unto him, 'Because thou hast not obeyed the voice of the LORD, behold, as soon as thou art departed from me, a lion shall slay thee. And as soon as he was departed from him, a lion found him, and slew him.

37 Then he found another man, and said, 'Smite me, I pray thee. And the man smote him, "so that in smiting he wounded him.

38 So the prophet departed, and waited for the king by the way, and "disguised himself with ashes upon his face.

39 And as the king passed by, he cried unto the king: and he said, 'Thy servant went out into the midst of the battle; and, behold, a man turned aside, and brought a man unto me, and said, Keep this man: if by any means he be missing, then shall "thy life be for his life, 'or else thou shalt "pay a talent of silver.

40 And as thy servant was busy here and there, 'he was gone. And the king of Israel said unto him, "So shall thy judgment be; thyself hast decided it.

CHAP. XXI.

Ahab covets Naboth's vineyard, and is greatly wroth because Naboth refuses to part with it, 1—4. Jezebel discovering this, causes Naboth to be stoned, as a blasphemer, 5—14. She excites Ahab to take possession of his vineyard, 15, 16. Elijah is sent to meet Ahab, and to denounce the judgment of God against him, and his family and Jezebel, 17—24. Ahab's enormous wickedness, 25, 26. He externally humbles himself before God, and the judgments are deferred to his son's days, 27—29.

AND it came to pass "after these things, that A Naboth the Jezreelite had a vineyard, which was in Jezreel, hard by the palace of Ahab king of Samaria.

2 And Ahab spake unto Naboth, saying, "Give me thy vineyard, that I may have it for "a garden of herbs, because it is near unto my house: and I will give thee for it a better vineyard than it; or, if it "seem good to thee, I will give thee the worth of it in money.

their own laws. It is probable that the same liberty had been allowed the Syrians in Samaria; where the idolaters were at ease, when the prophets of JEHOVAH were cut off.

V. 35, 36. This command was given by one of "the sons of the prophets" "in the word of the LORD," and probably to another of the same company. His refusal, therefore, was direct disobedience to God, which he was pleased to punish with immediate death. Ahab would doubtless hear of this event; and if one who humanely refused to smite a pious prophet at the command of God was thus punished, he might conclude that he should not be spared who disobeyed God, by forming an alliance with a haughty idolatrous king, whom the Lord required him to destroy. It seems that the prophet intended, by being wounded, the better to personate a soldier who had been in the battle, and had deserved well of his king, though he had failed in one particular.

V. 38, 39. The prophet appeared, either as one wounded in the face, and so covered with a bandage like a veil to disguise himself, as many understand it, or he assumed the character of a mourner, being under condemnation to die, seeing he could not pay the talent of silver required of him.

V. 41, 42. As soon as Ahab discovered who the prophet was, he perceived that he had been drawn in to pass sentence upon himself. Ahab lost his life in fighting against Ben-hadad, who did not fulfil this treaty; (Notes, xxii. 3. 31—35:) and great evils came upon Israel from the Syrians, whom Ahab might at this time have subjugated, or deprived of power. (Notes, 2 Kings vi. 25—29. viii. 13. x. 32—36.)

V. 43. Heavy, &c. Whilst the Lord secured his own glory, and protected his people, he deprived Ahab of all satisfaction in his success, and filled him with vexation and dismay. He did not repent of his fault, but he was chagrined at the message, and enraged at the messenger. Many think it was Micaiah; which is not wholly improbable. (Notes, xxi. 4—6. xxii. 1 Sam. xiv. 45, 46.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—21. The indignation of the Lord will surely weaken and dispirit sinners; and those nations especially, which have been favoured with the light of revelation, will be brought low for their iniquity, when they forsake the service of God.—Wicked men delight to insult over the fallen; success increases their pride and insolence; and thus they, too, are prepared for vengeance.—They who most daringly rebel against God, are often mere cowards when assaulted by their fellow-creatures: and no extremities, or consultations, will bring sinners, when left to themselves, duly to consider the real causes of their distress.—Men will part with their most pleasant things, which they most love, to save their lives; and yet they lose their souls, and incur everlasting misery, rather than bestow any labour, or give up any pleasure or interest, to prevent it!—Boasting and menacing language generally betrays "weak and foolish mind, exposes men to cutting rebukes, and terminates in abject meanness and disgrace. To glory in what we have done, is pride and vanity; but to glory in what we will do, is extreme ignorance and folly; for no capacity or management can ensure success. (Note, Jam. iv. 13—17.)—Drunkards perform great things, as far as vapouring words can go; and they urge one another on to rash and foolish enterprises, which expose them in every way to detriment, or to ruin.—The Lord will secure his own glory, and take care of his own people, notwithstanding the wickedness of the great, or of the many: he will leave every impenitent sinner without excuse; and he delights to save by unlikely instruments, that his own power may be the more conspicuous. At some seasons, the convictions of the most abandoned may get an advantage over their lusts: for a time they may be restrained from iniquity, do many things according to the command of God, and even regard the admonitions of his ministers; thus they are sometimes externally favoured, that they may experience the different effect of obedience and of disobedience, for their deeper condemnation, if they relapse into their former crimes.—The Lord inspires counsel and courage, or sends infatuation and dismay, as he pleases; so that the battle is not to the strong; but all calculations are strangely proved erroneous, when this secret influence is not taken into the account. (Note, Ec. ix. 11, 12.)

V. 22—43.) Fallen man has very confused, absurd, and dishonourable apprehensions of the Divine attributes. He conceives of God, as if he were such an one as himself, and is thus emboldened to persist in his rebellion: and the most consummate wisdom, in worldly concerns, often unites with the most contemptible ignorance on religious subjects.—To silence the blasphemies, or to expose the mistakes, of his enemies, the Lord sometimes gives temporary success to those who, in another way, despise his warnings, and disobey his precepts; but he will not countenance them in their crimes, nor let them finally escape condign punishment. The whole creation is at war with those who fight against God; and he will surely render contemptible, as well as miserable, the haughtiest of them.—The ambitious are pleased with abject submissions and adulation, and love the society of the most wicked men, who will stoop low enough to them. Thus they are seduced and bribed, not only to disregard the will of God, and to prefer the friendship of his enemies, but to forego the most solid temporal advantages to themselves and their connexions, for the sake of empty words and fair professions! It becomes all to be merciful; and clemency is the ornament of royalty, especially of the kings of Israel, the rulers of God's people; yet clemency to notorious criminals, whilst those who love and serve God are treated with cruelty, is strangely inconsistent; to pretend to be more merciful than the Lord, by sparing those whom he commands to be put to death, is an awful presumption; and to regard those as brethren, whom he hath doomed to utter destruction, is an evidence of great impiety.—In every thing the Lord demands implicit obedience; even the plea of compassion will not excuse rebellion against his will; and, by severe temporal judgments on such as have committed lighter offences, he loudly speaks terror to more atrocious criminals, whom he will at length constrain to decide against themselves. And whatever prosperity they may in the mean time obtain, it will be embittered to them by what they feel, and what they fear; for "there is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked."—But may we not here, by an allowable accommodation, hint some profitable instructions? The convinced sinner, not daring any longer to persist in his impotent contest against the Almighty; and, unable to flee from him, or to purchase his forgiveness and favour, is almost reduced to despair. Then he hears a report of mercy, abounding in Christ Jesus to the chief of sinners; and, in hopes of obtaining a free salvation, with penitent tears and humiliating confessions, he cries out, "God be merciful to me, a sinner." Becoming acquainted with the gracious appellations of Father, Brother, and Friend of sinners, and the exceedingly great and precious promises contained in the Scripture; he diligently observes, and eagerly catches them, as it were, from the Saviour's lips, and pleads them in humble prayer. Thus he obtains forgiveness; the everlasting covenant is made with him, and all the blessings of the gospel are secured to him; at the same time, he yields himself to the Lord to be his servant, and love constrains him to live to his glory.—But, alas! most that hear these glad tidings are busy here and there till the day of salvation is gone; and, not having wherewithal to ransom their souls, they must spend eternity in unavailing lamentations and despair. Nay, even true believers are often so taken up with trifles, as to let seasons of important usefulness glide away unimproved, to the loss both of themselves, and of others. May the Lord "teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom!"

NOTES.

CHAP. XXI. 1, 2. Ahab had just before lost an opportunity of enlarging and improving his dominions; and now he foolishly and wickedly coveted Naboth's vineyard, to make him an additional kitchen-garden, or pleasure-garden. He seemed, however, to propose equitable terms to the possessor; but his fault lay in desiring it in an inordinate manner. (Note, Lx. xx. 17. Rom. vii. 7—12.)

3 And Naboth said to Ahab, "The LORD forbid it me, that I should give the inheritance of my fathers unto thee.

4 And Ahab came into his house heavy and displeased, because of the word which Naboth the Jezreelite had spoken to him; for he had said, I will not give thee the inheritance of my fathers. And he laid him down upon his bed, and turned away his face, and would eat no bread.

5 ¶ But Jezebel his wife came to him, and said unto him, Why is thy spirit so sad, that thou eatest no bread?

6 And he said unto her, Because I spake unto Naboth the Jezreelite, and said unto him, Give me thy vineyard for money; or else, if it please thee, I will give thee another vineyard for it: and he answered, I will not give thee my vineyard.

7 And Jezebel his wife said unto him, Dost thou now govern the kingdom of Israel? Arise, and eat bread, and let thine heart be merry; I will give thee the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite.

8 So she wrote letters in Ahab's name, and sealed them with his seal, and sent the letters unto the elders and to the nobles that were in his city, dwelling with Naboth.

9 And she wrote in the letters, saying, Proclaim a fast, and set Naboth on high among the people;

10 And set two men, sons of Belial, before him, to bear witness against him, saying, Thou didst blaspheme God and the king. And then carry him out, and stone him, that he may die.

11 And the men of his city, even the elders and the nobles, who were the inhabitants in his city, did as Jezebel had sent unto them, and as it was written in the letters which she had sent unto them.

12 They proclaimed a fast, and set Naboth on high among the people.

13 And there came in two men, children of Belial, and sat before him: and the men of Belial witnessed against him, even against Naboth, in the presence of the people, saying, Naboth did blaspheme God and the king. Then they carried him forth out of the city, and stoned him with stones, that he died.

14 Then they sent to Jezebel, saying, Naboth is stoned, and is dead.

15 ¶ And it came to pass, when Jezebel heard that Naboth was stoned, and was dead, that Jezebel said to Ahab, Arise, take possession of the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite, which he refused to give thee for money: for Naboth is not alive, but dead.

16 And it came to pass, when Ahab heard that Naboth was dead, that Ahab rose up to go down to the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite, to take possession of it.

17 ¶ And the word of the LORD came to Elijah the Tishbite, saying,

18 Arise, go down to meet Ahab king of Israel, which is in Samaria: behold, he is in the vineyard of Naboth, whither he is gone down to possess it.

19 And thou shalt speak unto him, saying, Thus saith the LORD, Hast thou killed, and also taken possession? And thou shalt speak unto him, saying, Thus saith the LORD, In the place where dogs licked the blood of Naboth shall dogs lick thy blood, even thine.

20 And Ahab said to Elijah, Hast thou found me, and free from all restraints of conscience, who would do any thing for hire; to testify that he had blasphemed God and the king: thus he would be condemned to be stoned for the blasphemy; for the treasonable words, his estate would be confiscated; and the elders were required to see the sentence immediately executed. These infamous orders were as infamously obeyed, without hesitation or reluctance; and by elders and nobles, of Israel, though in contempt of all religion, law, and justice!—It seems they stoned Naboth's sons also, that there might be none to avenge his death, or to demand his estate. (2 Kings x. 26.) When Jezebel cut off the Lord's prophets, she had, doubtless, injured the magistrates to similar practices, and rewarded their wickedness: so that she did not fear a refusal from the elders of Jezreel. They also knew from whom the orders came, and reported the execution of them to Jezebel, not to Ahab.—The elders of the same city, not long after, paid as implicit obedience to Jehu's orders, in putting to death seventy of Ahab's descendants. (2 Kings x. 3—10.)

V. 15, 16. Ahab proved, that he was pleased with the conduct of Jezebel and her agents, and indeed made it his own; by readily going in person to take possession of the estate, for which the murder had been committed. (Note, 17—19.)

V. 17—19. The junior prophets were sent upon ordinary messages to Ahab; but Elijah himself was employed on this occasion, whose very presence would dismay the proud tyrant, and whose strong faith and intrepid spirit qualified him for such a service. (Notes, xviii. 17—20.) In the very vineyard of Naboth, even whilst Ahab was seizing on his prey, and surrounded by his officers, the prophet delivered this message to him, for his deeper mortification, and that it might be more noticed by others. (Note, 2 Kings ix. 25, 26.) He directly charged Ahab with the murder of Naboth, nor did he attempt to deny or excuse himself. The prediction, that dogs should lick the blood of Ahab, certainly implied that he would be cut off by a violent death: but the expression, "in the place where," &c., occasions considerable difficulty; because Samaria was at some distance from Jezreel. Some learned men think that the word rendered "the place where," may mean, in like manner as: but this signification of the original word is perhaps unprecedented. Others suppose, that the word place is taken in a large sense, for all the adjacent region; and so includes Samaria, where Ahab dwelt, and where he was buried; as well as the city of Jezreel, (xxii. 37, 38.) But may we not say, that, as dogs licked the blood of Ahab, literally, when his chariot was washed in the pool of Samaria; so they licked his blood, as flowing through the veins of his son Joram, when Joram was slain by Jehu, and his body thrown into this very spot? (2 Kings ix. 25, 26.)

V. 20. After the slaughter of Baal's prophets, and Elijah's flight from Jezebel, Ahab had returned to his wicked course of life, and he scorned the prophet as his worst enemy. (Notes, xxii. 8, 9.) Before indeed he had bestowed much pains to find him: but being now determined in idolatry, and yet afraid of him, whose prayers had called for drought upon the land, and fire and rain from heaven; (Notes, xvii. 1. xviii. 38, 39. 41—44;) and especially still feeling in his conscience the anguish of his cutting rebukes, he even trembled at the thoughts of him. Others called prophets had come to him with milder messages, and he thought them more friendly; but Elijah's severity could not be mollified. His presence therefore on this occasion surprised, offended, and affrighted him: and when

V. 3. Naboth seems to have been a conscientious man, and a worshipper of JEHOVAH, which might render Jezebel more determined on his destruction. (Note, 8—14.) He valued his vineyard as "the inheritance of his fathers," originally assigned to them by the Lord himself. He might, if in want, have leased out, or mortgaged, his estate till the year of jubilee: (Notes, Lev. xxv. 23—25, Num. xxxvi. 1—12;) but this was not the case; and he was sensible, that if his vineyard became a part of the royal gardens, it would never revert to his family. The Lord had forbidden him to alienate his land; and he seriously gave Ahab the true reason, why he could not comply with his desire; for he would rather seem uncourteous, or offend his prince, than transgress the law of God; whatever otherwise he might have been disposed to do.—The original expression is stronger than that translated in the New Testament, "God forbid;" by which St. Paul especially marks his abhorrence of any pernicious opinion. (Marg. Ref.) It implies the idea of impiety; and Naboth seems to have started back from the proposal, with aversion and alarm, as from a temptation to a heinous sin. 'A profane thing from the Lord.' (1 Sam. xxiv. 6. Heb.)

V. 4—6. Ahab, a victorious and prosperous king, was filled with anguish and vexation, because he met with a denial in so small a matter! Such was the conflict of his passions, that he lay down, and either through sickness or sullenness, would not taste food. He greatly desired the vineyard. His pride was intolerably offended, that one of his own subjects should peremptorily refuse to comply with his proposal; he was ashamed to yield the point in contest, and he was afraid of proceeding to extremities. The effects of these conflicting passions made him very miserable: yet it is probable he would not have attempted violence against Naboth, had not "Jezebel his wife stirred him up." (Notes, Esth. v. 13, 14.)—It is observable, that in relating the cause of his disquietude, Ahab made no mention of Naboth's conscientious reason for his refusal; but stated it as the effect of insolence and obstinacy!

V. 7. It was indeed unworthy of the king of Israel to fret himself about such a trifle. But this base woman meant to rouse her husband to gratify both his covetousness and revenge. (Notes, 2 Sam. xiii. 1—3.) She intimated, that he was incapable of managing a kingdom, if he hesitated to seize on Naboth's vineyard, and to punish his insolence. (Note, John xi. 49—53.) 'What! hast thou not power to crush such an adversary? Arise and enjoy thyself, and leave the business with me; I will speedily settle it to thy satisfaction.' This was her evident meaning, to which Ahab made no objection or opposition.

V. 8—14. Jezebel wrote in Ahab's name; and sealed the letters with his seal, which it seems he allowed her to use when, and as she pleased. Thus the elders of Jezreel were required to obey her directions, as they valued the king's favour. She represented Naboth as a dangerous criminal, who must be taken off, without a particular enquiry into the nature of his offence: yet, as he bore a fair character, some charge must be brought against him, which might prevent the people from taking umbrage at his execution. A fast must therefore be proclaimed; as if some horrid wickedness had been discovered, which threatened the city with divine judgments, till solemnly expiated. (Note, Is. lviii. 3, 4.) This would excite general consternation: and on the day appointed, Naboth must be seized; and "men of Belial procured, (that is, men wholly unprincipled,

O mine enemy? And he answered, I have found thee: because 'thou hast sold thyself 'to work evil in the sight of the LORD.

21 Behold, 'I will bring evil upon thee, and will take away thy posterity, and will cut off from Ahab 'him that pisseth against the wall, and 'him that is shut up and left in Israel.

22 And will 'make thine house like the house of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, and like the house of Baasha the son of Ahijah, for the provocation where-with thou hast provoked me to anger, and 'made Israel to sin.

23 And of 'Jezebel also spake the LORD, saying, The dogs shall eat Jezebel by the 'wall of Jezreel.

24 Him 'that dieth of Ahab in the city the dogs shall eat; and him that dieth in the field shall the fowls of the air eat.

25 But 'there was none like unto Ahab, which did 'sell himself to work wickedness in the sight of the LORD, 'whom Jezebel his wife 'stirred up.

26 And he did 'very abominably in following idols, 'according to all things as did the Amorites, whom the LORD cast out before the children of Israel.

27 ¶ And it came to pass, when Ahab heard those words, that 'he rent his clothes, and put sackcloth upon his flesh, and fasted, and 'lay in sackcloth, and 'went softly.

28 And the word of the LORD came to Elijah the Tishbite, saying,

29 'Seest thou how 'Ahab humbleth himself before me? because he humbleth himself before me, 'I will not bring 'the evil in his days: but 'in his son's days will I bring the evil upon his house.

his enemy had found him, he expected not to go well away, but hear some awful judgment denounced against him, for his recent transgression.—Nor did Elijah deny that he was an enemy to his wickedness: he neither paid respect to him, nor was intimidated by his anger or power. He had found him, as a thief caught in the fact; and, in the name of God, he denounced the most tremendous sentence of condemnation on him and on his posterity. (Note, Jer. ii. 26—30.) For Ahab had "sold himself," as a willing slave to his lusts. This is very different from "being sold under sin;" so that through the remaining power of corrupt nature, a man who "delights in the law of God," and hates all sin, yet "cannot do the things that he would." (Note, Rom. vii. 13, 14.)

V. 21, 22. Elijah was the voice, the Lord was the speaker, whose words these evidently are. (Notes, xiv. 9—11. xvi. 2—4.)

V. 23. This circumstance not only predicted the dreadful manner in which Jezebel should be slain, but denoted the worst punishment of sin to be after death. (Note, 2 Kings ix. 30—37.)—Jezreel. In the very place in which Naboth had been murdered.

V. 25, 26. Ahab's crime in respect of Naboth, was not a detached part of his conduct, contrary to the general course of his life, as David's sin in the matter of Uriah had been; but it was a specimen of his continued rebellion against God: (Note, Rom. vii. 15—17:) and the idolatry to which Jezebel had first stirred him up, was equally abominable in the sight of God. Having sold himself to work wickedness in the sight of the Lord, as if in contempt and defiance of him, he was openly, constantly, and diligently employed in it, as a slave is in his master's business: and it was requisite that his punishment should be as notorious as his crimes had been.

V. 27—29. Ahab was greatly terrified at Elijah's message; and at the severe, determined, and solemn manner in which he delivered it: but his humiliation was superficial, and productive of external observances only. He did not, that we find, so much as restore Naboth's vineyard to his heirs; much less did he put away Jezebel, or renounce idolatry, and establish the worship of God. But he rent his clothes, wore, and lay in, sackcloth, fasted, and appeared in public with the dejected air of a penitent.—However, though his humiliation was formal and hypocritical, it allowed the justice of God, and his own sin, and put an outward honour on the Divine law. Worthless as it was, he would have acted still worse, if he had vindicated and gloried in his crimes, or attempted to put the prophet to death: and therefore the Lord recompensed his outward temporary repentance with a similar reward; for he granted him a respite of the judgment, as far as it respected his family, and spared him the anguish of witnessing the slaughter of his children.—Jezebel was too hardened to shew any symptoms of remorse on this, or any other occasion.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—7. It is natural to us, as fallen creatures, to hanker after those things which are withheld from us; and every accession of wealth, or prosperity, increases the violence of this propensity. The commandment indeed, which forbids us to covet, "is holy, just, and good," the fence of our neighbour's property, and of our own peace and integrity. But alas! "it is weak through the flesh;" and the impetuous torrent of our lusts easily bursts the salutary barrier, and rages the more for having been opposed. (Note, Rom. viii. 3, 4.) Yet every violation of the precept proves its excellency; as indulged concupiscence opens the door to temptations, makes way for the most atrocious crimes, and prepares misery and destruction for every one who stands in the way of its gratification. If fair means fail to procure the object of inordinate desires, fraud or violence must be employed. Pride cannot brook opposition: every plea of conscience is treated as mere pretence; and the best intended actions, of the most blameless and excellent persons, are ascribed to the worst of motives. But such passions are serpents crept in a man's bosom, till they sting him to death with exquisite torture.—Vain indeed are earthly advantages, if the want of a coveted spot of ground for a garden, or the supercilious or conscientious behaviour of an inferior, can rob a prosperous monarch of all his comfort, and render him sick with rage and vexation! This, however, is wholly the effect of men's lust and passions, which like children, are always most restless when most indulged. Providential blessings well answer the end for which they were intended, but cannot form a rational creature's felicity: and that degree of contradiction or disappointment, which would scarcely cause a humble man to heave one sigh, will break a proud man's heart. We should then beware of covetousness, pride, anger, envy, and discontent: we should "watch and pray, that we may not enter into temptation:" we should aim to make the spiritual precept "thou shalt not covet," the barrier in our hearts, as well as in the law of God, against the violation of the other commandments: and not allow ourselves so to desire things lawful, as not to be able to brook a denial or disappointment. (Note, Matt. v. 27, 25.)—Our more intimate connexions are of vast importance. In the married state we expect, and should reciprocally impart, sympathy, counsel, encouragement, and assistance: but when, instead of a prudent and pious counsellor, a man has a factor for Satan in the form of an artful, unprincipled, and beloved woman, what fatal effects may not be expected! "Be ye not therefore unequally yoked with unbelievers."—It is hard to relate facts, respecting ourselves, with simplicity and impartiality; but much more difficult to restrain those within the strict limits of equity, who are able to seize on the objects of their desires, without fear of being called to account before any human tribunal. Hence rapines and oppressions have disgraced human nature, and desolated the earth, in all ages; every resistance to the will of a superior has been condemned as rebellion; and this has occasioned assassinations, massacres, or public executions. A little acquaintance with history and with human nature, will terminate our astonishment at such transactions; for "nothing is new under the sun;" but they must ever excite our regret, our compassion, and our indignation.

V. 8—16. The most flagrant injustice has generally been committed under the colour of legal forms; and the most horrid crimes have been perpetrated under the mask of piety: because the shew of these good things hides the deformity of such transactions, as otherwise could never be endured. (Notes, Matt. xxiii. 14. 25—28.)—Many command and reward villany, who in their hearts despise and detest the mercenary wretches whom they employ. (Note, Matt. xxiii. 3—5.) It is grievous that men of Belial abound even in the lower order of society; but most horrible when judges and nobles deserve this harsh appellation. Yet there will always be found those in every rank, who will prostitute their talents, influence, and conscience, to the tyrant who rewards iniquity. Let us then bless God for a limited government, and for security from such outrages of oppression: though even in Britain, men of Belial, by false testimony and perjury, may deprive us of our property, our liberty, our reputation, or our lives. We should therefore commit all that is dear to us to the Lord's keeping: seek those good things, which cannot be taken from us; and wait with cheerful patience for that approaching judgment, when all iniquitous sentences shall be reversed. And let judges, juries, and witnesses beware of being warped, in their decisions, verdicts, or testimony, by fear, affection, or interest: for they, who now are placed upon the tribunal, must shortly stand at the bar, to answer before a heart-searching impartial Judge for their conduct in their important stations.—They who rejoice in iniquity, and gladly seize on the profit derived from the crimes of others, will be condemned equally with the perpetrators: and the triumphing of the wicked, in the success of their villany, resembles the flash of lightning, which leaves the night more dark and gloomy than before: for the Lord beholds, and is displeased; and his tremendous threatenings are only preludes to his more tremendous vengeance.

V. 17—29. Such ministers of God as are most decidedly faithful must expect to be deemed morose, and even malevolent, by sinners whose consciences have often been galled with their plain warning and rebukes, but whose hearts are wedded to their lusts. Men of this character often count the very persons to be their enemies, whose hearts bleed with compassion for them, and whose secret prayers in their behalf are recorded before God as a demonstration of their disinterested love for them. Indeed this appears, in their being willing rather to incur their keenest resentment, than not endeavour to save their souls. If men allow that they hate the minister for his faithfulness, they condemn themselves; but if they dislike him for his excessive severity, and his ill-nature, they are perfectly excusable: and what sinner would not wish to stand fair with his own conscience, and with society? On the other hand, impenitent sinners often account those to be their friends, who speak smooth things, and help them to deceive themselves: and are very lavish in their commendation, by way of contrasting them with those whom they deem their enemies; that it may be thought they love religion, whilst they hate its firmest friends.—But "the man of God" will neither desire the applause, or fear the reproach, of those who have sold themselves to work wickedness, and evince that they are the enemies of God and holiness. His testimony will one day find out, and condemn, those who have rejected it. Terrible things may come upon the willing slaves of sin in this world; but they will surely receive its awful wages in the second death. (Note, Rev. xx. 11—15.)—At the tribunal of God, the differ-

CHAP. XXII.

Ahab persuades Jehoshaphat to go with him against Ramoth-gilead, 1—4. Jehoshaphat proposes to enquire of the Lord; and the false prophets assure Ahab of success, 5—7. At Jehoshaphat's request Micaiah is sent for, 8—12. The messenger's advice, and Micaiah's answer, 13, 14. Micaiah, adjured by Ahab to declare the truth, predicts his death, and shews that his prophets are deceived by a lying spirit, 15—23. He is reviled, smitten, and sent to prison, 24—28. Jehoshaphat goes to battle in his robes, but Ahab in disguise, 29, 30. Jehoshaphat, mistaken for Ahab, narrowly escapes; Ahab is mortally wounded; and the people are dispersed by proclamation, 31—36. Ahab dies; and dogs lick his blood, 37, 38. The acts of Ahab, who is succeeded by Ahaziah, 39, 40. Jehoshaphat's good reign, and acts, 41—49. He dies, and is succeeded by Jehoram, 50. Ahaziah's wicked reign, 51—53.

AND they continued three years without war between Syria and Israel.

2 And it came to pass in the third year, that Jehoshaphat the king of Judah came down to the king of Israel.

3 And the king of Israel said unto his servants, Know ye that Ramoth in Gilead is our's, and we be still, and take it not out of the hand of the king of Syria?

4 And he said unto Jehoshaphat, Wilt thou go with me to battle to Ramoth-gilead? And Jehoshaphat said to the king of Israel, I am as thou art, my people as thy people, my horses as thy horses.

5 ¶ And Jehoshaphat said unto the king of Israel, Enquire, I pray thee, at the word of the LORD to-day.

6 Then the king of Israel gathered the prophets together, about four hundred men, and said unto them, Shall I go against Ramoth-gilead to battle, or shall I forbear? And they said, Go up; for the LORD shall deliver it into the hand of the king.

ence will be manifest to all men, betwixt the most lamentable falls of true believers, and the habitual wickedness of ungodly men; and betwixt true repentance, and all external, partial, and temporary appearances of it.—Before the searching word of God, the most stupid conscience will sometimes be disquieted, and the stoutest hearts tremble; and for a season sinners will speak and act as if truly penitent: but by their fruits ye shall know them; and as the heart remains unchanged, nature will soon return to that course from which it has been violently forced; so that relapses into former iniquities, with continuance and quietness, will evince such hopeful appearances to be widely different from “that repentance which is unto salvation, not to be repented of.” Yet, as these concessions outwardly yield the point in contest, and are thus honourable to God, he will notice and recompense them with respites and outward benefits. So that, whilst we are warned to beware of counterfeits, we are encouraged by the abounding grace of God, which he will never withhold from the upright humble soul; seeing he so delights in mercy, that he extends it even to wicked men, as far as consists with his justice, holiness, truth, and wisdom. We may also be animated to abound in the work of the Lord, assured that our labour will not be in vain; since he even recompenses in kind the formal services of his enemies. And, finally, may we seek the blessings of the new covenant, for the good of ourselves, and of our children after us: whilst wicked men leave their inheritance to their posterity, burdened with the curse of God; and ensure destruction to their own souls.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXII. V. 2. We shall have a better opportunity hereafter, of fully considering Jehoshaphat's character. (Notes, 2 Chr. xvii.—xx.)—He was very criminal in marrying his son to one of the family of idolatrous Ahab, which probably occasioned his visit at Samaria, with all its consequences.

V. 3. Ramoth, &c. This seems to have been one of the cities that Ben-hadad had engaged to restore to Ahab: but, having recovered his liberty, he made no scruple of violating his word. (Note, xxi. 31—43.)

V. 4. Jehoshaphat meant nothing more, than to express his readiness to afford Ahab every assistance in his power; as both he and his forces were at his command: but the language seemed to countenance all Ahab's undertakings; or at least to treat all the differences in opinion and conduct between him and Ahab as unimportant! Yet surely there was an essential difference between the reformer of Judah, and the corrupter of Israel! But excessive pliability of temper was Jehoshaphat's failing, which exposed him to many temptations, and involved him and his kingdom in many and complicated calamities; and terminated in the extirpation of his whole family, Joash alone excepted. (Notes, 2 Kings viii. 18. ix. 27. x. 13, 14. xi. 1, 2. Chr. xviii. i. xix. 2, 3.)

V. 5. Jehoshaphat had been used to “acknowledge God in all his ways,” and not to engage in any important undertaking without enquiring of him by his prophets or high priest: and he was not satisfied for Ahab to do otherwise. But what true servant of God could bring an acceptable, or even a tolerable, message to a vile idolater and oppressor, who, for twenty-two years after he came to the throne, had been hardening himself in iniquity, amidst warnings, judgments, mercies, and convictions?

V. 6. It is most probable, that these were the prophets of the groves, who escaped, when the prophets of Baal were slain at the command of Elijah; for certainly they were false prophets. As they ate at Jezebel's table, we may be sure, that they commonly prophesied in the name of Baal: but it seems that occasionally they could speak in the name of the LORD. (Notes, xviii. 18—20. 40.) In this verse indeed the word is not JEHOVAH, but Adonai, which is used with greater latitude: but afterwards both Zedekiah, and the rest of them,

7 ¶ And Jehoshaphat said, Is there not here a prophet of the LORD besides, that we might enquire of him?

8 And the king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat, There is yet one man, Micaiah the son of Imlah, by whom we may enquire of the LORD: but I hate him, for he doth not prophesy good concerning me, but evil. And Jehoshaphat said, Let not the king say so.

9 Then the king of Israel called an officer, and said, Hasten hither Micaiah the son of Imlah.

10 And the king of Israel and Jehoshaphat the king of Judah sat each on his throne, having put on their robes, in a void place in the entrance of the gate of Samaria; and all the prophets prophesied before them.

11 And Zedekiah the son of Chenaanah made him horns of iron: and he said, Thus saith the LORD, With these shalt thou push the Syrians, until thou have consumed them.

12 And all the prophets prophesied so, saying, Go up to Ramoth-gilead, and prosper: for the LORD shall deliver it into the king's hand.

used the word JEHOVAH. (11, 12.) Like some modern philosophers and poets, they perhaps would argue, that it was all one, whether the Supreme Being were called Baal, or JEHOVAH, or Jupiter. To humour the matter therefore with Jehoshaphat, and to show that they were no bigots, but men of candour and liberality, they would for once prophesy in the name of JEHOVAH. They perhaps allowed Jehoshaphat to be a good sort of man: but he had some narrow prejudices, and would not be satisfied, if they said, ‘Go up, for Baal shall deliver it into the hand of the king;’ and they would scorn to disagree with him about a trifling variation, which they could make with little trouble, and without expense. They perceived, likewise, which way Ahab's inclinations leaned, and to please him likewise they assured him of success. It is, however, to be supposed, that the number and valour of Ahab's forces, his alliance with Jehoshaphat, and the scandalous treachery of Ben-hadad, concurred in encouraging their hopes that he would obtain the victory; especially as, notwithstanding his idolatries, he had before been successful. (Notes, xx.)

V. 7. Jehoshaphat must have regarded these prophets as sycophants, whose interest it was to counsel Ahab to please himself. He knew that Israel was favoured with Elijah, Elisha, and other eminent prophets, though none of them appeared at court: he felt dissatisfied; but being too afraid of giving offence, he seemed to allow that these were prophets of God, yet he wished to consult some other, if there were any to be found. Perhaps he took occasion, from their using the word Adonai, (which might mean either the God of Israel, or a false God,) to enquire after some other prophet of JEHOVAH: and this might induce them afterwards to change their language in this respect. His subsequent conduct, however, shews that he paid far more regard to them than they deserved.

V. 8. Micaiah is never mentioned in the history, except in this chapter and the parallel history in Chronicles: yet he doubtless had several times been sent with messages of rebuke and warning to this haughty idolater; (Notes, 9. xx. 43.) Ahab, therefore, while he allowed, that they might enquire of the LORD by him, acknowledged that he hated him! (Notes, Is. xxx. 8—11. John vii. 3—10. xv. 17—21.) But Jehoshaphat ventured gently to intimate that he ought not to say so: he ought neither to hate him, nor be displeased with his word, nor seek agreeable, but useful things; and he hoped on this occasion he would bring an encouraging message.

V. 9. Ahab knew where to find Micaiah, whom he perhaps had put in prison for some of his faithful reproofs. (Note, 26, 27.)—Some conjecture that Micaiah was the prophet, that three years before had chagrined Ahab, and that he had kept him in prison ever since.

V. 11. Horns, &c. These horns of iron were, probably, intended to represent the joint forces of the two kings, made successful by the power of God. The false prophets imitated the true ones in using external signs, the more deeply to impress the minds of those whom they addressed. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 13, 14. Perhaps this man intended to be friendly to Micaiah: and thought it was a pity that he should balk his preferment, and expose himself to Ahab's resentment, by a needless or useless scrupulousness. He advised him to shew some deference to royalty; to have some respect to the other prophets; and not to affect singularity, or presume that he alone was divinely inspired. But he must have entertained very absurd notions concerning prophecy; either considering the whole to be a mere imposition; or supposing that the truth, will, and purpose of God could be moulded and modelled according to the inclinations of man. If he thought that Micaiah, by speaking that which was good to Ahab, could promote the success of the enterprise, he must have been extremely ignorant. And it was still worse, if he advised Micaiah to please 31 ¶ But the king of Syria commanded his ^athirty and two captains that had rule over his chariots, saying, ^bFight neither with ^csmall nor great, save only with the king of Israel.

V. 30. Perhaps Ahab was secretly alarmed by the solemnity of Micaiah's address, though he scorned to desist from his enterprize; or he was aware, that he should be peculiarly aimed at by the Syrian forces. Under pretence of honouring Jehoshaphat as with the chief command, he made this insidious proposal, that by exposing him to the greatest danger he might favour his own

V. 19.—23. In order to leave this hardened criminal without excuse, and to give a salutary lesson to others in future ages, Micajah received and related this vision.—We need not determine, what passes in that world, where the Lord unveils his glory; for truths, rather than facts, are revealed in such representations.—God had doomed Ahab to fall at Ramoth-gilead, by the army of Ben-hadad, whom he had sinfully spared. (Notes, xx. 31—34. 41, 42.) In order to bring him thither, he was pleased to give Satan leave to impose on him, with the hopes of success in that expedition. That evil spirit is always ready for such attempts, and generally uses false prophets and teachers as his 32 And it came to pass, when the captains of the chariots saw Jehoshaphat, that they said, Surely it is the king of Israel. And they turned aside to fight against him: and ^hJehoshaphat cried out.

33 And it came to pass, when the captains of the chariots perceived that it was not the king of Israel, that they turned back from pursuing him.

34 ¶ And a certain man drew a bow: ^aat a venture, and smote the king of Israel between the joints of the harness: wherefore he said unto the driver of his chariot, Turn thine hand, and carry me out of the host; for I am wounded.

35 And the battle increased that day: and the king was stayed up in his chariot against the Syrians, and died at even; and the blood ran out of the wound into the midst of the chariot.

36 And there went a proclamation throughout the host about the going down of the sun, saying, Every man to his city, and every man to his own country.

37 ¶ So the king died, and was brought to Samaria; and they buried the king in Samaria.

38 And one washed the chariot in the pool of Samaria, and the dogs licked up his blood, and they washed his armour, according unto the word of the LORD which he spake.

39 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Ahab, and all that he did, and the ivory-house which he made, and all the cities that he built, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

40 So Ahab slept with his fathers; and Ahaziah his son reigned in his stead.

41 ¶ And Jehoshaphat the son of Asa began to reign over Judah in the fourth year of Ahab king of Israel.

42 Jehoshaphat was thirty and five years old when he began to reign; and he reigned twenty and five years in Jerusalem: and his mother's name was Azubah, the daughter of Shilhi.

escape. (Note, 1 Chr. xviii. 29.) Such was his friendship! But Jehoshaphat meant no harm, and suspected none.

V. 31. (xx. 24.) Some have imagined, that Ben-hadad wished to wipe off the disgrace of his own captivity, by making Ahab prisoner in return; and to reciprocate his kindness, in liberating him without ransom. (Note, xx. 31—34.) But his proud heart seems to have rankled with a far more malignant resentment, and Ahab's success against him had excited such hatred, as no subsequent kindness could erase.

V. 32—35. Jehoshaphat in extreme danger "cried unto the LORD," and he wonderfully preserved him. (Note, 2 Chr. xviii. 31, 32. xix. 1—3.) But Ahab, notwithstanding all his precaution, could not escape the destined blow. The captains of Ben-hadad knew not where to seek for him: but an arrow shot at random by a Syrian was directed by God, to penetrate the joints of his breast-plate, or coat of mail, and to give him a mortal wound.—"Joints of the harness" in the text, seems less proper than the marginal reading:—Perhaps Ahab did not think that it would prove fatal, and would not intimidate his forces by wholly leaving the field of battle; and therefore having retired that his wound might be dressed, he returned, and remained in his chariot till he died.

V. 36. When Ahab's death was known, either Jehoshaphat, or they who succeeded in command, issued this proclamation, probably with reference to Micaiah's vision. (Note, 17.)

V. 38. (Note, xxi. 17—19.)

V. 39. It cannot be supposed, that this house was built of ivory: but it was so inlaid and ornamented with ivory, that it thence derived its principal elegance, or magnificence. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 41—46. Perhaps this general account is here given, of Jehoshaphat's reign over Judah, in order to contrast it with Ahab's wicked reign over Israel. The chief blemish in Jehoshaphat's character is hinted at, when it is said, "He made peace with the king of Israel:" not merely engaging to avoid all hostile measures; but entering into the most intimate alliance with him, and confirming the treaty by marrying his son to Ahab's daughter, which introduced much idolatry and wickedness into Judah, brought great calamities on the inhabitants, and occasioned the almost entire ruin of Jehoshaphat's family. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 2—5.)

V. 47. David had conquered Edom; and it is probable, that till this time, the nominal king of Edom had been merely a viceroy of the kings of Judah. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 48, 49. Jehoshaphat at first joined with Ahaziah, and lost his fleet: but, being reproved by a prophet, he would not consent to Ahaziah's proposals the second time. (Note, 2 Chr. xx. 35—37.) These ships of Tarshish were made to go to Ophir: yet it is said in Chronicles, they were "made to go to Tarshish."

43 And he walked in all the ways of Asa his father, he turned not aside from it, doing that which was right in the eyes of the LORD: nevertheless the high places were not taken away; for the people offered and burnt incense yet in the high places.

44 And Jehoshaphat made peace with the king of Israel.

45 Now the rest of the acts of Jehoshaphat, and his might that he shewed, and how he warred, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

46 And the remnant of the sodomites, which remained in the days of his father Asa, he took out of the land.

47 There was then no king in Edom: a deputy was king.

48 Jehoshaphat made ships of Tarshish to go to Ophir for gold: but they went not; for the ships were broken at Ezion-geber.

49 Then said Ahaziah the son of Ahab unto Jehoshaphat, Let my servants go with thy servants in the ships: but Jehoshaphat would not.

50 ¶ And Jehoshaphat slept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David his father: and Jehoram his son reigned in his stead.

51 ¶ Ahaziah the son of Ahab began to reign over Israel in Samaria the seventeenth year of Jehoshaphat king of Judah, and reigned two years over Israel.

52 And he did evil in the sight of the LORD, and walked in the way of his father, and in the way of his mother, and in the way of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin.

53 For he served Baal, and worshipped him, and provoked to anger the LORD God of Israel, according to all that his father had done.

Was there not therefore a Tarshish near Ophir, as well as a place of that name in Spain? (Note, 1 Kings x. 22.)

V. 51. Jehoshaphat began to reign in the fourth year of Ahab, who reigned twenty and two years, (41,) yet Ahaziah succeeded Ahab, in the seventeenth year of Jehoshaphat. This occasions some difficulty: but learned men suppose, that the chronology of the kings of Israel was adjusted to that of the kings of Judah. Now Ahab began to reign, after Asa had entered on his thirty-eighth year, and Asa died before the end of his forty-first year. (xvi. 29. 2 Chr. xvi. 13.) And Jehoshaphat began to reign in the same year, which thus was reckoned both to Asa and Jehoshaphat. Ahab therefore is computed to have reigned four years in Asa's time, and eighteen in Jehoshaphat's, including a part of the year in which Asa died, and in which Jehoshaphat succeeded him: though Ahab did not live till Jehoshaphat had fully completed his seventeenth year; having died nearer the beginning of the year, than Asa had done.—It is difficult to make this intelligible to persons not acquainted with the Jewish method of computing time; who, (whether in days or years,) take in both the first and last of the account, as if entire, even though only a small part of each had actually passed. Thus Ahaziah, having reigned part of the seventeenth year of Jehoshaphat, and part of the eighteenth, (for he died in the eighteenth,) is said to have reigned two years. (Note, xvi. 8—14.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—9. They who neglect the word of God, to rely on the promises of ungodly men, generally meet with merited disappointment: but this does not excuse the treachery and ingratitude of those, who deceive and injure the very persons that have been criminally kind to them.—There are certain critical seasons, when advantages are placed within our reach: but if we let the opportunity pass, we shall in vain attempt to recall it, and our endeavours will only serve to increase our losses. (Note, Ec. viii. 6, 7.)—Wicked men court the friendship of the righteous, when they can render their assistance subservient to their own purposes: but their professions of regard must be insincere. The same easiness of temper, which betrays some pious persons into amity with the declared enemies of religion, renders the connexion peculiarly dangerous to them: they are perpetually persuaded to improper compliances of every kind; and induced to connive at, and even sanction, such converse and conduct, as they ought decidedly to protest against: and the fear of being deemed uncourteous, and the desire of escaping censure, ridicule, or insult, for their religious peculiarities, stop their mouths, and cause them to deviate from sincerity in their expressions of civility. Yet these are the only godly people, whose acquaintance the men of the world will much desire. If, however, we are necessarily placed among profane or infidel characters; we must not yield either to fear or shame, so as to conceal our dependence on God and devotedness to him; for these mark the difference "betwixt those who serve him, and those who serve him not."—If it were to be decided by vote, what was the true religion, we see plainly, that those abominations which God abhors would gain the election, against that worship which he hath instituted. Even in the visible church, numbers, authority, and unanimity have repeatedly been in favour of delusions, against a single poor despised prophet of the Lord—It is, in a worldly sense, worth while, for a man of competent talents and address, to employ himself in reconciling men's consciences to their inclinations, and, if great men cannot discard their religious scruples, to enable them, by help of some false system, to render them subservient to the commission of sin without remorse. In some places and at some times, such false prophets will be well paid for their delusions: and they, who from ambition, avarice, or sensuality, "turn away their ears from the truth," and "cannot endure sound doctrine," will "heap to themselves teachers of this kind, after their own lusts;" that the agreement of so many ministers may embolden them to disregard those singular unfashionable persons, who are always robbing them of their comfort, and putting them upon an unnecessary strictness. A few individuals indeed hint, that something is wanting in their favourite instructors; nay, seem to prefer such as they dislike. But then, are not these too scrupulous? Do they not carry matters too far? Do they make proper allowances for human frailty, and peculiar situations? Thus eventually smooth doctrine, united with confidence, ingenuity, and courtly manners, obtains the preference, and opens the way to the favour of the great and of the many. The faithful servants of God must therefore lay their account with hatred, contempt, and insult. They know not to give flattering words, or to call base crimes by soft names, or to buoy up the hopes of hypocrites with insinuating falsehoods: they cannot be silent, when called to speak; but must declare the counsel of God, and not keep back any thing profitable, however displeasing. Their conscientiousness will often be ascribed to pride and obstinacy; the language of their tender compassion for souls will be called severity or malevolence; and their plain-dealing will be branded as insolence and ill-manners. But they must commit their cause to God: and wicked men, who hate them for the truth's sake, will at length find, that they were their own enemies in so doing, and that in opposing them they strove against the Almighty.

V. 10—23. Unprincipled teachers are sufficiently pliable in matters of religion: they carefully avoid the imputation of bigotry; they make great pretensions to candour, and even treat the most fundamental truths of Revelation, as matters of indifference or uncertainty: but the same men are exceedingly tenacious of their own interests, and stubborn in their own concerns. Whereas we ought to be as pliant as the willow, where our own ease, credit, advantage, or indulgence, are at stake; and as firm as the sturdy oak, in standing up for the great things, which relate to the glory of God, and the salvation of souls.—They who are rising in the world, or possessed of wealth, are apt to counsel the ministers of Christ, what they ought to speak in the name of the Lord; though they betray their own incompetency by every word. We should indeed be accessible and teachable, and willing to take a friendly hint from any man: but when others would persuade us to consult our own ease and interest, to shun the cross, to prefer courtesy to integrity, and to bend the word of God to the humours of the rich and great; we must recognize the tempter in such counsellors, and by peremptory language stop at once their insidious proposals, by declaring our determination, whatever others do, to adhere to what we consider as the truth and will of our Lord and Judge. (Notes, Am. vii. 13—17. Matt. xvi. 21—23.)—In some cases, however, we should not be forward to speak: when men evidently do not wish to hear the truth, and appear determinately set against our testimony, it may be enough to express our compassionate good will, and our fears for them; or to shew our disapprobation by silence. But if we are fairly called upon to give our sentiments, we must do it with all seriousness and firmness, without regarding personal consequences.—A believing view of the presence and glory of the King of Heaven, will raise us above the fear of our fellow-creatures, however powerful or enraged; and will enable us to commit ourselves to his protection, in the discharge of our duty, in the midst of apparent danger. But we must not expect exemption from hardship and ill usage; and need not wonder, if we eat the bread of affliction, and are even rewarded with blows, imprisonment, and cruel mockings: and when princes, false teachers, and apostates unite against the servants of God, even the remnant of his people will often be afraid to interfere in their behalf. Alas! how should we be ashamed to complain of what we in this day call trials, when we consider what the servants of God formerly endured! Yet it will be well, if our exemption from trouble prove not more injurious to us, than persecutions did to them: for we are more easily allured and bribed into unfaithfulness and conformity to the world, than influenced by terrors and threats. Let us then watch and pray, and prepare for temptations of every kind: and be careful that the quietness of our enemies do not arise from our making too many concessions, and going upon their ground, to meet them half way, in order to form the worst of all coalitions.—Nothing can by any means harm us, if we continue faithful, and meekly valiant for the truth: the Lord will remove every aspersion from our characters, and bear testimony to his truth, in his due time: and some will profit by our warnings, though others rush headlong on ruin.—Little do unbelievers suspect how many legions of crafty, malicious, and powerful enemies are unwearied in plotting their destruction; restrained by no hand, but that of Him whom they despise and disobey. The whole multitude of those, "who privily bring in damnable heresies," or propagate infidelity with vast industry and ingenuity, speak and write no other things, than are suggested to them by the prompter behind the curtain. Let us then fear suppressing our convictions, and returning back to sin after professions of repentance, lest Satan should thus prevail against us. For if he obtain leave to deceive, the disposition of our hearts to prefer a flattering lie, to an humbling truth that crosses our inclinations, will give him such an advantage, that every attempt of others to prevent his success, will only exasperate the mind to persecution or blasphemy.

V. 29—53. They, who are rebellious against God, and injurious to his people, will not often be very faithful or grateful to their friends. Self-love is their supreme principle, to which all other considerations must be sacrificed and the children of God are seldom so politic as the children of the wicked one. When, however, the Lord hath rebuked his offending people, he will mark that difference betwixt them and his enemies, which they did not sufficiently observe. "His eyes are upon the righteous, and his ears are open to their prayers: but his face is against the workers of iniquity." None "can hide themselves in secret places from him." That, which is casual to man, is the appointment of God, to fulfil his word of mercy or of wrath; so that, "men shall say, This hath God wrought, for they shall perceive, that it is his work." The deceiver and deceived are his, and the flatterer and flattered shall be taken in the same net, and fall into the same destruction. Alas! what will all riches, monuments, or splendid achievements avail, when God shall require the sinner's soul? Happy are they in death, who have served him in their generation: but man's best is so defective and defiled, that "blessed is he," alone, "whose iniquity is forgiven, and whose sin is covered." Yet sincere endeavours to do good are the proper evidences and effects of saving faith: and the concurring reproofs of God's word and rod will lead the upright believer to repent of every transgression, and to bring forth fruits meet for repentance: whilst hardened sinners rush forward, unawed and unmoved, in the ways which have led others before them into everlasting misery.

THE SECOND BOOK OF THE

K I N G S,

COMMONLY CALLED

THE FOURTH BOOK OF THE KINGS.

This book is merely a continuation of the preceding, to which it is joined in the Hebrew Canon: the remarks, therefore, already made on that, in a great measure apply to this.—It contains the history of above three hundred years.—In Israel the kings were uniformly idolatrous and wicked: and, though the labours of Elijah, Elisha, and other prophets, were prospered to preserve a considerable number of the people from the general contagion; yet the measure of their national iniquity was soon filled up; so that they were conquered and carried captive by the kings of the Assyrians, and dispersed among the Gentiles, no more, as a collected body, to be restored to their own land. Their country was, after this, planted by the conquerors with a mingled people, who established a corrupt and partial worship of JEHOVAH, from whom originated the nation and religion of the Samaritans. These events began to take place considerably above a hundred years before the Babylonish captivity. In Judah indeed some remarkable revivals of religion took place under the pious princes of David's family, and by means of the faithful labours of the prophets: but these promising appearances were of short duration; several of the kings were idolatrous and extremely wicked; the priests and Levites exceedingly neglected their important duty; and the people were generally prone to idolatry and iniquity. So that, after the death of pious Josiah, the nation became almost universally corrupt; and the melancholy account closes with the destruction of the city and temple, the desolation of the country, and the enslaving and carrying away of the inhabitants, by the Chaldeans.—As all the prophets, (commonly so called,) whose writings have been preserved, lived in the latter part of this period; (those excepted who lived during or after the captivity;) and as they continually refer to the facts recorded in this history; we may consider all their predictions as sanctioning, by their accomplishment, the Divine authority of the narrative; though it does not contain any express prophecy, the completion of which extended much beyond the term of the return of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity.

CHAP. I.

B. C. 895.

Moab rebels. 1. Ahaziah, being sick, sends to enquire of Baal-zebub; and Elijah orders the messengers to inform him, in the name of Jehovah, that he should surely die, 2-4. Ahaziah sends to apprehend Elijah, who twice calls down fire to consume those who came against him, 5-12. The captain of the third company sues for mercy; and Elijah, encouraged by an angel, goes to Ahaziah, and assures him that he would die at that time, 13-16. Ahaziah dies, and is succeeded by Jehoram, 17, 18.

THEN Moab rebelled against Israel after the death of Ahab.

2 ¶ And Ahaziah fell down through a lattice in his upper chamber that was in Samaria, and was sick: and he sent messengers, and said unto them, Go, enquire of Baal-zebub the god of Ekron, whether I shall recover of this disease.

3 But the angel of the LORD said to Elijah the Tishbite, Arise, go up to meet the messengers of the king of Samaria, and say unto them, Is it not because there is not a God in Israel, that ye go to enquire of Baal-zebub the god of Ekron?

4 Now therefore thus saith the LORD, Thou shalt not come down from that bed on which thou art gone up, but shalt surely die. And Elijah departed.

5 ¶ And when the messengers turned back unto him, he said unto them, Why are ye now turned back?

6 And they said unto him, There came a man up to meet us, and said unto us, Go, turn again unto the king that sent you, and say unto him, Thus saith the LORD, Is it not because there is not a God in Israel, that thou sendest to enquire of Baal-zebub the god of Ekron? therefore thou shalt not come down from that bed on which thou art gone up, but shalt surely die.

7 And he said unto them, What manner of man was he which came up to meet you, and told you these words?

8 And they answered him, He was an hairy man, and girt with a girdle of leather about his loins. And he said, It is Elijah the Tishbite.

9 Then the king sent unto him a captain of fifty with his fifty: and he went up to him; and, behold, he sat on the top of an hill; and he spake unto him, Thou man of God, the king hath said, Come down.

10 And Elijah answered and said to the captain of fifty, If I be a man of God, then let fire come down from heaven, and consume thee and thy fifty. And there came down fire from heaven, and consumed him and his fifty.

11 Again also he sent unto him another captain of fifty, with his fifty. And he answered and said unto him, O man of God, thus hath the king said, Come down quickly.

12 And Elijah answered and said unto them, If I be a man of God, let fire come down from heaven, and consume thee and thy fifty. And the fire of God came down from heaven, and consumed him and his fifty.

13 ¶ And he sent again a captain of the third fifty with his fifty: and the third captain of fifty went up, and came and fell on his knees before Elijah, and besought him, and said unto him, O man of God, I pray thee, let my life, and the life of these fifty thy servants, be precious in thy sight.

14 Behold, there came fire down from heaven, and burnt up the two captains of the former fifties, with their fifties; therefore let my life now be precious in thy sight.

15 And the angel of the LORD said unto Elijah, Go down with him; be not afraid of him. And he arose, and went down with him unto the king.

16 And he said unto him, Thus saith the LORD, Forasmuch as thou hast sent messengers to enquire of Baal-zebub the God of Ekron, is it not because there is no God in Israel to enquire of his word? therefore thou shalt not come down off that bed, on which thou art gone up, but shalt surely die.

17 ¶ So he died, according to the word of the LORD which Elijah had spoken: and Jehoram reigned in his stead, in the second year of Jehoram the son of Jehoshaphat king of Judah: because he had no son.

18 Now the rest of the acts of Ahaziah which he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

NOTES.

CHAP. I. V. 1. After David had subjugated the Moabites, they continued in subjection till the division of the kingdom; when their vassalage and tribute were transferred to the kings of Israel, as those of Edom remained to the kings of Judah. But after Ahab's death the Moabites revolted. (Notes, iii. 4-27. 2 Sam. viii. 12. Marg. Ref.)

V. 2. "Baal-zebub" signifies the lord of a fly, or flies. Probably, the country was grievously infested with swarms of flies, and the Ekronites fancied that their idol delivered or preserved them from these. (Note, Ex. vii. 23-35.) Beelzebub, (which is the same name,) is called in the New Testament "the prince of the devils;" and hence we learn that, under these names and images, evil spirits were actually worshipped as gods. (Note, Matt. xii. 22-24.)—The Baal generally worshipped in Israel at that time, was the god of the Zidonians; but Baal-zebub was the god of Ekron in Philistia; for they "had lords many, and gods many." It seems that his oracle was then in great repute, as that of Delphos was in Greece some ages afterwards.—Ahaziah did not send to enquire what he was to do in order to his recovery, but merely to know whether he should recover or not. Perhaps he had been making preparations for reducing the Moabites, and was impatient to march against them. (Notes, viii. 7, 8. 1 Kings xiv. 1-4.)

V. 3. When a king of Israel sent to enquire of a heathen oracle, he proclaimed to the Gentiles his want of confidence in JEHOVAH: as if the only nation, favoured with revelation, and the knowledge of the true God, had been the only nation in which no God was known! This was peculiarly dishonourable and provoking to the Lord. (Notes, v. 8. 15, 16. 1 Kings xviii. 36, 37. Ps. lxxvi. 1, 2.)

V. 4. Elijah departed. The prophet, having delivered his message, departed to his usual place of retirement, but did not conceal himself as formerly. (Note, 1 Kings xvii. 3.)

V. 8. Elijah was a hairy man, either in his person, or by reason of the coarseness and roughness of his garments, made perhaps of hair, and girded round him with a piece of undressed skin. In this manner he shewed his mortification to the world, and expressed his concern and grief for the idolatry and iniquity of his people. (Note, Matt. iii. 4.)

V. 9. This officer called Elijah a "man of God" by way of derision, not out of respect as others did.—Jezabel's name is not mentioned in this transaction; but probably she stirred up her son, as she formerly had done her husband, against the prophets of the Lord.

V. 10. No doubt Elijah was moved to call for fire from heaven on these men, by immediate revelation. He was influenced by a holy zeal for the honour of God, which was attacked in his person by the worshippers of Baalim; for if he had been actuated by resentment or selfish passions, the fire from heaven would not have come at his word. (Notes, ii. 23, 24. 2 Cor. xii. 7-10.)—He had before proved JEHOVAH to be the only true God, by fire from heaven consuming the sacrifice; (Notes, 1 Kings xviii. 32-39;) yet the nation in general, and especially the rulers, adhered to the worship of Baal: it was therefore proper, that they should be convinced by a still more awful proof; and made sensible that all the enemies of the Lord would at length be destroyed. The officers and soldiers, who were slain, not only deserved death as idolaters, but doubtless they had been the instruments of Ahab and Jezebel in persecution. and the example would have salutary effects on many in Israel. (Notes, Dan. iii. 19-23. Luke ix. 51-56. Acts xii. 18, 19.)

V. 11, 12. It is hard to say, which was on this occasion the more wonderful, the madness of the wounded and enfeebled Ahaziah, or the presumption of this officer and his soldiers: for the second attempt was made in a more peremptory and haughty manner, than the foregoing. But perhaps the former calamity was ascribed to chance. "Indeed it had so happened that terrible lightning, just at that moment, slew the captain and his fifty men: but they were by no means convinced, that JEHOVAH had sent it for that purpose, in answer to the words of Elijah." (Note, 1 Sam. vi. 2-9.)

V. 13, 14. This officer had not courage to refuse obedience to the infatuated tyrant, who ordered him on this desperate service; and yet he dared not attempt any thing against Elijah: he therefore employed humble intreaties, with every expression of respect and submission; and in this manner his life and the lives of his soldiers were preserved. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 15, 16. Elijah had so exasperated Jezabel, and her party, by putting the prophets of Baal to death; that in general he lived in retirement; and did not go to the king, except when especially commissioned, as he was on this occasion. His presence, however, and authoritative boldness in delivering the solemn message, so dismayed Ahaziah, that he did not attempt any thing against him: and shortly after he died, (17,) according to Elijah's word, for attempting to consult a heathen oracle. (Note, 1 Chr. x. 13, 14.)

V. 17. Jehoshaphat lived some time after this: it is therefore supposed that he admitted his son Jehoram to reign with him, eight or nine years before his death: and Jehoram the son of Ahab began to reign, in the second year of that term, or in the eighteenth year of Jehoshaphat. (Notes, viii. 16, 17. 1 Kings xxii. 51.)

CHAP. II.

Elijah in vain persuades Elisha to leave him, 1-7. With his mantle he divides Jordan, and they pass over, 8. Elisha allows conditionally of Elisha's request of a double measure of the Spirit, and is taken to heaven in a fiery chariot, 9-11. Elisha takes up Elijah's mantle; divides Jordan, and passes over; and is received as Elijah's successor, 12-15. The sons of the prophets in vain seek for Elijah, 16-18. Elisha heals with salt the bad waters of Jericho, 19-22. Bears destroy the children that mock him, 23-25.

AND it came to pass, when the LORD would take up Elijah into heaven by a whirlwind, that Elisha went with Elisha from Gilgal.

2 And Elijah said unto Elisha, "Tarry here, I pray thee; for the LORD hath sent me to Beth-el. And Elisha said unto him, 'As the LORD liveth, and as thy soul liveth, I will not leave thee. So they went down to Beth-el.

3 And the sons of the prophets that were at Beth-el came forth to Elisha, and said unto him, Knowest thou that the LORD will take away thy master from thy head to-day? And he said, Yea, I know it; hold ye your peace.

4 And Elijah said unto him, Elisha, tarry here, I pray thee; for the LORD hath sent me to Jericho. And he said, "As the LORD liveth, and as thy soul liveth, I will not leave thee. So they came to Jericho.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-8. Man's revolt from God is often punished by the rebellion of those who owe subjection to him.—Death meets men in the most unexpected places and forms, but always under the direction of the all-wise and righteous God. If reconciled to him by faith in the Saviour, and walking in his ways, "death is ours," and can never come in a wrong time or manner: but to the impatient and unbelieving he is and must be "the king of terrors."—False religion amuses men's minds, and gratifies a vain curiosity: but the Bible declares the way of acceptance, and the path of duty; and, without attempting to inform us of the events of our future lives, or the time and manner of our death, it teaches us to be always ready; and instructs us how to behave under every dispensation of Providence, and thus to find comfort under them all, and derive benefit from them.—With such instructions, and access to the mercy-seat of our God and Father, we have no occasion to consult any of those oracles, which pretend to unfold what God has been pleased to conceal. The believer, assured by the word of God that all things shall work together for his good, may rejoice in hope, and look forward with comfort: but the foreknowledge of the afflictions of future life, joined to the terror of final misery, would mar the little enjoyment which the unbeliever has in this world, and torment him before his time. (Gen. xv. P. O. 9-21.)—Men are prone to act, as if there were no God; as if they were left to take care of themselves, as well as to spend their lives in following their own inclinations: hence they are so readily induced to yield to every temptation, and to make rapid progress in wickedness, when in pursuit of the objects which they idolize, or when afraid of losing them.—They who would be valiant for the truth, and in the cause of God, before the great ones of this world, must learn temperance and frugality; and evince that they neither envy nor covet their luxuries and embellishments, but are indifferent about all other things, compared with the glory of God and the salvation of immortal souls.

V. 9-18. The conduct of some persons, as impartially recorded in the word of God, appears so infatuated, that we should scarcely be able to credit the account, did we not sometimes witness actions equally unaccountable. Often has it been observed, that men upon a death-bed, and aware that they could not recover, have appeared more trifling, profane, avaricious, morose, fierce, or cruel, than at any former period: so that those around them have been tempted, by their intolerable conduct, to wish them dead before the hour arrived! Some have even seemed to regret with their dying lips, that they could do no more mischief in the world before they left it! And in many other ways men are continually acting in a manner inexplicable, except upon the principles of the wise man; "The heart of the sons of men is full of evil, and madness is in their heart whilst they live, and after that they go to the dead." (Notes, Ec. ix. 1-3. Matt. ii. 16-18.)—Haughty persecutors will always meet with wretches, ready to execute their most impious and desperate mandates: and when providential mercies, means of grace, warnings and corrections, leave them thus desperate in enmity against God and his servants, we may be confident that vengeance slumbereth not. If the wicked face death in its most tremendous forms, to obtain or preserve the favour of an earthly prince, whose "breath goeth forth, and he returneth to his dust, and all his thoughts perish;" what danger and hardship ought we not to welcome in the service of the everlasting God, who can give us the gracious recompense of eternal life. (Notes, Ps. cxlvi. 3-6.)—There are proper seasons for different methods of behaving towards sinners, and we must ask wisdom of God to direct us: and, as the same action may be either right or wrong, according to the principle from which it springs, we should look well to our own spirits, and be candid in judging our brethren.

It is, however, our general rule, "not to be overcome of evil, but to overcome evil with good."—The judgments of God under the Christian dispensation are commonly spiritual: and the more mildly we behave to those, who insult and injure us for the Lord's sake, the more terrible punishment will he at length inflict upon them. But our God is ever ready to forgive the humble supplicant, however rebellious he has been; and the way to prevail with him is to bow before him. We therefore should be followers of him, and be ready to favour and pray for our bitterest enemies, especially when, under any alarm of conscience, they intreat us so to do. We may safely venture into the presence of our most enraged foes, when He requires us, who hath all hearts in his hand: the courage of faith hath often struck terror into the heart of the proudest sinner: how then shall any be able to stand before God, when he ariseth to execute judgment? His words will surely take effect: and whilst some sinners, being long spared, increase their own condemnation: others are cut off speedily, and hurried into destruction. Both are intended to warn others to seek the Lord whilst he may be found: and his servants will, one way or other, survive and witness the destruction of all his enemies.

NOTES.

CHAP. II. V. 1. None, Enoch alone excepted, had ever been favoured with exemption from the general sentence denounced against sinful man, "Dust thou art, and to dust shalt thou return." (Note, Gen. v. 22-24. P. O. 21-32.) But the Lord had given Elijah some intimations, that he intended thus to distinguish him, and that the day was at hand. (Note, 1 Kings xix. 3, 4.) At that time, he and Elisha were at Gilgal: (Marg. Ref.) and thence Elijah went in circuit to several of the schools of the prophets in different places, to give them his parting exhortations and blessing. Doubtless most of them were established, and all of them were superintended, by him. (Note, 1 Kings xix. 20, 21.)—It is not known how long Elijah lived before his translation.

V. 2. Elijah might intend by this proposal to make trial of the strength of Elisha's attachment; or perhaps he longed for retirement, and shunned ostentation. But Elisha expressed his determination to enjoy the pleasure, and reap the benefit, of his company to the last; and, if it might be, to witness his translation: and this he confirmed with a most solemn asseveration. (Notes, Ruth i. 16-18. 2 Sam. xv. 18-22.)—As the life and soul of man entirely depend on God, to mention them in a solemn oath, either alone, or along with him, was deemed equivalent to swearing by the name of the LORD. (Notes, Matt. v. 33-37. xxiii. 16-22.)

V. 3. "In that place where the golden calves were worshipped, God: continued the schools of the prophets! This was a great testimony of his love to an apostate people. And it is still more remarkable, that prophets of greater excellency for miracles were raised up in Israel, than were in Judah; because they needed them more. It seems to me very probable, that these "sons of the prophets" were such ministers to the prophets, as the evangelists were to the apostles; whom the prophets sent to publish their prophecies and instructions to the people, where they could not go themselves." (Bp. Patrick.)—"The sons of the prophets" had received a divine intimation, that Elijah was on that day to be taken from them: and as Elisha was next in precedence after Elijah, sitting nearest under him, or at his feet, while he delivered his instructions; he would be considered as their superintendant, when his master was taken "from his head," or from above him. (Note, Acts xxii. 1-5.)—Elisha would not allow them to interrupt the composure of Elijah's mind at this solemn season by any lamentations; it is probable, that he forbade them publicly to speak of it, lest multitudes should be collected to witness the event; or he counselled them to be calm, and not to disquiet themselves, for the Lord would make up the loss.

V. 6. "He hoped for some great blessing from him, when he was carried up to heaven; and therefore continued firm in his resolution, to attend that wonderful change." (Bp. Patrick.) (Note, 9, 10.)

V. 7, 8. These fifty men seem to have hoped to witness Elijah's translation, but this favour was granted only to Elisha. They, however, saw Jordan twice divided, first before Elijah and Elisha, and then afterwards before Elisha alone, by smiting the waters with Elijah's mantle. (Note, 14.)

V. 9, 10. Elisha was thus reminded to make his request before Elijah was taken from him: for the prophet did not give the least intimation of being 11 And it came to pass, as they still went on, and talked, that, behold, there appeared ^a a chariot of fire, and horses of fire, and parted them both asunder; and Elijah went up ^b by a whirlwind ^c into heaven.

12 ¶ And Elisha ^d saw it, and he cried, "My father, my father, the chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof. And ^e he saw him no more: and he took hold of his own clothes, and ^f rent them in two pieces.

13 He took up also ^g the mantle of Elijah that fell from him, and went back, and stood by the ^h bank of Jordan;

14 And he took the mantle of Elijah that fell from him, and ⁱ smote the waters, and said, ^j "Where is the LORD God of Elijah?" And when he also had smitten the waters, they parted hither and thither; and Elisha went over.

15 And when the sons of the prophets, which ^k were to view at Jericho, saw him, they said, ^l "The Spirit of Elijah doth rest on Elisha." And they came to meet him, and ^m bowed themselves to the ground before him.

16 ¶ And they said unto him, Behold now, there be with thy servants fifty ⁿ strong men, let them go, we pray thee, and seek thy master; lest peradventure ^o the Spirit of the LORD hath taken him up, and cast him upon ^p some mountain, or into some valley. And he said, Ye shall not send.

17 And when ^q they urged him till he was ashamed, ^r he said, "I will send you." And he sent them, saying, "Go, and seek him; and if ye find him, say unto him, 'The Spirit of the LORD hath taken him up, and cast him upon some mountain, or into some valley.'" prayed to, as an intercessor, after he was gone to heaven. Elisha, therefore, knowing the efficacy of Elijah's prayer, desired him to ask for him a double portion of his spirit. (Notes, Num. xi. 25—29. xxvii. 18. 1 Kings iii. 5—14.) He seems only to have meant a double portion of the spirit of prophecy, and of wisdom, courage, faith, and grace, to what was ordinarily bestowed upon the prophets: but as he was to succeed so eminent a person, in a most important work, and arduous times, his desires and expectations might be enlarged by zeal for the honour of God, and for the revival of true religion; so that he was led to use words, which may signify even double the portion which Elijah had possessed: and Elijah's answer seems to imply, that this was the import of them.—It appears from the history, that Elisha wrought twice as many miracles as Elijah had done; and being more constantly among the people, as their example and instructor, for above sixty years, from his first-calling by Elijah, he seems to have been favoured with more extensive usefulness than he; though in other respects he may be considered as his inferior. (Note, xiii. 14.) Thus our Lord said to his apostles, (referring to the extensive usefulness of their labours, compared with that of his personal ministry, and to the number, variety, and long continuance, of the miracles wrought by them,) "Greater works than these shall ye do:" yet was he infinitely greater than they. (Notes, Matt. xi. 7—11. John xiv. 7—14.)

V. 11. Elijah's translation was doubtless performed by the ministration of angels, who caused the appearances and effects here described. The event was a distinguished honour put upon one, who had been peculiarly zealous for the honour of God, and had ventured all consequences in his cause, by opposing the idolatry of an apostate and persecuting age and nation. It was a public attestation of the doctrine of a future state of retributions, for the encouragement of God's suffering people; and it was also a prefiguration of the Redeemer's ascension. (Notes, Luke xxiv. 50—53. Acts i. 9—11.)—The prophet had on one occasion passionately wished to die; but the Lord was graciously pleased to deal with him better than his wishes. He had passed over Jordan to his native country, and was conferring with Elisha, perhaps about the joys of heaven, or the interests of true religion in Israel, when they were thus suddenly interrupted and separated.

V. 12. The manner in which Elijah was taken away, amidst his most interesting discourse, must have been exceedingly affecting to Elisha, who could not but congratulate his felicity. But he had lost one whom he loved and revered as a father; and Israel had lost a reformer, whose labours and prayers did more to preserve the nation from ruin, than chariots and horsemen, however numerous, could have done: and on these accounts he grieved, and expressed his regret by rending his clothes. Nor was he reconciled to his own and the public loss, by being the president of all the schools of the prophets, or by being assured of a double portion of Elijah's spirit.

V. 13. The prophet went to heaven in the body; yet, as a token of the different state into which he was entered, and the change which had taken place, he dropped his mantle or upper garment. Elisha had been first called to attend Elijah, by the casting of his mantle over him; and he now received and valued this mantle, as a token of his receiving a double portion of his spirit. (Notes, 9, 10. 1 Kings xix. 19.)

V. 14. Elisha was inwardly moved to make trial, whether Elijah's words were indeed fulfilled to him; and whether the LORD God, who had wrought such miracles by Elijah, and had just before divided the waters of Jericho, when he smote them with his mantle, was with him in like manner. The he said, Send. They sent therefore fifty men; and they sought three days, but found him not.

18 And when they came again to him, (for he tarried at Jericho,) he said unto them, Did I not say unto you, Go not?

original is more expressive than the translation, and may be rendered, "Where is JEHOVAH, the God of Elijah, even He?" He is still with me: though Elijah has not here, the God of Elijah is. (Notes, Josh. iii. 7. Matt. xxviii. 19, 20.)

V. 15. These "sons of the prophets" had probably witnessed the division of Jordan, both by Elijah, and afterwards by Elisha; (Note, 7, 8;) thence they concluded, that the spirit of Elijah rested on Elisha; and by bowing to the ground before him, they gave him honour as their superintendent from that time.

V. 16—18. These sons of the prophets might think, that even in case Elijah was finally taken from them, his soul alone was gone to heaven; and that his body might be found, and buried with due honour: but perhaps they also doubted, whether he was really removed; or had only been carried to some other place in a supernatural manner, as he seems to have been on former occasions. (Marg. Ref.) Elisha, however, might fear lest they should suspect, if he persisted in refusing their request, that he was influenced by an undue desire of filling Elijah's honourable place; and the event tended to establish his authority.

V. 19—22. Jericho had not long before been rebuilt, in defiance of the curse which Joshua had denounced against him who ventured to rebuild it; and it is probable, that the pleasantness of the situation had been the inducement. (Note, 1 Kings xvi. 34.) But, as an evidence of God's displeasure, the water was unwholesome; and, perhaps in consequence, the ground, (though not otherwise deficient in fertility,) had the property of causing the cattle to cast their young; and as some think, the immature fruit to fall from the trees. It is not unlikely, that similar effects were produced on the women also. (Margin.) But, as the inhabitants had admitted a seminary of prophets among them, these tokens of the Divine displeasure were miraculously removed.—The new cruse, and the salt, could have no natural efficacy to heal the water, and remove the bad property of the land, but might have been thought likely to produce contrary effects: they were, however, mere signs of JEHOVAH's operation. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ez. xlvii. 11. Matt. v. 13.)

V. 23, 24. Several learned men have endeavoured to prove, that these offenders were not children, but grown-up persons: and, no doubt, the word rendered children, is often used in that sense. The addition, however, of the word rendered little, seems clearly to evince, that they were not men, but young boys, who had been trained up in idolatry, and taught to despise the prophets of the Lord. They had heard that Elijah was "gone up" to heaven, and they insultingly bade Elisha follow him, that they might be rid of him also; and they reviled him for the baldness of his head. Thus they united the crimes of abusing him for a supposed bodily infirmity, contemptuous behaviour towards a venerable person, and enmity against him as the prophet of God. The sin therefore even of these children was very heinous; yet the greater guilt was chargeable on their parents; and their fate was a severe rebuke and awful warning to them. If the Spirit of God had not dictated Elisha's solemn curse of them, Providence would not have followed it with so terrible a judgment. (Notes, i. 10. Prov. xxvi. 2.) The children of the city in general seem to have been present; and the insult was perhaps the effect of a pre-concerted plan, to drive the sons of the prophets from Beth-el by ill-treatment. The forty-two children, which were devoured, might be only a small part of the whole company, and perhaps they were the most guilty. However, the Judge of all the earth surely did right. Had he cut them off by a fever, no one would have objected to it: but, while the dispensation would have been as severe towards them, it would not have been suited in any adequate measure to make the same useful impression on the minds of the survivors, or to inculcate the same important instructions to other ages and nations, as this solemn sentence and immediate execution were. (Notes, Num. xxxi. 2. Josh. vi. 21.)—It seems that the inhabitants of Beth-el were so overawed, that they no more ventured to molest Elisha or the sons of the prophets.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-10. The Lord always acts with perfect wisdom, justice, goodness, and truth; but he doth not always deign to explain to us the reasons of his conduct. In exempting sinners from merited condemnation, and in conferring unmerited blessings, he “divideth to every man severally as he will.” (Note, Acts x. 34, 35.) We are assured, that they who repent and believe the gospel, shall be saved; that the Lord will honour those who honour him: and if we obtain eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord, we need not greatly regret, that we do not pass the same way to it, which Enoch and Elijah did; being comfortably assured, that we shall be more than conquerors in the last conflict, through him who hath loved us, and that at last “death will be swallowed up in victory.” (Gen. v. P. O. 21-32.)—As we know not the time of our departure, we should endeavour to be habitually ready: and we ought to mind our proper work with greater assiduity, if able, when we perceive that the time approaches. Whether ministers or private Christians, we are called to “serve our generation;” and should aim to leave all around us deeply convinced of the nearness and reality of eternal things, and animated with the desire of glorifying God and doing good: and our example, exhortations, and prayers should especially be directed to these important objects, when we approach the solemn closing scene. (Note, 2 Pet. i. 12-15.) On the other hand, we should gladly embrace opportunities of visiting the death-beds of eminent believers, that we may learn heavenly wisdom, and catch holy fire, as it were, from their converse and behaviour. But such occasions require seriousness, calmness, and submission to the will of God; and we should learn even to repress our own feelings, rather than distract the minds, or interrupt the devotions and discourse, of the departing Christian. As long as such persons are with us, we should beg an interest in their prayers; that, by “the supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ,” we may be enabled to tread in their steps, and to be serviceable to the church as they have been. And, if from zeal for the glory of God, and love to the souls of men, we should covet earnestly to abound still more in grace, wisdom, and usefulness: neither God, nor his dying saints, will blame the largeness of our desires. Nor is this hard in itself, however it may appear to us; for that fulness, whence prophets and apostles derived all their endowments, still remains, and we are invited to ask large supplies from it: (Note, John i. 16:) and they, who are called to succeed eminent men in arduous and important stations, and are conscious of their own insufficiency, are peculiarly encouraged to expect a double portion of the Spirit of God, that they may not disgrace, or remain useless in, their situations.

V. 11-18. Angels delight to be employed in removing the saints to their glorious rest, in any way that the Lord pleases: yet the event, which is so joyful to them, causes painful separations to those who are left behind: many on these occasions are bereft of such as have been more dear and useful to them than the tenderest parent: yea, even the public has been deprived of some of its strongest bulwarks, though most men are insensible to the loss. (Note, Is. lvii. 1, 2.) On these accounts it is allowable to grieve: but believers should be warned “not to sorrow as men without hope;” the separation will at length issue in a more joyful meeting, and the loss shall be made up to them. Though Elijah be removed, “the Lord God of Elijah” liveth. Thus, when the Saviour ascended into heaven, he left not his disciples comfortless; but he bequeathed to them his precious gospel, like Elijah’s mantle, as the token of the Divine power being exerted to subvert the empire of Satan, and to set up the kingdom of God in the world: and he poured out upon them his Holy Spirit, both to qualify them for their work, and to render their labours abundantly successful. The same gospel still remains with us, and, though the miraculous powers are withdrawn, it still is attended with a divine energy for the conversion and salvation of sinners. Oh, may that power be more abundantly experienced, wherever the word of God is truly preached! And may we all seriously enquire, whether it be not suspended, retarded, or removed, through some criminal cause in us!—Having, however, the same exceeding great and precious promises as the primitive Christians, the same throne of grace, the same Mediator, the same powerful God and Father, as they had; if we have also the same precious faith, we need not fear breaking through all difficulties, opposing enemies, and as last passing comfortably through the Jordan of death, as on dry ground.—When we perceive men averse to conviction, and bent upon their own schemes, though vain and empty; it is sometimes best to leave them to take their own course: and their fruitless labours and enquiries often, most effectually, discover to them their mistakes.

V. 19-25. The nature of man, in its best estate, and adorned with all the embellishments of which it is capable, resembles the unwholesome water and soil of Jericho. It is throughout infected with sin, and barren of real good; and man’s best actions, till renewed by grace, proceed from worthless motives, are directed to unworthy purposes, and measured by a false rule. But when that remedy is applied, a blessed change takes place through all the powers of the soul: and repentance, faith, and love of God and man, produce good works, performed from the purest principles, and for the most important ends; and regulated according to the holy law of God, and the example of the Redeemer. In this way sometimes whole towns and cities have assumed a new appearance, through the preaching of the gospel; and the curse of sin and ungodliness has been converted into the blessing of “fruitfulness in the works of righteousness, which are through Jesus Christ to the praise and glory of God:” and when this blessing is vouchsafed to seminaries of learning, and places of public education; the fertilizing streams may flow through whole countries, and produce the most happy change. (Notes, Ez. xlvii. 1-11.)—Whilst the Divine blessing evidently rests on those places where his gospel is welcomed; his heaviest wrath will light on those who reject the gracious message, and insult and abuse his ministers. The words and actions even of children, yea, of little children, are noticed by him. Let then the youngest who read or hear these observations, “stand in awe, and sin not:” let them think of the terror and anguish of the children of Beth-el, when they are tempted to deride the deformed, the lame, or the infirm; when they are induced to shew contempt to the aged; but especially when they are about to join those who revile or ridicule such as are in reputation for sanctity: for this is to despise the holiness of God in them. And if any have the misfortune to have parents so wicked, as to set them an example of such profaneness, or to instruct or encourage them to behave in such a manner; let them remember that they should “obey God rather than man,” and that they must answer to him for their offence, whoever commands them to commit it. But words cannot express what strikes the imagination on this awful subject. We can scarcely conceive the horror which seized the parents of Beth-el, on the view of the mangled bodies of their children, whom they had taught that impiety which brought the dreadful judgment upon them. What then will be the anguish at the great decisive day, of those parents, who witness the everlasting condemnation of their offspring, occasioned by their negligence and wickedness! Let us turn from the dreadful meditation, and take warning to train up our families, with increasing earnestness, “in the nurture and admonition of the Lord;” hoping and praying that we shall be enabled, at that important season, to appear before God, and to adopt the language of the prophet, “Behold, I and the children that thou hast given me.”—Indeed the ministers of Christ must and will continue to bless, and not curse: but the Lord is still glorious in holiness, and all creatures serve him; and whilst he protects his people, even among their enraged foes, he can soon call for instruments of his vengeance on those, whom he sees to be ripe for destruction.

NOTES.

CHAP. III. V. 1. (Note, i. 17.)

V. 2, 3. Jehoram threw aside, but did not destroy, the image of Baal: and, if he suppressed the worship of Baal for a time, in order to please Jehoshaphat, and secure his alliance, or through terror at the awful end of his father and brother, it was soon allowed to revive. (Notes, x. 18-31. 1 Kings xvi. 30-33.) But he was not so eager on that idolatry, or so vehement a persecutor of God’s worshipper, as his predecessors; preferring the more politic measures of Jeroboam. (Note, 1 Kings xii. 26-29.) Yet, it seems, Jezebel retained her influence, and promoted her favourite idolatry; though for reasons of state, or being daunted by various calamities, she acquiesced in her son’s measures at the beginning of his reign.

V. 4-6. (Notes, i. 1, 2. Marg. Ref.) Rams, (4,) Or, wethers.

V. 7. Jehoshaphat used exactly the same words in this answer to Jehoram, as he had done to his father Ahab. But the ill success of Ahab’s expedition, his own extreme danger, and the sharp reproof given him by the prophet, should have taught him a different conduct. (Notes, 1 Kings xxii. 4. 30. 32-35. 2 Chr. xix. 2, 3.)—As Jehoram had put away the image of Baal, Jehoshaphat

9 So the king of Israel went, and the king of Judah, and the king of Edom; and they fetched a compass of seven days' journey; and there was no water for the host, and for the cattle that followed them.

10 And the king of Israel said, Alas! that the Lord hath called these three kings together, to deliver them into the hand of Moab!

11 But Jehoshaphat said, Is there not here a prophet of the Lord, that we may enquire of the Lord by him? And one of the king of Israel's servants answered and said, Here is Elisha the son of Shaphat, which poured water on the hands of Elijah.

12 And Jehoshaphat said, The word of the Lord is with him. So the king of Israel and Jehoshaphat and the king of Edom went down to him.

13 And Elisha said unto the king of Israel, What have I to do with thee? get thee to the prophets of thy father, and to the prophets of thy mother. And the king of Israel said unto him, Nay: for the Lord hath called these three kings together, to deliver them into the hand of Moab.

14 And Elisha said, As the Lord of hosts liveth, before whom I stand, surely, were it not that I regard the presence of Jehoshaphat the king of Judah, I would not look toward thee, nor see thee.

15 But now bring me a minstrel. And it came to pass, when the minstrel played, that the hand of the Lord came upon him.

16 And he said, Thus saith the Lord, Make this valley full of ditches:

17 For thus saith the Lord, Ye shall not see wind, neither shall ye see rain; yet that valley shall be filled.

18 And it came to pass, when they were gathered off, and these, lying in heaps upon the corners of the fields, would speedily be dispersed by a numerous army, and occasion great hindrance and difficulty in the future cultivation of the country.

19. The time of the morning sacrifice at Jerusalem was chosen by the Lord for this miracle, to intimate to the whole company, that their deliverance was vouchsafed them, through the sacrifices and the worship there performed. (Marg. Ref.) It may here very properly be noted, that neither Elijah, nor Elisha, seem ever to have resorted to the worship at the temple, or to have required the people, under the government of the kings of Israel, to do so; though that worship was appointed by God, and it is evident that his spiritual worshippers had respect to it. The peculiar circumstances of Israel were such, that without uninterrupted miracles, or subverting the foundation of the civil establishment, the people could not exactly observe the ritual law. The prophets were therefore directed, by God himself, to accommodate their conduct to these circumstances and to spend their lives in recovering, or preserving, the people from idolatry, and in teaching them the grand essentials of acceptable religion.—In every age hitherto, considerate and faithful ministers have found it impracticable, for them to rectify every external deviation from what to them appeared most scriptural: but, having adverted to the distinction betwixt what is desirable and what is attainable; and betwixt the essentials of true religion in every age, and matters more circumstantial; they have accommodated themselves to that state of things which they could not alter; and endeavoured to bring men to repentance, faith in Christ, and holiness of life, and to as scriptural an external worship as they could. And, though some of their brethren have censured them, the Lord God of Elijah and Elisha has evidently pleaded their cause, by making them the instruments of numerous conversions, and great revivals of religion: whilst others, scrupulously exact in external forms, and earnest to magnify them, have worn out their lives in vainly attempting to new-model the church and the world, and have missed their opportunity of more essential usefulness. (Notes, iv. 23. 1 Sam. vii. 9. 17. 1 Kings xviii. 4. 36. 37.) In due time the Lord will regulate every thing externally, as well as internally, in the best manner: in the mean while we must make the best of things: we must aim to be satisfied respecting our own conduct as in the sight of God; to be moderate in our judgment concerning those who differ from us, and patient under their censures of us! and, learning what that meaneth, "I will have mercy and not sacrifice," to be careful not to lose sight of the great end of all religion, for the sake of some of the disputable means of attaining it. For at last, nothing "availeth in Christ Jesus, but faith which worketh by love," and "a new creature" manifested in "newness of life," (Notes, Gal. v. 1-6. vi. 11-16.)

perhaps was in hopes of effecting a more complete reformation in Israel, by his compliance: but he thus almost entirely ruined his own family. (Note, 1 Kings xxii. 41-46.)

V. 8, 9. This way was far about, and through a part of the desert in which Israel had wanted water, when they came out of Egypt; and the same difficulty might reasonably have been expected. (Notes, Num. xx. 2-5. 17-21. xvi. 16-11.) Jehoshaphat seems to have intended to prevent the revolt, and secure the assistance, of the deputy-king of Edom, and to attack the Moabites by surprise: (Note, 1 Kings xxii. 47.) but he neglected to enquire of the Lord, for which he was speedily rebuked. It is probable, that the army either missed the direct road, or was hindered in its march by unforeseen impediments.

V. 10. Jehoram had planned this expedition, without any divine direction, for his own interest, and had drawn the other two kings into it. Had they succeeded, he would not have given God the glory; yet when calamities came upon him, through his own inadvertency, "his heart fretted against the Lord:" but he expressed neither repentance, nor faith, nor submission to the will of God. (Notes, vi. 24-32. Prov. xix. 3.)

V. 11, 12. Doubtless the prophet was divinely directed to follow the camp, on this occasion. The servant of Jehoram was better acquainted with Elisha, then his master was; and he was known, as having been the servant of Elijah, to assist him in washing his hands, and other menial offices; yet, as appointed to be his successor. (Note, 1 Kings xii. 20, 21.) Jehoshaphat was now made sensible of his fault in neglecting to enquire of the Lord: and the three kings concurred in shewing respect to Elisha; not ordering his attendance, but waiting on him. (Notes, v. 8-12. Ex. xi. 8. Is. lx. 10-14. Rev. iii. 8, 9.)

V. 13, 14. It is probable, that Elisha meant to shew Jehoshaphat the partiality and hypocrisy of Jehoram's reformation; as his heart still went after the prophets and worship of Baal; and he had no real regard for the prophets of God, though he consulted him in his distress. He would not therefore shew him any honour, that he might understand how the Lord detested his iniquity: but he treated Jehoshaphat with respect, though he also was faulty. (Notes, Judg. x. 13-18. Ez. xiv. 1-5. xx. 39.)—Doubtless he was directed to act in this public character: differently from what he would have done as a private subject of Jehoram's kingdom.

V. 15. The "minstrel" was one skilful in playing on a harp, or some other musical instrument: and it is probable, that he sang the praises of God, accompanied with soft and sweet music.—This intended to calm the prophet's mind, which had been discomposed with a holy indignation, by recollecting the abominations of Ahab's family; and so to prepare him for those illapses of the Holy Spirit, which he assuredly expected. (Notes, 1 Sam. x. 5, 6. xvi. 16-23.)

V. 16, 17. With this prophetic promise, a commandment was given which required considerable labour, and was a trial of the faith and obedience of the persons concerned. It is needless to enquire whence this water came: He, that caused the rock to pour forth rivers, could never want resources. (Note, Ex. xvii. 5, 6.) The supply, however, was evidently considered as miraculous; and those, who have insinuated the contrary, must suppose that the prophet, with water, that ye may drink, both ye, and your cattle, and your beasts.

18 And this is but a light thing in the sight of the Lord: he will deliver the Moabites also into your hand.

19 And ye shall smite every fenced city, and every choice city, and shall fell every good tree, and stop all wells of water, and mar every good piece of land with stones.

20 And it came to pass in the morning, when the meat-offering was offered, that, behold, there came water by the way of Edom; and the country was filled with water.

21 ¶ And when all the Moabites heard that the kings were come up to fight against them, they gathered all that were able to put on armour, and upward, and stood in the border.

22 And they rose up early in the morning, and the sun shone upon the water, and the Moabites saw the water on the other side, as red as blood:

23 And they said, This is blood: the kings are surely slain, and they have smitten one another; now therefore Moab to the spoil.

24 And when they came to the camp of Israel, the Israelites rose up and smote the Moabites, so that they fled before them: but they went forward smiting the Moabites, even in their country.

25 And they beat down the cities, and on every good piece of land cast every man his stone, and filled it; and they stopped all the wells of water, and felled all the good trees: only in Kir-harezeth left they the stones thereof; howbeit the slingers went about it, and smote it.

whom they attempt to disparage, had more sagacity in matters of this kind, than these three kings, with all their officers and counsellors.

V. 18, 19. (Marg. Ref.) Providence put it in Jehoram's power to execute that severe vengeance upon the revolted Moabites, which he meditated. But it is not certain, whether this implied a permission to do so, or was merely prophetic of the event. (Deut. xx. 19, 20.)—It is probable, that the land could not be cultivated, till the stones were gathered off: and these, lying in heaps upon the corners of the fields, would speedily be dispersed by a numerous army, and occasion great hindrance and difficulty in the future cultivation of the country.

V. 20. The time of the morning sacrifice at Jerusalem was chosen by the Lord for this miracle, to intimate to the whole company, that their deliverance was vouchsafed them, through the sacrifices and the worship there performed. 26 ¶ And when the king of Moab saw that the battle was too sore for him, he took with him seven hundred men that drew swords, to break through even unto the king of Edom: but they could not.

27 Then he took his eldest son, that should have reigned in his stead, and offered him for a burnt-offering upon the wall. And there was great indignation against Israel: and they departed from him, and returned to their own land.

CHAP. IV.

At Elisha's word the oil of a poor prophet's widow is increased, to enable her to pay her debt, 1-7. He is hospitably entertained by a woman of Shunem, who is rewarded by having a son in her old age, 8-17. The child dies, but is restored to life in answer to Elisha's prayer, 18-37. Elisha heals the pottage made with poisonous herbs, 38-41: and feeds a hundred men with twenty barley loaves, 42-44.

NOW there cried a certain woman of the wives of the sons of the prophets unto Elisha, saying, Thy servant my husband is dead; and thou knowest

V. 22, 23. The sun shining upon the water, in ditches, probably in a red soil, had the appearance of blood; and deceived the Moabites, who knew it to be a dry valley: and as combined armies have often quarrelled, and destroyed each other, they hastily concluded this to be the case; God permitting them to be thus infatuated for their destruction. (Note, Judg. vii. 16-22. 2 Chr. xx. 22-25.)

V. 26. The camp of the viceroy of Edom seems not to have been so well fortified, as the camps of the other kings: and therefore the king of Moab, in his extreme danger, thought to have forced his way through in this direction; but he was not able.

V. 27. It has been supposed, that the king of Moab offered in sacrifice the eldest son of the king of Edom, whom he had taken prisoner: but the narrative does not admit of this interpretation. It is evident, that he sacrificed his own eldest son, and the heir-apparent of his crown, to procure the assistance of his idols, or to avert their indignation. It has been thought, that a tradition of Abraham's offering his son Isaac, nay, that even a distorted tradition concerning the sacrifice of the Redeemer, gave occasion to those horrid human sacrifices, which have been, and still are, very common in the gentile world. But this at most could only be the occasion: the cause was two-fold; the depravity and blindness of the human heart, and the subtlety and malignity of Satan; in whose worship, as directed by him, it must be a first principle, that the more costly, painful, unnatural, and cruel the oblation is, the more acceptable the sacrifice; because it best gratifies his pride, envy, and malice. (Notes, Lev. xx. 2-5, Mic. vi. 6-8.)—This horrid sacrifice the king of Moab offered in the sight of the combined armies, that they might see his desperate determination to endure and inflict all extremities, rather than be reduced: his remaining forces were thus fired with indignation against Israel; and perhaps Jehoshaphat, and the king of Edom, expressed their disapprobation of those severities which occasioned the dreadful deed. Thus the minds of the assailants being filled with horror, and their measures disconcerted, they retired without completing their design.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-12. Partial reformations often originate from the hope of advantage in temporal things, by the favour of godly men: and even the selfish will sometimes renounce those sins, which occasion them loss and trouble; and then detect their own hypocrisy by adhering to those, which promise present advantage. True piety, however, disposes men to judge favourably, and this candour is apt to carry them too far; while they indulge the hope of drawing half-converts further into the ways of God, by complying with their inclinations, and cultivating their acquaintance. We should indeed endeavour, by kindness, both to win upon the affections of our neighbours, and to evince the tendency of our religion: yet our conduct in all things should be regulated by the word of God; and it is there declared that "evil communications corrupt good manners; and we are commanded "to come out, and be separate" from the ungodly.—Worldly men are quick-sighted to their temporal interests, but they seek nothing further; and often seduce pious persons to forget their own principles, and to "lean to their own understandings," instead of "acknowledging the Lord in all their ways." But whilst the wicked in their difficulties are ready to quarrel with the Lord; the believer will be humbled before him for neglect of duties, and disposed to enquire his will and seek his help. And when corrections have brought men to this temper, relief will be afforded them; and their ungodly connexions will often succeed the better on their account.—They, who would be eminent in the church of the living God, must readily stoop to the meanest service and the hardest labour; for such as have thus distinguished themselves, have generally attained to singular honour and usefulness.

V. 13-27. Many shew respect unto the ministers of God under heavy trials, who despise them at other times. In that case, they might be justly left to seek help from the worldly idols, the vicious companions, the worthless forms, or infidel principles, which they have preferred to the favour and truth of God: and they should be shewn, that with him "there is no respect of persons." The minister may also properly let them know, that he is no stranger to their characters, and will pay no court to them, whatever he would do or suffer for their good: and he, who in private life, is the allowed inferior, and willing to be the servant of all, when speaking in the name of the Lord, is commissioned to that thy servant did fear the LORD: and the creditor is come to take unto him my two sons to be bondmen.

2 And Elisha said unto her, "What shall I do for thee? tell me: what hast thou in the house? And she said, Thine handmaid hath not any thing in the house save a pot of oil.

3 Then he said, Go, borrow thee vessels abroad of all thy neighbours, even empty vessels; *borrow not a few.

4 And when thou art come in, thou shalt shut the door upon thee and upon thy sons, and shalt pour out into all those vessels, and thou shalt set aside that which is full.

5 So she went from him, and shut the door upon her and upon her sons, who brought the vessels to her, and she poured out.

6 And it came to pass when the vessels were full,

"rebuke with all authority." In all ordinary cases, however, it should be with evicted affection and respect; and it is proper so to change the voice, and regulate the conduct, as decisively to mark the difference betwixt the offending believer and the mere hypocrite.—Composure of mind favours the reception of heavenly communications: when the wickedness and misery of man have ruffled us, meditation on the glorious perfections and wonderful works of God is suited to restore the calm: and it is well, when the sweet, but much perverted, arts of poetry and music, are used with such caution and propriety, as to favour communion with him.—The Lord will take occasion, from the distresses of his offending servants, to manifest the glory of his power, truth, and love: and whilst all good gifts are from him alone, we must shew our believing expectation, and prepare for their reception, by observing the directions of his word.—It is a light thing for him to preserve his people from becoming a prey to their enemies: he will make them more than conquerors over them all. Our rule is to do good and not evil to our adversaries: but we shall hereafter behold and rejoice in the destruction of all the enemies of God. And they, who are expressly commissioned by him, (as the Israelites of old, and magistrates at present), to execute his vengeance upon the wicked, are authorized in those severities, which in others would be extremely criminal. The Lord will put honour upon his own institutions: and sinners left to themselves are speedily infatuated; for if men could not believe what they wish to be true, without proof, and in defiance of demonstration, "the fool" would not "say in his heart, there is no God."—When sinners are promising themselves peace and safety, sudden and inevitable destruction will come upon them, desperation will succeed their mad presumption; and in Satan's service, and at his suggestion, such horrid deeds have been perpetrated, as cause even the natural feelings of humanity to recoil. We should, however, be careful not to urge the worst of men to extremities, lest we should occasion blasphemies, murder, or suicide: we ought rather to recede from our right, and leave them to the judgment of God.

NOTES.

CHAP. IV. V. 1. The prophets were ministers by selection, and not by entail, as the priests were; yet they seem in general to have married and brought up families: though Elijah and Elisha are supposed to have continued in a single state.—Except the prophets had private fortunes, their incomes must have been very precarious: and would arise either from the donations of pious persons, or from their own manual labour. The people perhaps sometimes gave them the first-fruits, and some other of the oblations, which would have belonged to the priests and Levites, if they had not departed from among them. (Note, 2 Chr. xi. 13-17.) Many of them, however, seem to have been very scantily provided for: and this servant of God, who was of approved piety, not only left his family destitute, but involved in debt. Yet the creditor paid no more regard to the distress of the widow, than to the character of the deceased; nay, perhaps he was the more severe in his demands, because of the attachment of the debtor to the worship of JEHOVAH, and his zeal against idolatry. As therefore the widow had no effects with which to discharge the debt, he proceeded to sell her sons for slaves, in order to pay himself. (Marg. Ref.)—Elisha had no wealth from which to assist the widow; yet it was proper, for the honour of religion, that the creditor should be satisfied: and the Lord directed him to a method of effectually answering this demand, and of supplying her future necessities. (Notes, Ex. xxi. 2. Neh. v. 1-13. Matt. xviii. 23-27.)

V. 2. The woman had parted with every thing of value, to satisfy other demands, or to supply her urgent necessities. Probably, this oil was a present from some friend of her deceased husband, out of the produce of his olive-yard, but it was utterly insufficient to satisfy the creditor.

V. 4. Shut, &c. This direction was given, in order that she might avoid interruption and ostentation; and that in retirement, she with her sons might the more leisurely consider and adore the goodness of the Lord. (Notes, Matt. vi. 6.)

V. 6. The woman was ordered "to borrow empty vessels not a few;" and, as her neighbours were willing to lend her, we may conclude, that she borrowed as many as she thought could be wanted: yet the oil stayed not, till all the vessels were filled. Had her expectations been larger, the supply would have been more abundant. (Notes, xiii. 15-19.)

that she said unto her son, Bring me yet a vessel. And he said unto her, There is not a vessel more. And the oil stayed.

7 Then she came, and told the man of God : and he said, Go, sell the oil, and pay thy debt, and live thou and thy children of the rest.

8 ¶ And it fell on a day, that Elisha passed to Shunem, where was a great woman : and she constrained him to eat bread. And so it was, that, as oft as he passed by, he turned in thither to eat bread.

9 And she said unto her husband, Behold now, I perceive that this is an holy man of God, which passeth by us continually.

10 Let us make a little chamber, I pray thee, on the wall ; and let us set for him there a bed, and a table, and a stool, and a candlestick : and it shall be, when he cometh to us, that he shall turn in thither.

11 And it fell on a day, that he came thither, and he turned into the chamber, and lay there.

12 And he said to Gehazi his servant, Call this Shunammite. And when he had called her, she stood before him.

13 And he said unto him, Say now unto her, Behold, thou hast been careful for us with all this care ; what is to be done for thee ? wouldest thou be spoken for to the king, or to the captain of the host ? And she answered, I dwell among mine own people.

14 And he said, What then is to be done for her ? And Gehazi answered, Verily she hath no child, and her husband is old.

15 And he said, Call her. And when he had called her, she stood in the door.

16 And he said, About this season, according to the time of life, thou shalt embrace a son. And she said, Nay, my lord, thou man of God ; do not lie unto thine handmaid.

17 And the woman conceived, and bare a son at that season that Elisha had said unto her, according to the time of life.

V. 7. The woman would not make use of the miraculous supply, till she had received the prophet's direction : and by his orders, she first discharged her whole debt, and then used the remainder for the subsistence of herself and her children. (Marg. Ref. Note, Rom. xiii. 8—10.)

V. 8—10. Elisha seems to have generally resided at or near mount Carmel : but he went his circuits through the land, to visit the seminaries of the prophets, and to instruct the people, which probably was his stated employment, when not sent on some special service. (Notes, ii. 1. 1 Kings xix. 20—22.) At Shunem there lived a woman of wealth and piety, who invited him to come to her house, and with some difficulty prevailed on him. But when he became acquainted with her character, he never failed to call upon her when he journeyed that way. Her husband seems to have been a pious person, but not so zealous or active as she was : and, as he confided his domestic affairs to her care, she is chiefly noticed. By his approbation she prepared for the prophet a retired lodging ; perhaps perceiving, that the hurry of a large family did not suit his contemplative mind.—The plain simple manner in which the prophet's chamber was furnished, (though he was the patriarch, if I may so speak, of the whole church of Israel,) is worthy of our notice. There was nothing provided for ornament or indulgence, but merely for necessity, for study, and for devotion.

V. 13. Elisha had no doubt acquired considerable influence with Jehoram, or his captains, by the singular deliverance and victory obtained through him : (Notes, iii. 4—27 :) and, though he would ask nothing for himself, he was willing to shew his gratitude in behalf of his kind hostess, by interposing in her behalf, if she had any petition to present.—Perhaps Jehoram's soldiers, or tax-gatherers, might be oppressive or troublesome in the neighbourhood ; and he thought she might desire to seek redress of this, or some other grievance. (Notes, viii. 3—6.) Or perhaps he made the proposal, with an intention of manifesting her indifference to temporal interests. Accordingly she answered, that, living safe and contented among her friends and relatives, and those who behaved kindly to her, she had no request to make.—Having said this, she seems to have withdrawn, and Elisha talked the business over with Gehazi.

V. 14—17. Gehazi, as having more leisure to observe the affairs of the family than Elisha had, discovered what favour would be most acceptable ; and he seems not to have doubted the prevalence of his master's prayers in this respect. In addressing his benefactress, Elisha used words, which, some think, implied not only the time, but the very day, on which she should embrace a son. (Gen. xvii. 21. xviii. 14. Marg. Ref.)—Her answer reminded him of his 18 ¶ And when the child was grown, it fell on a day that he went out to his father to the reapers.

19 And he said unto his father, My head, my head. And he said to a lad, Carry him to his mother.

20 And when he had taken him, and brought him to his mother, he sat on her knees till noon, and then died.

21 And she went up, and laid him on the bed of the man of God, and shut the door upon him, and went out.

22 And she called unto her husband, and said, Send me, I pray thee, one of the young men, and one of the asses, that I may run to the man of God, and come again.

23 And he said, Wherefore wilt thou go to him to-day ? it is neither new-moon nor sabbath. And she said, It shall be well.

24 Then she saddled an ass, and said to her servant, Drive, and go forward ; slack not thy riding for me, except I bid thee.

25 So she went and came unto the man of God to mount Carmel. And it came to pass, when the man of God saw her afar off, that he said to Gehazi his servant, Behold, yonder is that Shunammite :

26 Run now, I pray thee, to meet her ; and say unto her, Is it well with thee ? is it well with thy husband ? is it well with the child ? And she answered, It is well.

27 And when she came to the man of God to the hill, she caught him by the feet : but Gehazi came near to thrust her away. And the man of God said, Let her alone ; for her soul is vexed within her : and the Lord hath hid it from me, and hath not told me.

28 Then she said, Did I desire a son of my lord ? did I not say, Do not deceive me ?

29 Then he said to Gehazi, Gird up thy loins, and take my staff in thine hand, and go thy way : if thou meet any man, salute him not ; and if any salute thee character, and intimated that she could not suppose he would mock her with delusive expectations : especially as she had expressed no impatience under her trial, and had not so much as mentioned a desire of having children. (28. Notes, Gen. xxx. 1, 2. 1 Sam. i. 7, 8.)

V. 21. On the bed, &c. This implied, that the woman had some expectation of her son's being restored to her ; as he had at first been given her in so extraordinary a manner ; (Notes, 1 Kings xvii. 17—24. Heb. xi. 17, 18 ;) yet, this hope was not sufficient to exclude her anguish of spirit, under this unexpected and sudden affliction.

V. 23. It appears, that on the sabbaths, new-moons, and other solemnities, the people were accustomed to assemble in appointed places, to worship God, and to receive instruction from the prophets ; and it was thought allowable to use the cattle, on the sabbath-day, to go to the prophet, or to these places, if at a distance. (Note, Ex. xx. 8—11.)—It is not certain whether they assembled in synagogues, or private houses ; but probably it was done in most parts of the land of Israel.—In Judah, pious people had the advantage of the temple-worship, and the instructions of the priests and Levites ; they were generally countenanced and protected by their kings ; and they thankfully availed themselves of these advantages. But in Israel, the ruling powers were against them : yet they served God according to their consciences, as their circumstances would admit. (Note, iii. 20.)—The afflicted mother would not needlessly distress her husband, by informing him of the death of the child ; but merely said it would be well for her to go : and he had that confidence in her, that he required no further explanation.

V. 26. It is well. Some suppose that the woman only meant to put off Gehazi with this answer, as in part true, in respect of herself and her husband, though not the whole of the case : but it is probable that it was the language of her faith ; as she was persuaded, that the affliction was in mercy, and would terminate well, though her passions conflicted against her better judgment. (Note, Lev. x. 3. Marg. Ref.)

V. 27. (Marg. Ref.) It is plain from this verse, that the prophets derived all their knowledge from immediate communication ; and not from any power of discerning, habitually inherent in them.

V. 28. Doubtless the acute feelings of the Shunammite mingled some impatience in these expostulations : yet she meant them as arguments, to prevail with the prophet to come to her relief ; being satisfied of the prevalence of his prayers. For, as she had not impatiently desired children, she could not answer him not again: and 'lay my staff upon the face of the child.

30 And the mother of the child said, "As the LORD liveth, and as thy soul liveth, ^bI will not leave thee. And he arose, and followed her.

31 And Gehazi passed on before them, and laid the staff upon the face of the child; but there was neither voice nor ^bhearing; wherefore he went again to meet him, and told him, saying, The child is ^cnot awaked.

32 And when Elisha was come into the house, behold, ^dthe child was dead, and laid upon his bed.

33 He went in therefore, and ^eshut the door upon them twain, and ^fprayed unto the LORD.

34 And he went up, and ^glay upon the child, and put his mouth upon his mouth, and his eyes upon his eyes, and his hands upon his hands, and he stretched himself upon the child, and the flesh of the child waxed warm.

35 Then he returned, and walked in the house ^hto and fro; and he went up, and stretched himself upon him: and the child sneezed seven times, ⁱand the child opened his eyes.

36 And he called Gehazi, and said, ^jCall this Shunammite. So he called her: and when she was come in unto him, he said, ^kTake up thy son.

37 Then she went in, and ^lfell at his feet, and bowed herself to the ground, and took up her son, and went out.

38 ¶ And Elisha came again to Gilgal; and there was ^aa dearth in the land, and ^bthe sons of the prophets ^cwere sitting before him: and he said unto his servant, ^dSet on the great pot, and seethe pottage for the sons of the prophets.

39 And one went out into the field to gather herbs, and found ^ea wild vine, and gathered thereof wild gourds his lap full, and came and shred them into the pot of pottage: for they knew them not.

40 So they poured out for the men to eat: and it came to pass, as they were eating of the pottage, that they cried out, and said, ^fO thou man of God, there is ^gdeath in the pot. And they could not eat thereof.

41 But he said, Then bring meal: ^hand he cast it into the pot; and he said, Pour out for the people, that they may eat: and ⁱthere was no ^jharm in the pot.

42 ¶ And there came a man from ^kBaal-shalisha, and brought the man of God ^lbread of the first-fruits, twenty loaves ^mof barley, and full ears of corn in ⁿthe husk thereof: and he said, Give unto the people, that they may eat.

43 And his servitor said, ^oWhat! should I set this before an hundred men? He said again, Give the people, that they may eat: for thus saith the LORD, ^pThey shall eat, and shall leave thereof.

44 So he set it before them, and they did eat, and left thereof, according to the word of the LORD.

think that her son had been given her without solicitation, merely to become the occasion of her far deeper distress. (Notes, 14—17. 21.)

V. 29—31. It is difficult to determine what the prophet meant, by thus sending Gehazi. He had divided Jordan by using Elijah's mantle; and perhaps he thought his own staff, in the hands of Gehazi, would be as efficacious. (Note, ii. 14.) Or, perhaps he meant to make trial of the Shunammite's faith. Gehazi, however, was ordered to proceed as a man upon urgent business, who may not be delayed even by attention to ordinary civilities: and he seems to have observed his directions punctually, but in vain; whether through his own unbelief, (Notes, Matt. xvii. 19—21. Acts xix. 13—20,) or because the woman had no expectations from him; or because Elisha was faulty in attempting to perform the miracle by a substitute; or, as some think, because the prophet altered his purpose, at the importunity of the woman, and so did not pray for Gehazi's success. (Notes, v. 20—27.)

V. 33—35. It is instructive to compare the manner, in which Elijah and Elisha wrought their miracles, especially in raising the dead, with that of Jesus Christ. Every part of their conduct expressed a consciousness of inability in themselves, and an entire dependence on another, and earnest application to him for his interposition: but Jesus wrought by his own power; he spake, and it was done; "Young man, I say unto thee, arise;" "Talitha cumi;" "Lazarus, come forth." (Marg. Ref.)—On this occasion, Elisha, by his great attention, shewed his earnest desire of restoring the child to his afflicted mother: and the actions which he employed were significant expressions of his expectation, that God, by communicating life to the body, would enable each part to perform its proper office. The recovery of the child was gradual: life was communicated, and then one symptom and another of it appeared. As his disorder had been in his head, it has been observed that his sneezing might remove the cause of it, and restore him to health also. (Note, Ez. xxxvii. 1—10. Mark viii. 22—26.)

V. 36, 37. (Notes, 1 Kings xvii. 21, 22. Luke vii. 11—17. Heb. xi. 35.) The joyful mother not only expressed her high respect for the prophet, but worshipped God also, giving him humble thanks for his great goodness to her: for the words may be rendered, "She fell at his feet, and worshipped."

V. 39. Wild gourds. These are supposed to have been gathered from the plant called coliquintida, which is of a most nauseous bitter, and, if taken improperly, operates as a fatal poison. The sons of the prophets seem to have fared very hardly; and in a season of urgent scarcity they were glad to gather what they could find, and thus one of them ignorantly brought this noxious plant.

V. 40, 41. It is probable that these men were alarmed, not only by the nauseous taste of their food, but by the effects produced on those who had begun to eat of it.—Yet we may take occasion to remark the goodness of God, in giving us the senses of smelling and tasting, to be, as it were, centinels to keep watch, that nothing prejudicial may be received into the stomach.—The "meal cast into the pot," was only a token of the Divine operation, in changing the taste and properties of the pottage, that his servants might not want a necessary refreshment. (Notes, ii. 19—22. Ex. xv. 25, 26. Mark xvi. 17, 18.)

V. 42—44. This would be a considerable present in a time of famine. (Note, i.) 'It is probable, pious persons gave that portion to the prophets which was assigned by God to the priests, to whom they could not now carry their first-fruits, they being in the land of Judah. And I suppose the schools of the prophets might be partly maintained by this means.' (Bp. Patrick.) The loaves seem to have been small; perhaps each intended to be a meal for one man. The supply, however, was deemed greatly inadequate to the company: but the increase was little compared with the miracles of this kind wrought by Jesus Christ. (Notes, Matt. xiv. 15—21. xv. 32—38.)—The sons of the prophets seem at this time to have become very numerous: but perhaps some of the people, who came from a distance to receive instruction, shared the repast. And this might be one reason of the servant's objection to setting so little food before such a number of persons. (Notes, 1—7. 1 Kings xvii. 10—16.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—7. It is incumbent on all Christians, and especially on ministers, to submit to Providence in respect of their temporal provision; and, whilst they trust in God for their daily bread, not to tempt him by negligence or extravagance. They should not contract debts for things not absolutely necessary, which they have not a reasonable prospect of discharging: for nothing tends more to bring reproach on the gospel, and excite prejudice against it; nothing more distracts men's minds whilst they live, or more distresses their families when they are dead, than a burden of debt, without effects with which to pay it. Many hardships, therefore, should be endured, and many pleasant things renounced, rather than such fatal consequences should be occasioned. Yet, in the mystery of providence, this may sometimes unavoidably prove the case, even of those who are eminent for piety; nor can the strictest prudence avert the calamity: besides, many good men are deficient in worldly sagacity, and their unsuspecting simplicity exposes them to the designs of the artful. But, when this is a man's misfortune rather than his fault, he will have a testimony to his integrity in the consciences of all impartial persons: the Lord's people will be inclined to relieve him or his, according to their ability; and God himself will, in some way, interpose to clear up his character, and to provide for his wants.—He who hath all hearts in his hand, is able, without a miracle, to procure as effectual a supply, as the increase of the widow's oil: and when the ability is given, the creditor, though unreasonable and severe, must first be satisfied, after which the remainder may be enjoyed with comfort.—We should then be careful to perform our present duty, and to commit all our concerns to the Lord: we should study to adorn the gospel in our life and conversation, and he will take care of us and ours: and if he bring us into distress, he will manifest his power and truth in our deliverance. He generally supplies what is requisite for honesty and charity to his people, by blessing them whilst they are occupying with a little. And the best directed benevolence of man consists, in teaching and helping the poor to make the most of what they acquire by honest industry: but in every way we should shew a readiness to relieve those in distress; and to give them our counsel and prayers, when we have nothing else.—If our hearts were more prepared to receive spiritual blessings, and if we expected larger supplies, in retirement and fervent prayer, we should be more richly replenished. At length all the vessels of mercy shall be filled with the Lord's goodness: and the Redeemer's all-sufficiency will only be stayed from supplying the wants, and saving the souls of sinners, when there are no more inclined to apply to him for salvation.

V. 8—17. The ministers of religion should not seek great things for themselves, or court the intimacy of the great, except to do good to them or by them: but they ought to be unwearied in their useful labours, like him, "who went about doing good," that all may "perceive that they are holy men of God," simply dependent on him, walking with him, devoted to his service, and seeking his glory. Though backward to form connexions with their superiors,

B.C. 894.

Naaman, captain of the host of Syria, is leprous, 1. By the report of a captive maid, he comes to Samaria to be healed, 2-7. Elisha sends for him: he goes to him, and is ordered to wash seven times in Jordan, 8-10. He is angry; but, persuaded by his servants, he complies and is cleansed, 11-14. He acknowledges the true God; offers presents to Elisha, who refuses them; and is sent away in peace, resolving to worship the Lord alone, 15-19. Gehazi, by a lie, obtains presents from Naaman, and is punished by leprosy, entailed also on his descendants, 20-27.

NOW Naaman, captain of the host of the king of Syria, was a great man with his master, and honourable; because by him the Lord had given deliverance unto Syria: he was also a mighty man in valour; but he was a leper.

2 And the Syrians had gone out by companies, and had brought away captive out of the land of Israel a little maid; and she waited on Naaman's wife.

3 And she said unto her mistress, Would God my lord were with the prophet that is in Samaria! for he would recover him of his leprosy.

4 And one went in and told his lord, saying, Thus and thus said the maid that is of the land of Israel.

5 And the king of Syria said, Go to, go, and I will send a letter unto the king of Israel. And he departed, and took with him ten talents of silver, and six thousand pieces of gold, and ten changes of raiment.

6 And he brought the letter to the king of Israel, saying, Now when this letter is come unto thee, behold, I have therewith sent Naaman my servant to thee, that thou mayest recover him of his leprosy.

7 And it came to pass, when the king of Israel had read the letter, that he rent his clothes, and said, Am I God, to kill and to make alive, that this man doth send unto me to recover a man of his leprosy? wherefore consider, I pray you, and see how he seeketh a quarrel against me.

8 ¶ And it was so, when Elisha the man of God had heard that the king of Israel had rent his clothes, that he sent to the king, saying, Wherefore hast thou rent thy clothes? let him come now to me, and he shall know that there is a prophet in Israel.

9 So Naaman came with his horses and with his chariot, and stood at the door of the house of Elisha.

10 And Elisha sent a messenger unto him, saying, Go and wash in Jordan seven times, and thy flesh shall come again to thee, and thou shalt be clean.

lest they should be taken off from their work, and entangled in the world; they may yet find a few in that sphere, whose acquaintance may be deemed a privilege. But, whilst they do not refuse their countenance and friendship, they feel, that "it is more blessed to give than to receive;" and they will endeavour to make such returns of gratitude as are in their power, and especially they will seek the blessing of God upon their benefactors: nay, they will go further with man to ask favours in behalf of others, than for themselves. But it is a great happiness to know when we are well, and to be content among our friends and relatives, without coveting the splendour or pleasures of courts and public life; and when we have so learned submission to the will of God, as to express no desire for those objects, which others can perceive are wanting to our comfort. The Lord, however, sees the secret wish, which is suppressed in obedience to his will; and will hear the prayers of his servants in behalf of their benefactors, by communicating unsolicited and unexpected mercies: nor must the promises and engagements of the men of God be deemed fallacious, like those of the men of the world.

V. 18-37. Alas! all earthly comforts are sources of uneasiness: anxious fears counterbalance our pleasure from our beloved children when most hopeful: and their sudden sickness and death may turn all our joy into poignant anguish. On such occasions it is right to keep silence, or to say that "all is well;" nor must we think it hard to bring up children for the grave, or for the kingdom of heaven.—We cannot now expect a present resurrection of our deceased friends, but in many of our troubles we may find relief; in all of them peace and comfort, from the counsel and prayers of the Lord's faithful servants, who can teach us how to turn all our losses into the richest gain. Their company therefore, with the ordinances of God, and the throne of grace, should be doubly welcome to the afflicted and bereaved.—We should treat those with great tenderness whose souls are vexed in them; making allowance for improprieties in their conduct, and impatience in their expressions; and suffer them to vent their griefs, as well as be ready to attempt their consolation: and in general we should not avoid trouble, or affect state, by doing those things by others which we are able to do ourselves.—When we have used proper means with diligence and earnestness, we may expect the efficacious blessing of God, both in things temporal and spiritual; but not otherwise.—The gospel of salvation will no more effect the sinner's conversion, without the presence and blessing of God, than the condemning law: and if the minister be a hypocrite, and destitute of faith, little good can be expected from the most exact external observances; the sinners are not awakened, will generally be the doleful report. Not so, when the use of appointed means is accompanied by the spirit of fervent believing prayer, and persevering expectation from the Lord: then the change, which takes place in the conduct of many, shall evince that "they are quickened who were dead in trespasses and sins."—As the choicest comforts occasion the severest trials, so our heaviest afflictions make way for the sweetest consolations: and, notwithstanding appearances, the Lord will not tantalize his true people, by giving them blessings in order to take them away from them: but it is a comfort under temporal losses to reflect, that we did not inordinately desire the object of which we are bereft.—It is happy and comely when harmony prevails in domestic life; when the husband's authority is tempered with affection and unsuspecting confidence; when the wife answers that confidence with deference and submission, as well as fidelity; and when each party consults the other's inclinations, and both unite in attendance on the ordinances of God, and supporting his cause.

V. 38-44. Whilst the servants of the Lord are contented with mean accommodations, and put their trust in him, he can make their coarsest fare pleasant to them. Let them but observe his directions, and he will not only supply their wants, but extract the death, the evil, from such things as most alarm them. When he pleases, the scantiest provisions shall suffice; and whilst he communicates to us, we should in faith impart a portion to others; and thus all will be clean and salutary to us. But to them, who feed themselves without fear, their table becomes a snare, and perdition enters under their sensual enjoyments. Aware of this danger, let us learn to use temporal good things with caution and moderation, in dependence on Him, by whose blessing alone our food is made wholesome and nutritious.

NOTES.

CHAP. V. V. 1. The Syrians were idolaters, and often oppressors of Israel; yet the deliverance of which Naaman had been the instrument, is here ascribed to the operation and goodness of the Lord. Such is the rational language of the sacred writers: whilst the arguments and phraseology of those in general, who compose what is justly called profane history, too evidently shew that God is not in all their thoughts. (Notes, Josh. x. 9, 10. Ps. cxliv. 10.)—The leprosy was a loathsome and distressing distemper: and though Naaman was not under the restrictions prescribed for Israel; yet, doubtless, he found it a great deduction from the satisfaction, which he might otherwise have found in his high preferments and honours. (Notes, Lev. xiii. 45, 46. Num. xii. 11-15.)

V. 3, 4. This young damsel, though a captive, and a slave to Naaman, having, it is likely, been treated with kindness, entertained a cordial affection for her master, and earnestly desired the removal of his affliction. She had heard of the piety and miracles of Elisha; and, though he had not cleansed any lepers, she was persuaded he would be inclined to shew kindness even to a heathen, and be enabled to effect his cure. Nor did Naaman despise the information as coming from such a quarter. He had doubtless tried to the utmost, what the physicians could do for him, but in vain; and his earnest desire of a cure prevented him from disdaining an application to the prophet of Israel. (Note, Luke xvii. 11-19.)—Samaria. Either the prophet was at Samaria, when the damsel was taken captive; or the adjacent district is meant.

V. 5, 6. Ben-hadad king of Syria, having heard, probably from Naaman himself, that there was such a prophet in Israel, seems to have supposed that he must be at the command of the king of Israel, and perform his miracles for his pleasure and advantage; and if the Israelitish maid knew so much of the prophet, the king must have him continually in his presence, or in his thoughts. He therefore concluded, that he had only to ask it as a favour of Jehoram, that Naaman might be cured, and it would be granted of course; Naaman also would prefer going in state to the king of Israel, to becoming a supplicant to a poor prophet: yet it seems he intended liberally to reward Elisha for the service.

V. 7. Jehoram interpreted the ignorant language of the king of Syria, into blasphemy against God, as well as malice against himself. Though an idolater, and a very wicked man, he would be thought concerned about the honour of God; and, as full of abhorrence of Ben-hadad's supposed crime, "he rent his clothes."—He had either for the moment forgotten the miracles wrought by Elisha, (Note, iii. 16, 17;) or he did not desire to witness any more of them; or he thought this beyond his power: for it seems it was deemed as impracticable, by human skill, to cleanse a rooted leprosy, as to raise the dead. (Note, Lev. xiii. 1, 2.) By this concession of the king, the miracle wrought by Elisha became the more illustrious. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 8. A prophet in Israel. Naaman came into the land of Israel, expecting relief from a prophet of the God of Israel: and Elisha would by no means have him go back disappointed, lest he should conclude that JEHOVAH was like the gods of the nations, and as unable to do good or evil as they were. On the contrary, he would have it known, that God had "a prophet in Israel," by whom he performed such cures, as none of the heathen prophets, priests, or physicians could effect; and which were far beyond all the power of the mightiest monarchs.

V. 9-12. The prophet knew how to stoop to the meanest service or person, when it was proper: but Naaman seemed to have come to him with great ideas of his own importance, as if he conferred a favour or honour upon him. Elisha was therefore directed to assume that superiority which really belonged to him; and to shew Naaman, that he was far from being elated by the presence of so great a man; and that he regarded not his rank, desired not his friendship, and would not accept his presents; though, for the honour of the God of Israel, his leprosy should be cleansed, if he would observe the simple direction which he

11 But *Naaman was wroth, and *went away, and said, *Behold, *I thought, He will surely come out to me, and stand, and call on the name of the LORD his God, and *strike his hand over the place, and recover the leper.

12 Are not *Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus, *better than all the waters of Israel? may I not wash in them, and be clean? So he turned and went away in a rage.

13 And *his servants came near, and spake unto him, and said, *My father, if the prophet had bid thee do some great thing, wouldest thou not have done it? how much rather then, when he saith to thee, *Wash, and be clean?

14 Then *went he down, and dipped himself seven times in Jordan, *according to the saying of the man of God: and *his flesh came again like unto the flesh of a little child, *and he was clean.

15 ¶ And he returned to the man of God, he and all his company, and came and stood before him: and he said, Behold, *now I know that there is no God in all the earth, but in Israel; now therefore, I pray thee, take *a blessing of thy servant.

16 But he said, *As the LORD liveth, before whom I stand, *I will receive none. And he urged him to take it; but he refused.

17 And Naaman said, Shall there not then, I pray thee, be given to thy servant two mules' burden of earth? for thy servant *will henceforth offer neither sent him by a messenger. But Naaman thought, that the prophet treated him with rudeness and neglect. He had also formed an idea in his mind of the manner, in which the cure would be performed, and this message did not answer his expectations. He wanted to be cured as a man of consequence, who was entitled to regard; and not as a poor pensioner, who is glad of his alms by whomsoever sent. Abana and Pharpar were larger rivers than Jordan, and Naaman thought more likely to effect a cure: but the rivers of Damascus had not been distinguished by miracles, as Jordan had been; and Naaman in his proud anger forgot, that JEHOVAH was to cleanse his leprosy by means of his own appointment, and not in a way of man's devising. (Notes, Num. xxi. 6-9. John iii. 14, 15. 2 Cor. iv. 7.)

V. 13, 14. This Syrian was favoured with very prudent, respectful, and affectionate servants; and probably, he was in general a kind and considerate master, who could bear to be reasoned with by his inferiors. They had, it may be supposed, heard a great deal from the Israelitish maid, of Elisha's miracles; and were very desirous that Naaman should make the trial. Being more calm and impartial than he, they perceived that the prophet's directions were simple, easy, and safe. Had the prophet prescribed nauseous medicines, a tedious regimen, or some painful operations, or even some burdensome religious observances; or had he demanded a large sum of money as the price of the cure; they knew that Naaman would have complied without hesitation: how much more then ought he, in reason, to go to Jordan, and wash seven times in its waters? This remonstrance was "a word spoken in due season," and had its full effect: (Note, Prov. xxv. 11, 12.) and his cure immediately followed on his obedience; so that the decayed and loathsome parts of his skin and flesh became perfectly sound, and assumed the healthful appearance of the flesh of a child.—This is the only cure of a leprosy, that we read of, till Christ came into the world. (Bp. Patrick.) (Note, Num. xii. 11.)

V. 15, 16. Naaman, having received the cure, returned to Elisha, to express his gratitude, and to give glory to God: and now the prophet went out to confer with him. (Note, Luke xvii. 11-19.) His confession was very expressive and satisfactory. He not only allowed that JEHOVAH was the true God; but also, that there was "no God in all the earth, but in Israel;" the gods of all other nations being helpless, worthless idols.—What an awful representation doth this give us of the state of the Gentiles, "without hope, and without God in the world!" (Note, Eph. ii. 11-13.)—Naaman therefore urged the prophet to take a present, or blessing, of him, as a token of his gratitude; but he most decidedly refused. He did not scruple to receive presents from pious Israelites, and he seems to have accepted Ben-hadad's gift, (Note, viii. 8, 9;) but the case of Naaman was singular. It was of great importance what impressions he, at that crisis, should receive, concerning the God of Israel and his worshippers. Elisha had sent for him, to confer a benefit on him; and had he taken the present, Naaman might have ascribed this to a selfish motive, and imbibed prejudices; but perfect disinterestedness would have a contrary tendency. (Note, 1 Cor. ix. 13-18. 2 Cor. xi. 7-12.)

V. 17-19. Naaman in his first impressions conceived, that there must be a peculiar sanctity in the earth of Israel, having received such benefit from washing in one of its rivers: he therefore asked permission to carry home with him enough to build an altar, on which to offer sacrifices to JEHOVAH, whom alone

18 In this thing the LORD pardon thy servant, that when my master goeth into the house of Rimmon to worship there, and he *leaneth on my hand, *and I bow myself in the house of Rimmon; when I bow down myself in the house of Rimmon, *the LORD pardon thy servant in this thing.

19 And *he said unto him, *Go in peace. So he departed from him a *little way.

20 ¶ But *Gehazi, the servant of Elisha the man of God, said, Behold, *my master hath spared Naaman this Syrian, in not receiving at his hands that which he brought: but, *as the LORD liveth, I will run after him, *and take somewhat of him.

21 So Gehazi followed after Naaman: and when Naaman saw him running after him, *he lighted down from the chariot to meet him, and said, *Is all well?

22 And he said, All is well. *My master hath sent me, saying, Behold, even now there be come to me from mount Ephraim two young men of *the sons of the prophets: *give them, I pray thee, *a talent of silver, and two changes of garments.

23 And Naaman said, Be content, take two talents. And he urged him, and *bound two talents of silver in two bags, with two changes of garments, and laid them upon two of his servants, *and they bare them before him.

24 And when he came to the *tower, he took them from their hand, *and bestowed them in the house; and he let the men go, and they departed.

he was determined in future to worship. Yet, as holding a high station in Ben-hadad's court, it would be expected that he should accompany him to the temple of Rimmon: and whilst the king, leaning on his arm, should bow before his idol, Naaman could not avoid bowing also. But as he meant to do this, not as an act of worship to Rimmon, but of service to his prince; he hoped the Lord would pardon him in it: and some learned men have thought that his conduct in this respect was justifiable; because he was not an Israelite, and so not under the law of Moses. It is, however, evident, that the prohibition of every kind and degree of idolatry, belongs to the moral law, which is universally obligatory. Our strict rule of duty certainly, forbids such a conformity; the gospel grants no dispensations; and in similar circumstances, a Christian would be absolutely required to renounce every advantage and preferment, which could not be retained without such communion with idolaters, and countenance of idolatry; nay, to endure the utmost effects of the persecutor's rage, rather than make such compliances, however palliated by salvas and mental reserves. (Notes, Dan. iii. 8-18.) The prophet however seems to have perceived, that Naaman was convinced, that even bowing with the king in the house of Rimmon was not right, and he left those convictions gradually to produce their effects: if the result of regenerating grace, they would in time bring him to make a more public protest against idolatry, when his faith, judgment, and experience were matured. Moreover, as the whole work was from God in so extraordinary a manner, it is probable, that the prophet declined interposing his private judgment, when he had no immediate directions from heaven respecting it.—"In this thing the LORD pardon thy servant; that when my lord went into the house of Rimmon, to bow down himself there, and leaned on my hand, I bowed down myself there; that I bowed down myself there, the LORD pardon thy servant in this thing." (Whitby, Note, Luke xii. 8.) This would imply, that Naaman had previously favourable thoughts of true religion; though he had conformed to idolatry, which now appeared to him the most heinous of his sins.—The most material objection to this translation, which many learned men have endeavoured to establish, is the vanu conversive, which generally changes the preterite into the future.—Elisha seems also to have been silent concerning the earth, which Naaman requested, and for the same reasons. (Note, Matt. ix. 16, 17.)

V. 20-25. It is probable, that Gehazi was one of the sons of the prophets, had long enjoyed the society of Elisha, and kept up a profession of piety; yet he remained an avaricious and wicked man, far worse than the servants of Naaman the Syrian! (Notes, Matt. xxvi. 14-16.) He deemed Elisha foolish, to miss so fair an opportunity of enriching himself, having a right to Naaman's money in return for the cure. But he would not be so scrupulous; and with a solemn oath—even when speaking to himself, which in this case was peculiarly profane—he declared that he would take somewhat of him. To accomplish his covetous purpose, he soon devised a plausible lie: and Naaman's heart was so affected by the benefit which he had obtained, that he treated even the prophet's servant with the greatest respect, and pressed his acceptance of a larger sum than he petitioned for. In this manner Gehazi appropriated above seven hundred pounds sterling in silver, which he secreted in some convenient place; and he then returned to Elisha with another direct falsehood, as if he could have deceived God, as well as his prophet. (Notes, Acts v. 1-11.) His whole conduct was wicked in a most aggravated degree: he did what he could to disgrace the God of Israel, and to misrepresent his religion: he behaved in a manner most injurious to his master's character: and he not only robbed Naaman of his property; but he took the most effectual method imaginable to prejudice him against the prophet, and to induce him to return to idolatry. (Notes, Jer. vii. 9-11. John xii. 1-8. 2 Cor. xii. 16-21.)

CHAP. VI.

The sons of the prophets prepare to enlarge their dwelling, and Elisha causeth iron to swim, 1-7. He discloses to Jehoram the counsels of the Syrian king, who sends troops to apprehend him, 8-14. Elisha's servant is terrified ; but is encouraged by seeing horses and chariots of fire round his master, 15-17. The Syrians, at Elisha's prayer, are partially blinded ; and he conducts them into Samaria, where they regain their sight, and are entertained, and dismissed in peace, 18-23. Ben-hadad besieges Samaria, and reduces it to extreme famine, 24, 25. Women contend about eating their own children ; and appeal to the king, who in a rage resolves to kill Elisha, 26-33.

AND "the sons of the prophets said unto Elisha, A Behold now, "the place where we dwell with thee is "too strait for us.

V. 26, 27. The Spirit of God shewed Elisha what had passed, as plainly as if he had witnessed the whole transaction.—Considering the distressed state of Israel by reason of the famine, and the low estate of religion, other interests and employments called for Gehazi's attention. (Note, 1 Kings xiv. 5, 6.) The prophets of JEHOVAH were required to shew themselves men of another spirit than the false prophets, by a disinterested indifference about the world: and the state of Naaman's mind, and the peculiarity of his case, rendered this action the most ill-timed that could be.—We may suppose, that Gehazi was scheming how to lay out his money, in purchasing an olive-yard, or vineyard, that he might exchange the service of Elisha for a more profitable occupation. (Notes, Josh. vii.) And so he might: but it would be under the stigma and misery of a rooted leprosy, entailed upon his posterity in perpetuity, or as long as one of them remained. This was the proper emblem of the polluted state of his soul. (Notes, Gen. iv. 8, 9. Prov. xxi. 6.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-7 In whatever manner, or degree, a man is honoured and preferred by the princes of the earth, or made an instrument in providence of public benefit to others; he can obtain no exemption from trouble. Some bodily infirmity, or distressing disease, or domestic affliction, will counterbalance his advantages, and imbitter his enjoyments: nor can we remedy this vanity and vexation, except by humble submission to the will of God, and believing confidence in his truth, wisdom, and mercy; and by the enjoyment of that peace and consolation, which are communicated by the supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ.—The Lord overrules, to his own glory, those events which originate in man's wickedness; the young, or the poor, are often better acquainted with his servants and service, than the rich or aged; but as he works by despised instruments, so wise men will avail themselves of a useful hint from the lowest of their inferiors.—Kind behaviour to domestics generally ensures a valuable recompense: and no injuries or hardship should indispose us to seek the welfare, or to compassionate the sorrows, of those among whom our lot is cast; especially when they are kind to us. We carry our knowledge of God and of true religion with us, wherever we remove; none can deprive us of these true riches, and this blessed liberty; and the meanest believer will find opportunities of glorifying God and being useful to man, if he act consistently with his character and profession: for such a conduct will attract regard from those who are ignorant or careless about religion, and dispose them to attend to his words, particularly in times of affliction. (Acts viii. P. O. 1-8.)—They who know the servants of God, will not doubt their readiness to relieve the distressed; and such as know him, are sensible that in answer to their prayer of faith, he frequently removes calamities, and imparts temporal benefits, even to them who serve him not. In these concerns men have keen sensibility, and readily make trial of any probable means of relief, though expensive, troublesome, and even uncertain: it would be well if they were equally sensible of the power of the Divine wrath to which they are exposed, the burden of guilt with which they are chargeable, and the loathsome leprosy of unmortified sin with which they are polluted.—The great ones of the earth are apt to suppose, that wealth, authority, and influence can command every thing: but when they seek those blessings, which the Lord communicates in answer to the prayers of his faithful servants, they will find that nothing can be done in this way; but that they must stoop to sue in forma pauperis, and come as humble supplicants for a free gift, and not as lords to demand, or to purchase. For the ministers of God must obey man, only so far as the will of their great Master allows them: and in his work they must not be directed, or dictated to, by any human authority.—The ignorance of many, in spiritual things, is manifested by every part of their conversation: yet we should not impute that to a blasphemous or malevolent intention, which they utter merely because they know no better.—No judges are more severe towards their fellow-sinners, than they who themselves have no fear of God before their eyes: and they are especially quick-sighted to the atrocious conduct of those, whom they suspect of intentions to injure them; and vehement in their declamations against the crimes, of which themselves are not known to be guilty.

V. 8-19. The minister of God should seize every opportunity to evince the truth and importance of his religious principles, and to display the glorious perfections of the Lord: yet he should not appear pleased with the respect shewn him by great men: and he ought to be cautious lest, by his conduct and behaviour, he enhance that pride and vanity which need to be mortified. Rather he should aim to convince them of his earnest desire to do them good; and of his indifference about those external distinctions, which others envy, covet, or are delighted with.—All the commands of God are suited to make trial of men's spirits; especially those which direct a sinner how to apply for the blessings of salvation. These do not accord with the self-importance and self-sufficiency, the carnal prejudices and pompous ideas of an unhumbled heart: nor can they be cordially attended to, except by "the poor in spirit," or without that implicit faith which produces as implicit obedience. The way of a sinner's acceptance and sanctification, by the blood and Spirit of Christ, through faith alone in his name, does not sufficiently gratify or employ self, to please the sinner's heart: the method seems to many futile and inadequate: human wisdom and philosophy, (like Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus,) can furnish more rational and eligible methods of cleansing: nay, the opereuse and austere devices of superstition appear to numbers preferable to "the fountain opened for sin, and for uncleanness;" and the very proposal shocks and affronts all the sons of pride and self-sufficiency. But the sinner, who is deeply burdened with guilt, and longs to escape the wrath to come, and the service of Satan, would do "great things," if required for that purpose. If pilgrimages, mortifications, and austerities could avail, they would not be evaded: to torture his body, to part with his wealth, or even lay down his life, would be deemed a low price at which to purchase forgiveness of sins and eternal salvation; but none of these things, in this use of them, can be accepted. (Note, Micah vi. 6-8.) As, however, the fountain is opened, and the access free, he will much more "wash, and be clean," as the Lord hath directed.—Salvation is from the love and power of God, in the way of his appointing and revealing, for his own glory, and in the use of those means which he hath instituted. In this manner the believer applies for it, not neglecting, altering, or adding to the Saviour's directions; and by repeated washings he is made clean from the guilt and pollution of sin: whilst others, neglecting this great salvation, through proud contempt, sensual indulgence, covetousness, or sloth, live and die in their leprosy; and must for ever be excluded from the presence of a holy God. But when sinners are under serious impressions, and as yet prejudiced against the Lord's method of salvation, they should be reasoned with in meekness and love, and persuaded to make trial of it in simplicity. For he will not cast out the humble supplicant, however enormous his former crimes have been, or however weak and wavering his present faith may be.—If masters were courteous and condescending, and servants could give salutary advice with modesty and respect, many evils might be prevented, and even the effects of hasty sallies of passion counteracted.—When temporal troubles and deliverances bring us acquainted with God, and lead us to his service, they are indeed precious blessings; and gratitude to the Lord will dictate liberality to the instruments of his mercies. But different circumstances will render it necessary to adopt different measures. "The man of God" will never allow himself to covet any one's gold, or silver, or apparel; but be content with daily bread, and learn to trust for to-morrow. Yet sometimes he will understand that the proffered kindness is the Lord's method of supplying his necessities, that it will be fruit abounding to the benefit of the donor, and that there is a propriety in accepting it as a token of love: but, at others, the gift will be looked on as a temptation; and he will perceive that the acceptance of it would degrade his character and office, dishonour God, and tend exceedingly to the injury of the giver. In this case he will decidedly refuse it. This is particularly to be adverted to in the case of the great, when they first turn their thoughts to religious subjects. From knowledge of the world, they are apt to suspect all their inferiors of mercenary designs, and naturally suppose that ministers are only carrying on a trade like other men; while the conduct of too many so called confirms them in this sentiment. There is but one way of counteracting this prejudice; and that is by evidencing a disinterested spirit, and not asking any thing, and in some cases refusing to accept favours from them, until they have attained a further establishment in the faith; and by always persevering in an indifference to every personal interest.—It is not advisable violently to oppose every mistake which unites with men's first convictions, lest we should damp that earnestness which promises good fruit, when matured by experience, and duly regulated by the gradual teaching of the divine Spirit attending suitable instruction. We cannot bring men forward faster than the Lord prepares them to receive instruction: and where he works, he will in time lead them to renounce every secular interest, and bear the cross rather than sin against him.

V. 20-27. No outward religious advantages ensure the renewing of the heart; and better servants are frequently found in ungodly families, than in the houses of the most eminent servants of God. 'Tis true, that the latter must, for the time, wear the hypocrite's cloak: yet under it, the covetous man, the thief, the liar, the traitor, may lie concealed; but a fair occasion will betray the secret, and his profession will end in awful apostasy. Such worldly professors deem themselves wiser in their selfishness, than those who shake their hands from unlawful gain: they have the name of God in their mouths, but they have not his glory at heart; nor do they care how many stumble and perish through their wickedness: they make their advantage of those who are under serious impressions: they can never want a plausible story, when Satan is their prompter; and they care not what they say "for filthy lucre's sake." (Note, Tit. i. 1-13.) Thus they add sin to sin with rapid progress, deceiving many, but known to the heart-searching God; and they are often detected, exposed, and solemnly warned by his servants. In this world they are sometimes branded with infamy, and made awful examples, to wipe off the disgrace which they have brought upon the gospel: and everlasting misery and contempt will be their portion, if they die impenitent. Alas! what a price do men pay for outward advantages, when they are connected with such consequences

2 Let us go, we pray thee, unto Jordan, and take thence every man a beam, and let us make us a place there, where we may dwell. And he answered, Go ye.

3 And one said, Be content, I pray thee, and go with thy servants. And he answered, I will go.

4 So he went with them. And when they came to Jordan, they cut down wood.

5 But as one was felling a beam, the axe-head fell into the water: and he cried and said, Alas, master! for it was borrowed.

6 And the man of God said, Where fell it? And he shewed him the place. And he cut down a stick, and cast it in thither, and the iron did swim.

7 Therefore said he, Take it up to thee. And he put out his hand, and took it.

8 ¶ Then the king of Syria warred against Israel, and took counsel with his servants, saying, In such and such a place shall be my camp.

9 And the man of God sent unto the king of Israel, saying, Beware that thou pass not such a place; for thither the Syrians are come down.

10 And the king of Israel sent to the place, which the man of God told him, and warned him of, and saved himself there, not once nor twice.

11 ¶ Therefore the heart of the king of Syria was sore troubled for this thing; and he called his servants, and said unto them, Will ye not shew me which of us is for the king of Israel?

12 And one of his servants said, None, my lord, O king: but Elisha the prophet, that is in Israel, telleth the king of Israel the words that thou speakest in thy bedchamber.

13 ¶ And he said, Go, and spy where he is, that I may send and fetch him. And it was told him, saying, Behold, he is in Dothan.

14 Therefore sent he thither horses, and chariots, and a great host: and they came by night, and compassed the city about.

15 ¶ And when the servant of the man of God was risen early, and gone forth, behold, an host compassed the city, both with horses and chariots: and his servant said unto him, Alas, my master! how shall we do?

16 And he answered, Fear not, for they that be with us are more than they that be with them.

17 And Elisha prayed, and said, LORD, I pray thee, open his eyes, that he may see. And the LORD opened the eyes of the young man, and he saw: and, behold, the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha.

18 And when they came down to him, Elisha prayed unto the LORD, and said, Smite this people, I pray thee, with blindness. And he smote them with blindness, according to the word of Elisha.

22 And he answered, Thou shalt not smite them: wouldst thou smite those whom thou hast taken captive with thy sword, and with thy bow? Set bread and water before them, that they may eat and drink, and go to their master.

23 And he prepared great provision for them, and when they had eaten and drunk, he sent them away, and they went to their master. So the bands of Syria came no more into the land of Israel.

24 ¶ And it came to pass after this, that Ben-hadad king of Syria gathered all his host, and went up, and besieged Samaria.

NOTES.

CHAP. VI. V. 1-7. Probably, this event occurred either at Gilgal, or Jericho, both of which were near Jordan.—Under Elisha's superintendency the schools of the prophets flourished, and doubtless true religion revived and spread in proportion: but it is not certain, whether the building intended was a place of assembly, where the prophets met for religious exercises with other pious Israelites; or whether they purposed to live together in it, with their families, as a collected body separate from others. When, however, they were straitened for room, they did not depend on others to prepare them a more convenient or spacious building; but they proposed to fill up the intervals of their time in manual labour, and prepare one for themselves: and probably, they were accustomed to work at other times, that the people might not be burdened. (Acts xviii. 1-6. 1 Cor. iv. 9-13. 2 Cor. xi. 7-12. 2 Thes. iii. 6-9.) But they would not go to hew timber, for this purpose, without Elisha's permission; and they desired his company, to sanction their attempt, and to solace their toil by his edifying conversation; to which he willingly consented.—Perhaps they were not very skilful about their work, and some of their tools were borrowed; so that an axe-head falling into the water, proved a cause of anxiety to one of them; as it seems he was not well able to make it good, and the owner could not afford to lose it. In so small a matter, the Lord was pleased to work a miracle, to compose the young prophet's mind, to put honour upon Elisha, to enable the company to proceed with their work, and to encourage their faith and hope!—The stick cast into the water was the token of the Lord's operation; and it is useless to enquire, in what way he made the iron to swim. (Note, iv. 40, 41.)

V. 8-12. (Marg. Ref.) As the Israelites had repeatedly avoided the ambushments which the Syrians had formed against them; Ben-hadad suspected that he had a traitor in his privy-council, though he knew not on whom to fix the charge: and this greatly perplexed his mind. The Syrians, it seems, were generally acquainted with the extraordinary powers given to Elisha by the God of Israel. Naaman's cure could not fail to increase his reputation, and good effects might be thus produced upon the minds of some individuals; though the enmity of the Syrian king against Israel still remained. (Notes, 1 Kings xx. xxii.

V. 13, 14. It was strange, that Ben-hadad did not perceive, that the God of Israel could as easily disclose this design to his prophets, as the other plans which he had formed! (Note, Matt. ii. 3-8.) He had perhaps heard, that fire from heaven had consumed the small companies who attempted to apprehend Elijah; and therefore he sent a large army, as if he would ensure success. (Note, i. 9-12.) But a small number would have sufficed to take an unarmed man: and no force could prevail against the prophet's omnipotent Defender. (Note, Matt. xlvii. 47-56.) The offence however was less heinous in Syrians than in Israelites; and therefore Ben-hadad's army was not punished, as Ahaziah's captains and soldiers had been.

V. 15-17. Elisha, by strong faith, perceived the invisible guard assigned him: but his servant, (who had newly succeeded Gehazi,) was weak in faith, and needed encouragement; and the Lord was pleased to enable him, with his bodily eyes, to perceive hosts of angels, in the form of chariots and horses of fire encamped around the prophet, to protect him, and to fight against those who should offer him any violence. (Note, ii. 11, 12.)

V. 18. Elisha, secure of the Divine protection, seems to have gone out to the Syrians, who, in answer to his prayer, were deprived for the time of the proper use of their eyes, so that they could not distinguish one object from another; and yet they were not sensible of their own incapacity! (Note, Gen. xix. 11.) Thus the miracle was reversed in respect of them, from that with which the prophet's servant had been favoured: he saw what was invisible to others; they could not see what all others could.

V. 19, 20. The prophet intended to deceive the Syrians; and this might lawfully have been done, even if he had meant to treat them as enemies, in order to his own preservation; but he designed them no harm by the deception. He was no longer in Dothan, and they in reality had no business there: but he truly informed them, that if they would follow him, he would bring them to the man whom they sought: and accordingly, when they were so infatuated as to follow a stranger, and so bewildered as to enter Samaria, he made himself known to them; and the miraculous suspension of their eye-sight being removed, they saw themselves at the mercy of the king of Israel.

V. 21-23. Jehoram was eager to smite the Syrian troops; but he was very respectful to the prophet who had put them in his power, and would not act without his permission. When Elisha therefore had shewn him the impropriety of slaughtering prisoners of war, whom he had taken captive, much more that of smiting those whom God had led into that situation, he desisted from his

25 And there was ^a great famine in Samaria: and, behold, they besieged it, until ^aan ass's head was sold for fourscore pieces of silver, and the fourth part of a cab of dove's dung for five pieces of silver.

26 ¶ And as the king of Israel was passing by upon the wall, there cried a woman unto him, saying, ^aHelp, my lord, O king.

27 And he said, ^aIf the LORD do not help thee, ^bwhence shall I help thee? out of the barn-floor, or out of the wine-press?

28 And the king said unto her, ^aWhat aileth thee? And she answered, This woman said unto me, ^aGive thy son that we may eat him to-day, and we will eat my son to-morrow.

29 So we boiled my son, and did eat him: and I said unto her on the next day, Give thy son, that we may eat him; and ^ashe hath hid her son.

30 ¶ And it came to pass, when the king heard purpose: nay, he obeyed the prophet's orders in entertaining and dismissing the whole army! Yet, this very man soon after determined to murder this same prophet! (Notes, 31. Matt. xiv. 3-11. Mark vi. 16-29.) The Syrians, however, no more attempted to apprehend Elisha; and the soldiers were perhaps so won by his clemency, or afraid of his power, that they ceased from molesting the land by depredations; until Ben-hadad had collected his whole force to besiege Samaria some time afterwards.

V. 24. It seems that Ben-hadad met with little opposition, till he came to Samaria.

V. 25. If the pieces of silver, here mentioned, were shekels, above ten pounds was, on this occasion, paid for the head of an unclean animal, not generally used in food, and affording very little sustenance: whilst about twelve shillings were given for about three pints of very mean pulse, called dove's dung; or, as some think, of the undigested corn taken from the maw or gizzard of that fowl. However explained, the prices shew the extremity of this famine. It is sufficient to suppose, that each of these bargains was once actually made, in the urgency of hunger.

V. 27. If, &c. This may be understood as the language of passion, or desperation: as if Jehoram had said, 'The Lord will not, and I cannot, help thee; but we must all perish together.'

V. 28, 29. The truth and awful justice of God upon the idolatrous Israelites were displayed in this most horrible transaction. The extremity of hunger inducing rage and madness, and extinguishing humanity and natural affection, prepared the way for such actions, as at other times, the persons themselves would have abhorred the thoughts of. But this was repeatedly foretold as the punishment of Israel's apostasy from God; and more instances of it occur in their history, than in the records perhaps of all nations. (Notes, Lev. xxvi. 29. Deut. xxviii. 49-57. Lam. ii. 20-22. iv. 10. Ez. v. 10.)

V. 30. The king mourned his own miseries and those of the people, and he assumed the garment of a penitent: but he did not renounce his idolatries, and he grew more desperate in his rebellion, through the extremities to which he was reduced. (Notes, 1 Kings xxi. 27-29. Is. lviii. 3-7. Joel ii. 12-14.)

V. 31. Either Elisha had denounced this judgment upon Jehoram for his sins, or Jehoram supposed that it was sent in answer to his prayers; or he thought the prophet could help him if he would; or he blamed him, for inducing him to dismiss the Syrian army, when in his power; or perhaps Elisha had counselled him in the name of the Lord to hold out the siege, and that he should be delivered. His rage, however, against God, vented itself in menacing violence to his faithful servant. (Notes, 1 Kings xix. 2.)

V. 32, 33. Elisha lodged at Samaria at this time, probably in the school of the prophets, sharing the hardships of that city; and the elders had resorted to him to intreat his prayers, or to desire his counsel.—The Lord revealed to him Jehoram's intentions: and Elisha called him. "The son of a murderer," as proving himself the genuine offspring of Ahab and Jezebel, who slew the Lord's prophets, and murdered Naboth. (Notes, 1 Kings xiv. 5, 6. xviii. 4. xxi. 7-16.) At his desire the messenger of Jehoram was shut out, till his master, who followed him, perhaps to countermand his order, was arrived. And when he was entered, and perhaps exhorted to hope for deliverance; he in a blasphemous manner answered, that the calamity was from the Lord, who would not deliver them; and that it was in vain to wait for him any longer. Probably he meant to infer, that he might as well put Elisha to death, and surrender to Ben-hadad without further delay. (Notes, 25. Job ii. 9. Jer. ii. 25. Lam. iii. 26-30.)—As the messenger was excluded till the king arrived, it is evident that the latter was the speaker of these words, and not his servant in his presence.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-7. God hath often increased his church, by the addition of faithful ministers and true believers, in times of great persecution: for the whole glory is secured to him, when the effect is produced without the aid, and notwithstanding the opposition, of human authority by the preaching of his word, and the operation of the Holy Spirit. (Note, Zech. iv. 4-7.) Religion indeed always appears to advantage under the cross; when poverty and affliction are endured with cheerful meekness and patience; when hard labour and mean fare excite no complaints; and when men, honoured by the Lord as instruments of much good to souls, willingly earn their living by working at some honest calling; rather than burden the people; and yet will not entangle themselves with the affairs of the world, to acquire riches for themselves or families: their conduct evidently accords with the spirit of true religion, and seldom fails to attract the attention of numbers to persons, who act upon principles which are contrary to the general propensities of human nature.—Respect to seniors or superiors becomes those especially, who teach others to "render unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's, and to God the things which are God's;" and contentment with poor accommodations, such as inculcate mortification to the things of time and sense.—There is that pleasantness in the converse of the eminent servants of God, which can make men forget the pain and weariness of labour: and when condescension to the meanest unites with usefulness to the greatest, and with great eminence in the church of God, it confers a peculiar lustre on a man's character.—A pious and generous mind is more disquieted by occasioning loss to others, than by suffering it himself; and peculiar care should be taken of things borrowed.—Our heavenly Father cares for his people in their most minute concerns, and sympathizes with them in their fears and sorrows; (Note, Matt. x. 29-31.) and he peculiarly regards them whose tender consciences are afraid of dishonouring religion, through unavoidable poverty, and being unable to render to all their dues.

V. 8-23. The Lord knows, and can easily defeat, the secret machinations of his enemies. And the profession of being his worshippers will sometimes, for a season, engage his external protection; in order to the confusion of his avowed enemies, and for the sake of that remnant of true believers with whom they are connected. (Notes, Ex. xxxii. 7-14. Deut. xxxii. 6, 7. Jer. xiv. 7-9. Ec. xx. 7-9.)—Even the wicked are sometimes willing to be counselled by the servants of God in their temporal concerns, and experience the advantage of this conduct; but they will not take warning "to flee from the wrath to come," or be persuaded to renounce their favourite sins! Wave this subject, do not trouble their consciences, and you may obtain their confidence; nay, they will give up their inclinations in other respects by way of compromise.—As prophets were not without honour save in their own country; so numbers profess to honour those that have obtained a good report in the word of God, who would treat them with scorn or enmity, if they could again revisit the earth. For distance of time or place breaks the force of their reproofs; and they can suppose that other sinners, and not themselves, are intended: but when near, they direct the word to the conscience, with "Thou art the man;" and except this produce repentance, it must exasperate. Such men, however, prove the insincerity of their professed esteem, by living in habitual neglect of the truths and precepts, which were delivered by the persons, whom they would be thought to admire. (Notes, Matt. xiii. 54-58. xxiii. 29-33.)—The obstinate rebellion and blindness of fallen man often induce him to strive, and to expect to prevail, against those, whom he cannot deny to be the people of God: but as no outward miracles can extirpate the malignity of the heart, so nothing can injure those whom the Lord protects. Were our eyes opened to behold the world of spirits, we should perceive more formidable preparations against us, than those which alarmed the prophet's servant; even legions of malicious, powerful, and sagacious spirits combined for our destruction; but we should also see an innumerable company of holy angels encamped around us for our defence; and the Almighty God himself our friend and protector. Strong faith will supply the want of sight: it realizes both the danger and the security, and with a clear idea of the force of the enemy, confidently answers, "Fear not, for they that be with us, are more than they that be with them." May God give us this faith, and especially strengthen it in the time of danger, and in the hour of death! But if we are "strong, we should bear the infirmities of the weak," and both encourage and pray for them.—Increasing experience of the Lord's power and love, and those glimpses of heavenly things with which his people are favoured, gradually embolden them to walk by faith, and not by sight: nor is the power of prayer less, than it was in those ages of miracles, though the Lord answers it in a different way.—It is a mercy to be kept from sin even by ignorance and blindness; and we may pray, that our enemies may be so bewildered and confounded, as to fail of accomplishing their malicious purposes. The gospel itself indeed often occasions the blindness and obduracy of obstinate unbelievers to increase: (Note, 2 Cor. ii. 14-17.) yet we must pray for them, and persevere in our endeavours to win them over to be friends to us and to the Lord. We should also watch for opportunities to shew our friendly disposition towards them; as well as to convince them, that they will be ruined by their own iniquities, if they persist in them.

CHAP. VII.

Elijah predicts great plenty in Samaria, and the death of an unbelieving lord, 1, 2. Four lepers venture into the Syrian camp, and bring word that it is entirely deserted, (a terror from God having driven away the army,) 3—11. Jehoram fears a stratagem, sends messengers to examine, and finds the report true, 12—15. The people spoil the Syrian camp: the predicted plenty takes place; and the unbelieving lord, having charge of the gate, is trodden to death, 16—20.

THEN ^aElisha said, Hear ye the word of the LORD, Thus saith the LORD, ^bTo-morrow about this time shall ^ca measure of fine flour be sold for a shekel, and two measures ^dof barley for a shekel, in the gate of Samaria.

2 Then ^aa lord, on whose hand the king leaned, answered the man of God, and said, Behold, ^eif the LORD would make ^fwindows in heaven, might this thing be? And he said, Behold, ^gthou shalt see it with thine eyes, but shalt not eat thereof.

3 ¶ And there were ^hfour leprous men at the entering in of the gate; and they said one to another, ⁱWhy sit we here until we die?

4 If we say, ^kWe will enter into the city, then the famine is in the city, and we shall die there: and if we sit still here, we die also. Now therefore come, and let us fall unto the host of the Syrians: ^lif they save us alive, we shall live; and if they kill us, ^mwe shall but die.

5 And they rose up ⁿin the twilight, to go unto the camp of the Syrians: and when they were come to the uttermost part of the camp of Syria, ^obehold, there was no man there.

6 For ^pthe LORD had made the host of the Syrians to hear a noise of chariots, and a noise of horses, even the noise of a great host: and they said one to another, Lo, the king of Israel hath hired against us ^qthe kings of the Hittites, and ^rthe kings of the Egyptians, to come upon us.

7 Wherefore ^sthey arose and fled in the twilight, and left their tents and ^ttheir horses, and their asses, even the camp as it was, ^uand fled for their life.

8 And when these lepers came to the uttermost part of the camp, they went into one tent, and did eat and drink, and carried thence silver, and gold, and raiment, and went and ^vhid it; and came again, and entered into another tent, and carried thence ^walso, and went and hid it.

9 Then ^xthey said one to another, We do not well;

V. 24—33. The regard which wicked men pay to the servants of God, when they seem to favour them, is frequently turned into bitter enmity under their troubles.—In extreme distress, if they recollect that their affliction is from the Lord, that rage against him, which vents itself in blasphemies, dictates also cruelty against his people. They blame any one as the cause of their calamities, rather than condemn themselves and renounce their sins. If rendering their clothes, without a broken and contrite heart, and if wearing sackcloth, without being “renewed in the spirit of their mind,” would avail, they would not stand out against the Lord: but, whilst their own impotence alone retards the deliverance, they excuse their proceeding to still more desperate measures, by avowing, that it is in vain to “wait for the Lord any longer.”—Alas! what miseries hath sin entailed upon mankind! Little do we know what extremities we may be called to endure in this world: what then will be the everlasting wrath of God against his enemies, in the world to come? But if we are reconciled to him, he will help us when all human help fails; in the time of famine we shall be satisfied, and in peril we shall be safe: whilst all the curses of God’s book will fall upon the head of presumptuous transgressors. Let us then “seek first the kingdom of God:” let us be thankful for our daily bread, and not contract habits of self-indulgence, nor set our affections on earthly objects: and may the whole word of God, being truly believed, combine to increase in us reverent fear and holy hope, that we may be “stedfast and unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, knowing that our labour is not in vain in the Lord!”

NOTES.

CHAP. VII. V. 1. The measure here spoken of is supposed to have contained about a peck; and the prices specified, no doubt, were those of plentiful times: but that corn should be sold so cheap in Samaria, on the morrow, was impossible to any power, but that of God. Jehoram, however, notwithstanding his rage and desperation, was induced to wait one day longer, to make trial of the prophet’s words. (Notes, vi. 25. 31—33.)

V. 2. This lord was one of the king’s most intimate friends, who waited on his person. It is probable that he was an idolatrous despoiler of JEHOVAH and *this day is a day of good tidings, and we hold our peace: if we tarry till the morning-light, ^asome mischief will come upon us: now therefore come, that we may go and tell the king’s household.

10 So they came and called unto ^bthe porter of the city: and they told them, saying, We came to the camp of the Syrians, and, behold, there was ^cno man there, neither voice of man, but horses tied, and asses tied, and the tents as they were.

11 And he called the porters; and they told it to the king’s house within.

12 ¶ And the king arose in the night, and said ^dunto his servants, ^eI will now show you what the Syrians have done to us. They know ^fthat we be hungry; therefore are they gone out of the camp to ^ghide themselves in the field, saying, When they come out of the city, we shall catch them alive, and get into the city.

13 And ^hone of his servants answered and said, Let some take, I pray thee, five of the horses that remain, which are left ⁱin the city, (behold, they are as all the multitude of Israel that are left in it: behold, I say, ^jthey are even as all the multitude of the Israelites that are consumed:) and let us send and see.

14 They took therefore two chariot-horses; and, the king sent after the host of the Syrians, saying, Go and see.

15 And they went after them unto Jordan: and, lo, all the way was full of garments and vessels, which the Syrians ^khad cast away in their haste. And the messengers returned and told the king.

16 And the people went out, and ^lspoiled the tents of the Syrians. So a measure of fine flour was ^msold for a shekel, and two measures of barley for a shekel, ⁿaccording to the word of the LORD.

17 ¶ And the king appointed ^othe lord on whose hand he leaned, to have the charge of the gate: and ^pthe people trode upon him in the gate, and he died, as the man of God had said, who spake when the king came down to him.

18 And it came to pass ^qas the man of God had spoken to the king, saying, Two measures of barley for a shekel, and a measure of fine flour for a shekel, shall be to-morrow about this time in the gate of Samaria.

his prophet; and perhaps he wanted to persuade Jehoram, that Elisha amused him with the promise of an impossibility, to preserve himself from immediate death.

V. 3. Whilst the weightier matters of the law were generally neglected, the prescribed rule about the exclusion of lepers seems to have been rigorously observed. (Notes, Lev. xiii. 25, 26. Num. v. 1—4.) These men resided in tents without the wall; but probably they were admitted within the gate, at the times when the Syrians made their assaults. Gehazi is by some supposed to have been one of them, by which means he became acquainted with the king. (Note, viii. 4—6. Marg. Ref.)

V. 6, 7. The infatuation, which seized the minds of the whole Syrian army, was equal to the illusion put upon their senses; and both were from the Lord, but how produced we know not. (Notes, xix. 17. Ez. xv. 14—16. Deut. ii. 24, 25. 1 Sam. xiv. 11—15. Marg. Ref.) It is not known who the kings of the Hittites were, or where they reigned. Indeed the whole of the supposition was improbable; and in their trepidation the Syrians left even their horses, which might have accelerated their flight!

V. 9. Mischief, &c. Either some judgment from God, or some punishment from the magistrates, for prolonging the miseries of the people.

V. 12. If Jehoram had firmly expected that Elisha’s words would be verified, he would have concluded that this event was the effect of a miraculous interposition in his favour; though he might properly have taken every prudent precaution against a surprisal. (Note, i. Marg. Ref.)

V. 13, 14. This person urged in favour of his counsel, that these men and their horses would be no more exposed, than those who remained in the city. Many had been already consumed, and all the rest must die with hunger in a few days, if no relief were afforded: and they might as well be cut off in examining the real state of the Syrian camp, and discovering what had become of the besiegers, as perish tamely and timidly in the city.—It seems, only two horsemen were sent; perhaps no more horses being found fit for the service; or the king would venture no more out of the city.

V. 15, 16. (Notes, Is. ii. 19, 21. Phil. iii. 8—11.)

19 And that lord answered the man of God, and said, Now, behold, if the LORD should make windows in heaven, might such a thing be? And he said, Behold, thou shalt see it with thine eyes, but shalt not eat thereof.

20 And so it fell out unto him: for the people trode upon him in the gate, and he died.

CHAP. VIII.

The Shunammite, by Elisha's advice, to avoid a famine of seven years, sojourns in Philistia, 1, 2. On her return, she applies to the king, who is conversing with Gehazi on Elisha's miracles; and he restores her land, 3-6. Elisha goes to Damascus: Hazael is sent to enquire of him about Ben-hadad's sickness: he predicts Hazael's cruelty to Israel, as destined to be king of Syria, 7-13. Hazael murders Ben-hadad and succeeds him, 14, 15. Jehoram reigns wickedly in Judah, 16-19. Edom and Libnah revolt, 20-22. Jehoram is succeeded by Ahaziah, who reigns wickedly, 23-27. He assists the king of Israel against Syria, and when wounded visits him at Jezreel, 28, 29.

THEN spake Elisha unto the woman, "whose son he had restored to life, saying, Arise, and go thou and thine household, and sojourn wheresoever thou canst sojourn: for the LORD hath called for a famine; and it shall also come upon the land seven years.

2 And the woman arose, and did after the saying of the man of God: and she went with her household, and sojourned in the land of the Philistines seven years.

3 And it came to pass at the seven years' end, that that the woman returned out of the land of the Philis-

V. 17-20. The people being extremely hungry, and vehemently eager for food, thrust down this nobleman, whilst he attempted, perhaps in a harsh manner, to restrain them from rushing out to plunder the Syrian camp: or, as some think, to regulate the market, which was held at the gate, and supplied from the camp. Thus he was trodden to death; and the truth and justice of God were clearly seen in that event. (Note, 2.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-8. In extreme distress unexpected relief is often preparing; and, whatever unbelievers may imagine, it is not in vain to wait for the Lord, how long soever he seems to delay his coming.—No temporal deliverances and mercies will eventually profit sinners, except they are led to repentance; and in that case, "where sin hath abounded, grace will much more abound."—We all are prone to judge of the Lord's promises by human probabilities, and to bound his power of performance by our capacity of discerning how it can be done; and whatever tends to increase pride and self-confidence, proportionably augments this propensity. Hence the rich, the noble, the wise, and the learned of the world, have generally been the most averse to the implicit crediting of God's testimony, and expecting promised mercies in the way of his appointment, and in single dependence on his power, truth, and love, without regarding those imagined impossibilities which seem to lie in the way. But all those, who persist in despising either his promised blessings, or this method of obtaining them, will see the felicity of believers without partaking of it. For, though he will pardon the infirmities of his people's faith, whilst they pray, "Lord, I believe, help thou mine unbelief;" yet he will not spare those, who harden themselves and others in rebellion, through their infidel objections and enmity against the truth, however they may enjoy the confidence of earthly princes, or the admiration of mankind.—Men reason justly in their secular concerns: the distant probability of preserving life is preferred to certain death, and the lowest condition is considered as better than perishing by hunger. Yet, in the concerns of their souls, they will not be so convinced, even by demonstration, as to bestow pains and put themselves to inconveniences, to escape the wrath to come, and obtain eternal life. But the awakened sinner fears an evil infinitely worse than death; and under the greatest discouragements, even when tempted to despair, he learns to argue, "If I go on in sin, or sit down in sloth, or run into worldly dissipation, or have recourse to superstitions, or attempt to establish my own righteousness, I must perish. The mercy of God in Jesus Christ is my only refuge. If I cast myself at his feet and wait his time, who knows but he may save me? And if at last he spurns me, I can but be lost. All else is comparatively worthless: if then I must perish, I will perish under the means of grace, and supplicating his mercy and salvation." In like manner the believer, exposed to the terrors of persecution, reasons with himself: "If I am faithful to the Lord, I can but die, and he will give me the crown of life; but if I deny Christ through dread of death, he will refuse to acknowledge me another day: and I fear him who is able to destroy body and soul in hell," more than those "who can only kill the body." Thus believers venture themselves into the Saviour's hands, and cleave to him with purpose of heart; whilst others neglect or forsake him.—The Lord can effect his designs by various methods: a terror from him can drive men from their purpose, as effectually as the destroying sword of vengeance; and we absolutely depend upon him for the due exercise of our senses and faculties, as well as for the continuance of our lives, and the salvation of our souls.—Whilst some, when life is at stake, readily relinquish all which they before held dear; others, when wearing away by incurable or loathsome disease, are as rapacious of gain, as if their lives were secured to them with every other requisite of enjoyment.

V. 9-20. Natural humanity and fear of punishment are powerful checks on the selfishness of the ungodly, and tend to preserve some order and regu-times: and she went forth to cry unto the king for her house and for her land.

4 And the king talked with Gehazi the servant of the man of God, saying, Tell me, I pray thee, all the great things that Elisha hath done.

5 And it came to pass, as he was telling the king how he had restored a dead body to life, that, behold, the woman, whose son he had restored to life, cried to the king for her house and for her land. And Gehazi said, My lord, O king, this is the woman, and this is her son, whom Elisha restored to life.

6 And when the king asked the woman, she told him. So the king appointed unto her a certain officer, saying, Restore all that was her's, and all the fruits of the field since the day that she left the land, even until now.

7 ¶ And Elisha came to Damascus; and Ben-hadad the king of Syria was sick; and it was told him, saying, The man of God is come hither.

8 And the king said unto Hazael, Take a present in thine hand, and go, meet the man of God, and enquire of the LORD by him, saying, Shall I recover of this disease?

9 So Hazael went to meet him, and took a present with him, even of every good thing of Damas-larity in the world. They, however, who have found "the unsearchable riches of Christ," will not delay to report the good tidings to others, that they may partake of that blessedness, which is sufficient for all: and from love to him they will gladly communicate their temporal good things to their brethren.—True faith consists with prudent precautions: but unbelief suggests endless and unreasonable suspicions, and puts away those blessings, which are brought nigh to the soul by the invitations and promises of God. The believer, on the other hand, makes trial of them, and experience confirms his faith: and change, immensely more felicitating than that which is here recorded, takes place in his state, prospects, comforts, and character. But every word of God, concerning judgment as well as mercy, will speedily be accomplished; and earthly honours will accelerate the ruin of the ungodly. May God help us seriously to enquire, whether we are now exposed to his awful threatenings; or interested in his exceedingly great and precious promises; that so we may profit by the warning, or by the encouragement, resulting from that knowledge of our own state and character!

NOTES.

CHAP. VIII. V. 1, 2. This famine seems to have been sent in the latter part of Jehoram's reign, as a punishment of the pertinacious idolatry of both king and people, notwithstanding the miracles which they had witnessed, and the mercies which they had experienced. (Am. vii. 4.) It continued twice as long as that in the days of Ahab, but was not so extreme. (Note, 1 Kings xvii. 1.)—Elisha was warned of its approach, and counselled his benefactress (who seems to have been left a widow) to remove till it was over. (Notes, Gen. xii. 10. xvi. 1-6. Ruth i. 1-5.) There was a measure of plenty in the land of the Philistines, whilst Israel was visited with famine; but either they could spare none to sell to their neighbours, or their old enmity made them unwilling to do it. They did not, however, molest such as went to sojourn among them.—Had not Judah also felt the effects of the famine, it is likely that this pious woman would have gone thither to sojourn.

V. 3. To cry, &c. Either the lands of the Shunammite had been seized, as forfeited to the crown by her emigration; or some of her neighbours or relations had violently seized upon them; or they, to whom she had left the management of her affairs, would neither restore her estate, nor come to any account concerning the profits of it. She had therefore at this time occasion to apply to the king, though not formerly, (Note, iv. 13); and it was commendable in Jehoram, that he was accessible to such a claimant.

V. 4-6. (Note, v. 20-27.) It was not unlawful to speak to a leper, provided it was done without touching him; and Jehoram, from curiosity, was willing to converse, concerning Elisha's miracles, with so mean a person as Gehazi, who likewise bore an infamous character, and was covered with a loathsome disease! yet he did not court the prophet's acquaintance, because he disliked his counsels and admonitions, and dreaded his warnings and rebukes. The Lord, however, thus prepared his mind to do this pious woman justice; and his providence is especially to be noted in the coincidence of these apparently casual events, from which most important consequences frequently follow.

V. 7, 8. The prophet doubtless was divinely directed to go to Damascus. Some suppose that he went to counsel and encourage Naamah; and others, that he retired thither during the famine. Some indeed think that he went to anoint Hazael; but it is probable, that Elijah had performed that service, though Hazael, being young, and destitute of power to seize on the kingdom, seems not to have much regarded the transaction. (Marg. Ref.) Ben-hadad, however, was no longer disposed to injure Elisha. The report of the prophet's miracles had excited his veneration, and perhaps his sickness had softened his mind; so that he welcomed him to his capital, and, according to the fashion of the day, sent his chief minister to enquire of him concerning his recovery.

cus, forty camels' burden, and came and stood before him, and said, "Thy son Ben-hadad king of Syria hath sent me to thee, saying, Shall I recover of this disease?"

10 And Elisha said unto him, Go, say unto him, Thou mayest certainly recover: howbeit, "the LORD hath shewed me that he shall surely die.

11 And he settled his countenance "stedfastly, until he was ashamed: and the man of God "wept.

12 And Hazael said, Why weepeth "my lord? And he answered, Because I know "the evil that thou wilt do unto the children of Israel: their strongholds wilt thou set on fire, and their young men wilt thou slay with the sword, and wilt "dash their children, and rip up their women with child.

13 And Hazael said, But what, is thy servant "a dog, that he should do this great thing? And Elisha answered, "The LORD hath shewed me that thou shalt be king over Syria.

14 So he departed from Elisha, and came to his master; who said to him, What said Elisha to thee? And he answered, "He told me that thou shouldst surely recover.

15 And "it came to pass "on the morrow, that he took a thick cloth, and dipped it in water, and spread it on his face, "so that he died: and "Hazael reigned in his stead.

16 ¶ In the fifth year of Joram the son of Ahab king of Israel, Jehoshaphat being then king of Judah, "Jehoram the son of Jehoshaphat king of Judah "began to reign.

17 Thirty and two years old was he when he began to reign; and he reigned eight years in Jerusalem.

18 And he walked "in the way of the kings of Israel, as did "the house of Ahab: for "the daughter of Ahab was "his wife: and he did evil in the sight of the LORD.

(Notes, i. 2. 1 Kings xiv. 1, 2.) It would have been far more rational to have requested the instruction and prayers of "the man of God."

V. 9. We may infer from the silence of Scripture, that the prophet accepted of this royal present, as the provision which the Lord assigned him in a foreign country, and to enable him to assist the poor Israelites and the sons of the prophets.

V. 10. Ben-hadad's disease was not of itself mortal, though his life was near its end from another cause. But the prophet either did not know, or did not think it proper to inform Hazael, what that cause would be.—The Hebrew text, however, is, "Thou shalt not recover; for the LORD," &c.: though ancient expositors, both Jews and Christians, adopting the reading of the margin, render it as it stands in our version.

V. 11. The prophet fixed his eyes on Hazael so stedfastly, and for so long a time, that Hazael was confounded; and Elisha himself, in the foresight of his wickedness, and of the miseries of Israel, burst into tears. (Note, Luke xix. 41-44.)

V. 12, 13. Hazael felt at that time no inclination to that brutal ferocity and cruelty of which Elisha spoke; and he wondered that the prophet should suppose him capable of tearing and devouring, like some fierce and greedy dog, rather than a rational creature. But Elisha intimated that he would soon be advanced to the throne of Syria; and, being engaged in war with Israel, and exasperated by their resistance, he would be tempted to cruelties, of which at present he had no thought. (Note, Jer. xvii. 9, 10.) Some indeed think, Hazael only meant, that he was too inconsiderable a person for such great exploits: but his high rank under Ben-hadad would have enabled him to perform them, had his passions been sufficiently excited: and he was evidently startled at the mention of the cruelties, which the prophet predicted would be perpetrated by him. (Note, Am. i. 3-5. Marg. Ref.)

V. 14, 15. Hazael misreported Elisha's answer, having doubtless already formed the intention of murdering Ben-hadad, and seeking an opportunity of effecting his purpose. By the method that he employed, he prevented any alarm, or any marks of violence appearing on his body.—Elisha's intimation might give Satan an occasion of suggesting this villany to Hazael; but it was not the cause of his crime, and formed no excuse for it. Had he been of David's disposition, he would have waited in the path of duty, till the Lord had performed his word, in that manner which pleased him. (Notes, xi. 37. xii. 2, 3. 26-29.) Thus he soon manifested the rapacity and cruelty of the dog, of which he desired to be thought incapable. (Notes, 12, 13. Is. lviii. 9-12. Mic. vi. 5-7.)—It is supposed, that Ben-hadad had no son; that Hazael was in great favour with the people, and with the army especially; and that, for a time at least, he escaped the suspicion of having murdered Ben-hadad.

21 So Joram went over to Zair, and all the chariots with him; and he rose by night, and smote the Edomites which compassed him about, and the captains of the chariots: and the people fled into their tents.

22 Yet "Edom revolted from under the hand of Judah unto this day. Then "Libnah revolted at the same time.

23 ¶ And the "rest of the acts of Joram, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

24 And Joram "slept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David: and "Ahaziah his son reigned in his stead.

25 ¶ In the "twelfth year of Joram the son of Ahab king of Israel did Ahaziah the son of Jehoram king of Judah begin to reign.

28 ¶ And "he went with Joram the son of Ahab to the war against "Hazael king of Syria in Ramoth-gilead; and the Syrians wounded Joram.

29 And king "Joram went back to be healed in Jezreel of the wounds "which the Syrians had given him at "Ramah, when he fought against Hazael king of Syria. And "Ahaziah, the son of Jehoram king of Judah, went down to see Joram the son of Ahab in Jezreel, because he was "sick.

V. 16, 17. Jehoram, the son of Jehoshaphat, began to reign with his father before the death of Ahab, so that Ahaziah the son of Ahab died in the second year of his reign; or in the eighteenth of Jehoshaphat. About five years after he seems to have been more solemnly admitted to the exercise of the royal authority, within two years of his father's death. This took place when Jehoram was thirty-two years old, and from that time he reigned eight years; though he reigned only five or six, as sole king after the death of his father. (Note, i. 17.)

V. 18. The daughter, &c. Perhaps Jehoshaphat hoped by this alliance to cement a peace betwixt the two kingdoms, and to bring back the Israelites to the worship of God at Jerusalem: but it was an unhallowed measure, and produced a contrary effect. (Notes, 1 Kings xxi. 2. 2 Chr. xix. 2, 3. xxi. 4. xxii. 5.) This affinity gave occasion to the same names in both families. Each had a Jehoram and an Ahaziah: but they all took after the house of Ahab.

V. 20-24. (Notes, iii. 8, 9. 1 Kings xxii. 47.) Notwithstanding Jehoram's victory over the Edomites, he could not re-establish his authority over them: perhaps he was hindered by the revolt of Libnah, and by fears of further insurrections in his own kingdom, where he was become extremely odious. Thus the prophecy of Isaac was fulfilled, after Edom had been subject to Israel about a hundred and fifty years: nor did the Jews again acquire the dominion over Edom, till long after the Babylonish captivity. (Marg. Ref.)—Jehoram was buried in Jerusalem, but not in the sepulchres of the kings. (Notes, 2 Chr. xxi.)

V. 26. Perhaps Omri adopted and educated Athaliah, who was his grand-daughter, and the daughter of Ahab.

V. 28, 29. (Notes, ix. 21-22. 2 Chr. xxii.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-6. Temporal deliverances are only respites, and "Sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee," is a warning of universal application. (Note, John v. 10-15.)—When the Lord calls for judgments; famines, pestilences, wars, tempests, or earthquakes, obey his word: and if he contends he will overcome; for he will prolong the affliction, and make it more and more severe, until the sinner be either humbled or destroyed. (Note, Lev. xxvi. 27.) When he "rendereth a fruitful land barren for the wickedness of them that dwell therein," he takes care of the remnant of his people, and abundantly recompenses their kindness to his servants for his sake; and they will also gladly embrace opportunities of requiting their benefactors, especially by their counsels and prayers: but open enemies sometimes escape better than hypocrites or apostates.—Where the moral law of God is not violated, a real necessity will justify many deviations from the letter of ritual appointments: but believers will not choose to reside longer among ignorant and ungodly people than is needful, though they behave kindly to them; but gladly return to the ordi-

A young prophet, by Elisha's orders, anoints Jehu, at Ramoth-gilead; and directs him to exterminate Ahab's family, 1-10. Jehu acquaints the captains, is proclaimed king, and marches in haste to Jezreel against Joram, 11-16. Joram sends messengers to Jehu, who detains them, 17-20. He and Ahaziah meet Jehu; who kills Joram, and casts him into the field of Naboth, 21-26. Ahaziah is slain at Gur, and buried at Jerusalem, 27-30. Jezebel, by Jehu's orders, is thrown out of the window, and trampled under foot, 31-33. She is eaten by dogs, as Elijah had predicted, 34-37.

AND Elisha the prophet called one of the children of the prophets, and said unto him, ^bGird up thy loins, and take this box of oil in thine hand, and go to ^cRamoth-gilead:

2 And when thou comest thither, look out there ^dJehu, the son of Jehoshaphat, the son of Nimshi, and go in, and make him arise up from among his brethren, and carry him to an ^einner chamber:

3 Then take the box of oil, and ^fpour it on his head, and say, Thus saith the LORD, ^gI have anointed thee king over Israel. Then open the door, and flee, and tarry not.

4 ¶ So the young man, even the young man the prophet, went to Ramoth-gilead.

5 And when he came, behold, the captains of the host were sitting; and he said, ^hI have an errand to thee, O captain. And Jehu said, Unto which of all us? And he said, To thee, O captain.

6 And ⁱhe arose, and went into the house; and nances of God, and the communion of the saints: (Notes, Ruth i. 4-10.)—We know not what changes await us: we may soon be deceived by those who have hitherto been faithful to us, and need the help of those, on whom we have not heretofore had any dependence.—The love of worldly riches induces men to various methods of fraud and oppression, and breaks through the most powerful obligations, or the strongest relative ties. Hence the benefit of magistracy, to preserve equity and order among mankind. Believers may, on important occasions, avail themselves of their privileges as members of the community; provided they are not actuated by covetousness or resentment, do not manifest a contentious spirit, and make no appeal in a doubtful or suspicious cause: and rulers should award justice without respect of persons, and compel the injurious to restitution.—But the Lord himself will plead the cause of the defenceless and the oppressed, of the fatherless and the widow: he often effects his purpose by influencing the hearts of princes in their favour; and the most casual or trivial incident, which conduces to it, may prove an occasion of exciting praise and gratitude for his providential goodness.—The gratification of curiosity is more pleasing to the carnal mind, than the mortification of worldly lusts: and the vilest hypocrites, apostates, or profligates, on some occasions, will be pleased with conversation on religious topics, provided they have no reference to their own conscience, character, or conduct. (Notes, John iv. 16-20. P.O. 16-26.) Thus they countenance each other in ungodliness, or buoy up presumptuous hopes; whilst they cannot endure the instructions, and will not imitate the example, of those teachers whom they most profess to admire.

V. 7-15. The Lord can procure his people a welcome, and spread them a table, even amidst their enemies; who, on some occasions, and especially in affliction, may be inclined to shew them great kindness and respect. Yet few, even in that case, derive real benefit from their instructions, and disposition to do them good: but some honour redounds to God, and outward advantages accrue to his servants; who may without scruple receive them, as from him, when they are not required to flatter, or in any other way to act inconsistently with their profession.—They, who love God and man, must often weep upon a survey of the wickedness and misery of mankind: and a particular foresight of the state of the church, and of the world, would augment their sorrow. But little are men, when not exposed to temptation, aware of the desperate wickedness of their own hearts! They do not conceive themselves capable of those enormities, to which at present they feel no inducement; and it is deemed an insult upon them to suppose they are. But when the magnetic attraction of great imaginary advantages approaches the carnal mind, the latent depravity begins to move: and they will surely come into contact, unless hindered by external obstructions, or by the power of God upon the heart. Then, the greedy dog, the ravening wolf, the subtle fox, the poisonous serpent, or the filthy swine, form feeble emblems of human depravity: the persons, who before were most inoffensive, become guilty of far greater rapacity, treachery, or cruelty, than the worst of these animals; and in their cooler moments doubtless often reflect with horror and astonishment at their awful progress. Those who, as mortified limbs, are continually cut off the body politic, once no more thought of such criminality and condemnation, than any reader of these observations: and we are any of us capable, if left to ourselves, of the worst crimes perpetrated by the vilest pests and scourges of the world. This should remind us, “not to be high-minded, but fear,” and to trust only in the Lord to preserve us from the deceitfulness of our own hearts. As the desire of greatness is a dangerous temptation, which has induced many to perpetrate the basest crimes: so, power, however obtained, generally alters men's manners for the worse; and their inclinations to vice commonly increase, in proportion as they are able to commit it without control, and with impunity. We ought therefore to be content and thankful in more obscure situations; and they, who are called to this dangerous pre-eminence, have need of double watchfulness.—When iniquity is conceived in the heart, means will be devised for its perpetration: and flattering language often cloaks the most malignant purposes: for sinner in general are satisfied with concealing their crimes from man, regardless of the all-seeing eye of God. But it is an awful cruelty to flatter those with the hope of life, whom we suppose to be near dissolution; because they ought to be preparing for that important change.

V. 16-29. When pious men choose wives for themselves, or take any measures in the marriage of their children, they should remember that their remote posterity are concerned, and that an improper choice may entail misery upon them.—Indulged children seldom prove wise or good men, and it is not often expedient to advance young people, needlessly, to authority. Our inferiors and dependents are often employed to chastise our rebellion against God, by their ill behaviour to us. He will not, however, break his promise, or forsake his cause: but, whilst wicked men, from generation to generation, perish in their sins, the Son of David, the Light of his church, ever liveth, to protect, bless, and comfort his people. May all the changes, troubles, and wickedness of the world, make us more earnest in securing an interest in his great salvation!

NOTES.

CHAP. IX. V. 1. Elijah, many years before, had been commissioned to anoint Jehu; as a king of a new family, immediately appointed by God to reign over Israel, and to execute vengeance on the family and adherents of Ahab. (Note, 1 Kings xix. 15-17. xxi. 27-29.) But, a respite having been granted that prince, when he externally humbled himself before God, it seems, the anointing of Jehu was deferred likewise: so that this service now devolved on Elisha, as Elijah's successor and representative. But it required secrecy, and it was not proper he should perform it in person: as one of “the sons of the prophets,” who was little known, might have a far better opportunity of escaping, if suspected by Jehoram's friends.—Elisha lived above forty years after this: (Note, xiii. 14.) and, probably, was not incapacitated by age or infirmities, for the labour and activity required on this occasion; but was for other reasons induced, or directed, to send a deputy. (Marg. Ref.)—When the ancients used great expedition, they girded up the skirts of their long upper garments with a girdle round their loins. (Note, 1 Pet. i. 13-16.)

V. 2, 3. Jehoram having retired from the army, (viii. 29,) Jehu seems to have been left first in command, having been long employed by Ahab's family. The directions given this young prophet were explicit; especially as to the secrecy to be observed, and the measures to be adopted, for his own safety. The service was indeed peculiarly perilous; and Samuel had used caution, in a measure much less offensive. (Note, 1 Sam. xvi. 1, 2.)

V. 5-10. Jehu was engaged in converse, or consultation, with the other captains, when thus addressed by a person, it is probable, of mean appearance: yet he readily complied with his desire, and went aside with him to learn his errand. And immediately the prophet anointed him, explained the meaning of that transaction, and gave him an express commission from God. In all this, no doubt he exactly adhered to his instructions.—Israel, though generally idolatrous, was still “the people of the LORD.” They were called by his name, and had a remnant of his worshippers among them: and Jehu was thus warned to use his authority, in obedience to God, and to promote true religion. The family and adherents of Ahab were criminals condemned by the supreme Judge; Jehu was appointed to execute the sentence; the kingdom was his recompense for the service: and, as far as he acted according to the instructions given him, he needed not fear contracting guilt, or regard any reproach or opposition to which he might be exposed. The murder of the prophets and worshippers of God was more insisted upon, in this indictment, than even the worship of Baal. Jehoram had been spared many years, but he continued impenitent; though not so vile as Ahab, who was punished in his posterity. Jezebel had retained her authority, and persisted in idolatry, and her enmity to JEHOVAH and his servants; though less spoken of in the reigns of her sons, than in that of her husband. Long space had been given her, but she had not repented; and her measure of iniquity was now full. (Note, Rev. ii. 20-23. Marg. Ref.)

13 Then they hasted, and took every man his garment, and put it under him on the top of the stairs, and blew with trumpets saying, Jehu is king.

14 So Jehu the son of Jehoshaphat, the son of Nimshi, conspired against Joram. (Now Joram had kept Ramoth-gilead, he and all Israel, because of Hazael king of Syria.)

15 But king Joram was returned to be healed in Jezreel of the wounds which the Syrians had given him, when he fought with Hazael king of Syria.) And Jehu said, If it be your minds, then let none go forth nor escape out of the city, to go to tell it in Jezreel.

16 ¶ So Jehu rode in a chariot, and went to Jezreel; for Joram lay there. And Ahaziah king of Judah was come down to see Joram.

17 And there stood a watchman on the tower in Jezreel, and he spied the company of Jehu as he came, and said, I see a company. And Joram said, Take an horseman, and send to meet them, and let him say, Is it peace?

18 So there went one on horseback to meet him, and said, Thus saith the king, Is it peace? And Jehu said, What hast thou to do with peace? turn thee behind me. And the watchman told, saying, The messenger came to them, but he cometh not again.

19 Then he sent out a second on horseback, which came to them, and said, Thus saith the king, Is it peace? And Jehu answered, What hast thou to do with peace? turn thee behind me.

20 And the watchman told, saying, He came even unto them, and cometh not again: and the driving is like the driving of Jehu the son of Nimshi; for he driveth furiously.

21 And Joram said, Make ready. And his chariot was made ready. And Joram king of Israel and Ahaziah king of Judah went out, each in his chariot, and they went out against Jehu, and met him in the portion of Naboth the Jezreelite.

22 And it came to pass, when Joram saw Jehu, that he said, Is it peace, Jehu? And he answered, What peace, so long as the whoredoms of thy mother Jezebel, and her withcrafts, are so many?

23 And Joram turned his hands and fled, and said to Ahaziah, There is treachery, O Ahaziah.

24 And Jehu drew a bow with his full strength, and smote Jehoram between his arms, and the arrow went out at his heart, and he sunk down in his chariot.

25 Then said Jehu to Bidkar his captain, Take up, and cast him in the portion of the field of Naboth the Jezreelite: for remember how that when I and thou rode together after Ahab his father, the Lord laid this burden upon him;

26 Surely I have seen yesterday the blood of Naboth, and the blood of his sons, saith the Lord; and I will requite thee in this plat, saith the Lord. Now therefore take and cast him into the plat of ground, according to the word of the Lord.

27 ¶ But when Ahaziah the king of Judah saw this, he fled by the way of the garden-house. And Jehu followed after him, and said, Smite him also in the chariot. And they did so at the going up to Gur, which is by Ibleam. And he fled to Megiddo, and died there.

28 And his servants carried him in a chariot to c xii. 21. xiv. 19, 20. xxiii. 30. 2 Chr. xxv. 23. xxxv. 24.

V. 11. This mad fellow. Some reference might be had in this expression to those vehement actions, which the prophets sometimes used, when influenced by the Spirit of prophecy, (Note, 1 Sam. xix. 23, 24:) but it seems rather to have resulted from profane contempt of religion.—Without excepting him who “spake as never man spake,” they, who have faithfully delivered the Lord’s message to sinners, have in all ages been treated as madmen. (Marg. Ref.) They are so indifferent about those objects, which attract the senses, and which man naturally desires and pursues; and so engaged about those things which are invisible, and therefore generally neglected as if unreal; their judgment, conversation, maxims, and conduct are so contrary to those of other men; and they venture, and endure so much, in pursuit of interests and objects of which others have no conception, that worldly men naturally conclude them to be mad, when they deem them honestly in earnest. (Notes, Mark iii. 21, 22. 2 Cor. v. 13-15.) The charge, however, is often brought in self-defence: for, admitting the principles and practice of the devoted servants of God to be reasonable, wise, and necessary to happiness; the inference is undeniable; that the ambitious, the sensual, the covetous, the dissipated, the worldly, and the ungodly of every description, are fools and madmen to all intents and purposes.

Ye know, &c. Perhaps Jehu meant, that the captains knew the man to be a prophet; and must suppose that he came to admonish and instruct him: or he might intend to evade the question, as if the prophet’s errand had nothing peculiar in it; but they would not be thus satisfied, knowing that something more was communicated to him. This is the common interpretation.—It may, however, be questioned, whether Jehu did not suspect, that the young prophet acted in concert with the captains; and that they were previously acquainted with the man and his communication.

V. 12, 13. When the captains urged Jehu further, he declared the business of the young prophet, with a frankness and boldness, which seem to have arisen from a divine energy on his mind; for, if the captains had not coincided with him, the discovery might have proved fatal to him. Some kind of faith in the word of God, spoken by the prophet, seems to have animated him to this hazardous undertaking, of which it does not appear that he had had any previous intention: and the minds of his companions also were surprisingly disposed to concur with him, by making him a kind of throne, and proclaiming him king with sound of trumpets. It is probable, that this was done on the top of some edifice, from which the people were generally informed of such public transactions as were proper to be communicated to them. (Marg. Ref.) Thus the conspiracy was openly avowed.—Perhaps Jehoram was unpopular in the army, through his severity or oppression.

V. 14. It is evident that Ramoth-gilead was at this time in the hands of the Israelites: but it is not certain, whether they had just taken it; or whether Hazael had raised the siege of it, having attempted to retake it.—Jehoram’s absence from the army proved of fatal consequence to him: he “escaped the sword of Hazael, but Jehu slew him.” (1 Kings xv. 17.)

V. 15-17. (viii. 29.) Jezreel lay at a considerable distance from Ramoth-gilead, with the river Jordan between. Yet Jehu concerted his plan with such prudence, and executed it with such despatch; his adherents came so cordially into his interests, and so faithfully kept his counsel; and the people in the neighbourhood were either so ignorant about his intentions, or so regardless of them; that Jehoram received no tidings of his march, till Jehu’s distant approach was perceived by the watchman! But the matter was of the Lord, and could not fail of success.

V. 18. Perhaps Jehoram feared lest the Syrians had obtained the victory over his troops: but Jehu, by compelling his messengers to turn behind him, prevented his obtaining information, and increased his perplexity.

V. 20. Furiously. Some have rendered this, He driveth slowly. But Jehu was a vehement man, a fit instrument for his peculiar work. His approach might be seen at a great distance from a watch-tower, as he came with an armed force; and it is most probable, that he travelled with as much celerity as he could.—The original word is exactly rendered in the margin, in madness; being from the same root as that above translated, mad fellow. (11.)

V. 21. Jehoram had no sufficient force to oppose Jehu’s army, and he seems to have acted rashly in going out to meet him. But he still dreamed of peace, and was impatient to know, whether Jehu returned defeated by the Syrians, or triumphant over them. Thus Jehu’s design was facilitated, and perhaps bloodshed prevented: and, according to the purpose of God, Jehoram was slain in the portion of Naboth; probably near the place where he and his sons had been put to death. (Note, 25, 26.)

V. 22. Idolatry is in Scripture called whoredom; and when committed by God’s professed people, adultery, to denote the Lord’s abhorrence of it. Jezebel’s idolatries had been manifold and long continued; and, as some think, attended by prostitution, according to the shameless practices of the Gentiles in their worship: of Jezebel’s personal character in this respect, nothing further is recorded. (Notes, Rev. iii. 20-23. xiv. 8. xvii. 1, 2.) The word, withcrafts, may allude to the fascinating artifices that harlots use to allure men to wickedness; by which her various methods of seducing the Israelites to idolatry seem to be intended. For this purpose she doubtless employed promises, presents, caresses, and flatteries; and on the other hand, frowns, threats, and persecutions; by which vast multitudes were induced to conform to her religion, and join in her spiritual whoredom. As Jehu had been long unsuspected, in the court of Ahab and his sons, he probably had never before in any way protested against the worship of Baal.—Jehoram was answerable for Jezebel’s crimes, because he countenanced and imitated them, instead of using his authority to repress them. (Note, 1 Kings xv. 10-13.)

V. 25, 26. In the vineyard of murdered Naboth, of which Jehoram seems to have kept possession, his body was left unburied, to be devoured by dogs, or beasts of prey: and the dogs, in some sense, licked the blood of Ahab, as flowing from the wounds of his son. (Note, 1 Kings xxi. 17-19.)—The words of the prophets were called burdens, as predicting a heavy burden of misery to the guilty party, which he could neither endure nor remove. (Marg. Ref. Note, Jer. xxiii. 33-40.)—It is probable, that Jehu had seldom reflected on Elisha’s words during the intervening years, till these events brought the substance of them fresh to his recollection.

V. 27, 28. Ahaziah was Ahab’s grandson by Athaliah; and being also an idolater, he was within Jehu’s commission. So that, being found with Jehoram, he shared his punishment: though, as son to pious Jehoshaphat, he was allowed Jerusalem, and buried him in his sepulchre with his fathers in the city of David.

29 And "in the eleventh year of Joram the son of Ahab began Ahaziah to reign over Judah.

30 ¶ And when Jehu was come to Jezreel, "Jezebel heard of it, and she "painted her face, and "tired her head, and looked out at a window.

31 And as Jehu entered in at the gate, she said, "Had "Zimri "peace, who slew his master?

32 And he lifted up his face to the window, and said, "Who is on my side? who? And there looked out to him two or three "eunuchs.

33 And he said, "Throw her down. So they threw her down: and some of her blood was sprinkled on the wall, and on the horses; "and he trode her under foot.

an honourable burial. The circumstances elsewhere recorded concerning his death, render it probable that he was not slain, till Jehu had inflicted vengeance on Jezebel at Jezreel. (Notes, 30-37. 2 Chr. xxii. 9.)

V. 29. Jehoram began to reign over Judah, in the fifth year of Jehoram king of Israel; it is probable, in the very beginning of it: and he died, and was succeeded by Ahaziah, in the eleventh, or twelfth, year of Jehoram; that is, the close of the eleventh, or beginning of the twelfth. This space is called eight years, as comprising six whole years, and a portion of two others, computed according to the reigns of the kings of Judah. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 30-37. Jezebel had no way of escaping or resisting Jehu: she therefore aimed to outbrave and intimidate him. Instead of assuming the habit of a mourner, or a suppliant, she arrayed herself in all the magnificence of royalty, and stationed herself in a conspicuous place to wait his arrival. She used the method, customary in the East, of giving herself a majestic appearance, by a kind of paint which dilates the eyebrows, and makes the eyes look large and bright. And when Jehu approached the place, she accosted him by saying, "Had Zimri peace, who slew his master?" Zimri had destroyed the house of Baasha, and had soon after fallen before Omri the father of Ahab; (Note, 1 Kings xvi. 8-19:) but he had had no commission for what he did; and Jehu was expressly ordered to take vengeance on the house of Ahab. He was not therefore to be thus intimidated: for finding upon enquiry, that her chamberlains were ready to join him; (being either mercenary men who were willing to purchase his favour, or being weary of Jezebel's imperious and haughty disposition;) he ordered her to be thrown from the window, and thus she was dashed to pieces, and trodden underfoot by the horses.—Afterwards, when he thought of burying her, in honour of her royal extraction, he found himself disappointed; for her mangled body, (having probably been plundered of its costly attire,) was entirely torn in pieces and devoured by dogs. This reminded him of the word of the Lord by Elijah, which he had before forgotten: and he observed that her carcase was to become as dung upon the face of the earth.—This was a dreadful and most ignominious end, worthy of one who had been such a curse to Israel and Judah, but had brought the heaviest curses upon herself; and who was a specimen, and a sort of type, of all ringleaders in idolatry, and tempters to that crime. Yet "this cursed woman," the daughter of a king, was also the wife of a king, the mother of two kings, the mother-in-law of a king, and the grandmother of a king, all in her own life! So vain are all earthly honours and distinctions!

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-10. The long-suffering of God enhances the condemnation of those, who are not led by it to repentance. (Notes, Rom. ix. 22, 23.)—In his appointed time he will raise up and qualify suitable instruments for performing his purpose, whether of vengeance or of mercy.—The faithful servants of God must stand prepared for arduous and perilous undertakings: and obedience to his commandments must have the precedence before all other duties. But, as the written word is our only present rule of duty, it seldom happens, that we are required to act, even in apparent violation of our relative obligations to princes, parents, masters, or other superiors; except in professing those truths, and attending on those ordinances, which they may disapprove, discountenance, or prohibit; or in keeping aloof from those superstitions, or worldly places and practices, which they would enjoin.—Yet if, after all endeavours, "to render honour to whom honour is due," we should be reproached or ill-treated for our conscientious obedience to God, we must bear it with meekness and patience: and when in danger of persecution, we are allowed to flee from it. They, who are employed as ministers, will be the most exposed in these respects: for the message of the Lord, meeting sinners in the midst of their worldly pursuits, singles them out, by an application to their hearts and consciences, as if they were addressed by name: (Note, 2 Sam. xii. 7;) and whilst some are thus separated from their companions, and, by the unction of the Holy Spirit, prepared for the service of God, others are marked out, in the midst of their prosperity, as in danger of eternal misery. Whilst, however, we adhere to our instructions, we shall be accepted and preserved.

V. 11-29. Every man should well consider, to what work the Lord calls him, and in what manner and for what ends he ought to do it. His special commission justifies the severest executions of his enemies: but our general instructions to do good, and to bless, and to overcome evil with good, point out to us more delightful services, in which we should thankfully abound from day to day. Yet the vengeance of God will fall with peculiar weight upon the head of those, that oppress and persecute his people and ministers; who may deem themselves highly favoured, if they are only reviled, and reproached as fools and madmen. Satisfied with the testimony of their conscience, and the Lord's gracious acceptance, they may rejoice and be exceedingly glad, at being thus ranked with prophets, apostles, and the Saviour himself: and instead of resenting the opprobrious terms, as an intolerable affront, may glory in them as a most honourable distinction. They should, however, be extremely careful to avoid all ridiculous and unreasonable words and actions, that they may give no just occasion to such malignant and injurious charges; which, when unmerited, cannot possibly injure them, except they make them angry, contentious, discontented, or reluctant to their work.—The Lord often secretly disposes men to concur in his designs, in a manner contrary to their former conduct, and to all human probabilities: and then such events, as would otherwise have been impracticable, are speedily and easily accomplished: and, to ask advice, is often the readiest way of obtaining concurrence and assistance. Prudence united with vigour and despatch promises success in the most arduous designs; and a disposition to "drive furiously," may sometimes fit a person for peculiar services, which would not so well suit the temper of more sedate and amiable persons: yet in general it is no commendation of a man's character, or qualification for the most desirable kinds of usefulness.—Whilst sudden destruction is rapidly approaching, sinners are still saying, peace, peace: but what peace can there be to the workers of iniquity, and to those who have tempted others to join them in rebellion against God?—Notorious sinners entail judgment on their posterity unto the third and fourth generation, especially when these walk in the steps of their progenitors. The circumstances of temporal judgment are sometimes remarkably calculated to call to remembrance the crimes for which they are inflicted: so that the most superficial observers must perceive the justice of God in them, and acknowledge that the Scriptures are fulfilled. How will it then be in "the day of wrath, and the revelation of the righteous judgment of God, who will render unto every one according to his works?" And if we would escape the destruction of the ungodly, we must avoid intimate acquaintance with them; for "a companion of fools shall be destroyed."

V. 30-37. Some transgressors have so long domineered and prospered in their crimes, that they suppose they can outbrave all opposition, and defy even the justice of God himself. Their hearts grow more hardened and insolent, when they are evidently upon the brink of destruction: and an unhumiliated spirit, in alarming and humiliating circumstances, is a distinguishing mark of those, who "are appointed unto wrath."—They who carefully adorn their persons "by painting the face," "tiring the hair, and putting on of apparel," whilst their souls are polluted with the guilt and defilement of innumerable, unrepented, unpardoned, unmortified iniquities, should sometimes turn aside to view themselves in this mirror; and to contemplate the conduct and fate of Jezebel: especially they who use these arts to seduce others from the ways of truth and righteousness. Such persons, however noble, wealthy, beautiful, or successful, are emphatically accursed; under the curse of God themselves, and the cursed instruments of bringing others into the same condemnation.—Persons of royal extraction or authority naturally annex the idea of sacred to their distinctions; yet they often pay no regard to the sacred service and honour of the King of kings: but how can they expect the conscientious obedience of their subjects, whilst they are in a state of actual rebellion against their Sovereign; and attempting to corrupt the morals and principles of the people? Indeed traitors are justly execrated, and seldom prosper: but the Lord often uses them as the instruments of his righteous vengeance against ungodly princes.—Court-favourites are commonly a fickle, time-serving people. For the sake of emolument, they are very assiduous and lavish in their flatteries: but when a revolution takes place, they often betray, or even murder, the same unhappy persons, to secure themselves, or to obtain still greater preferment! This is especially to be feared by those, who render themselves odious through insolence and wickedness; and who are only served out of slavish fear or mercenary hope.—Let proud tyrants and oppressors study this chapter with fear and trembling: the loftiest will be brought low, and every one of them, in his turn, must give an account unto God, with whom is no respect of persons. The anguish of Jezebel's death, and the disgrace of her mangled limbs, faintly shadow forth the misery and contempt, which at, and after death, will be the portion of those, who have been "the terror of the mighty in the land of the living;" whose very memory shall rot in infamy. This the believer will foresee and expect; and at length all the world shall witness it with astonishment. May we flee from that "wrath which is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men;" and seek to secure an interest in those precious promises, that will assuredly be performed in due season!

CHAP. X.

Jehu by letters causes Ahab's seventy sons to be slain 'at Samaria, and their heads to be brought to Jezreel, 1-7. He shews this to be a fulfilment of Elijah's prophecy, and destroys all Ahab's kindred in Jezreel, 8-11. In his way to Samaria he slays forty-two of Ahaziah's brethren, 12-14. Attended by Jehonadab, he slays all that remained to Ahab in Samaria, 15-17. He assembles all the worshippers of Baal by stratagem; puts them to death, and breaks down Baal's images and temple, 18-28. He follows the sins of Jeroboam; yet the kingdom to the fourth generation is promised him, for destroying the house of Ahab, 29-31. Hazael smites Israel, 32, 33. Jehu dies, and Jehonadab succeeds him, 34-36.

AND Ahab had ⁷seventy sons ⁱⁿ Samaria. And ¹Jehu wrote letters, and sent to Samaria, unto ^{the} rulers of Jezreel, to the elders, and to ^{them} that brought up Ahab's children, saying,

2 Now ^{as} soon as this letter cometh to you, seeing your master's sons ^{are} with you, and ^{there are} with you chariots and horses, a fenced city also, and armour:

3 ^{Look} even out the best and meetest of your master's sons, and set ^{him} on his father's throne, and ^{fight} for your master's house.

4 But they were exceedingly afraid, and said, ^{Behold}, two kings stood not before him: ^{how} then shall we stand?

5 And he that ^{was} over the house, and he that ^{was} over the city, the elders also, and the bringers up of the children, sent to Jehu, saying, ^{We} are thy servants, and will do all that thou shalt bid us; we will not make any king: do thou ^{that which} is good in thine eyes.

6 Then he wrote a letter the second time to them, saying, If ye ^{be} mine, and if ye will hearken unto my voice, ^{take} ye the heads of the men ^{your} master's sons, and come to me to Jezreel by to-morrow this time. Now the king's sons ^{being} seventy persons, ^{were} with the great men of the city, which brought them up.

7 And it came to pass, when the letter came to them, that they took the king's sons, and ^{slew} seventy persons, and put their heads in baskets, and sent him ^{them} to Jezreel.

8 ¶ And ^{there} came a messenger, and told him, saying, They have brought the heads of the king's sons. And he said, Lay ye them in two heaps, at the entering in of the gate, ^{until} the morning.

NOTES.

CHAP. X. V. 1-7. These seventy persons were Ahab's descendants by several wives, probably including the sons of Jehoram. They resided at Samaria, as a more secure situation than Jezreel: or, as some think, they fled thither from Jezreel, when Jehoram was slain: attended by the rulers or elders of Jezreel, who might be supposed most attached to the interests of the family; and by those who had superintended their education. Doubtless, many of the elders were the same persons who had put Naboth and his sons to death in obedience to Jezebel; and, their consciences and principles having been debauched by such services, they were equally ready to murder the family of Ahab at Jehu's command. (Note, 1 Kings xxi. 8-14.) Jehu seems to have been aware of their base disposition; and he wrote letters to them, that by killing the young princes by their hands, he might save trouble, avoid odium, and prevent further bloodshed. He was commissioned to destroy all the house of Ahab, and he was not at all scrupulous about the means of doing it: otherwise he would have hesitated at employing men to serve him, with such base treachery and murder. But regardless of this, he, by an intimidating challenge, assured them, that if they attempted to protect their royal charge, the matter must be decided by the sword. He knew their strength, and he would have them to be aware of his resolution. As, however, they did not fear the vengeance and power of God, but the courage and success of Jehu, whom they despised of resisting, they unreservedly submitted to him. Nor did they, when they received his second letter, so much as beg that others might be appointed to slay the young princes; but, as it seems, without reluctance, at the first word, beheaded them all. Doubtless they had brought them up delicately, repeatedly avowed their attachment to them, and bestowed many flattering encomiums upon them. (Note, ix. 30-37.) They, probably, expected a reward from Jehu, but they seem to have been slain among the other adherents of Ahab's family. (17.)—Most of these princes must have been grown men, though some might be minors or children.

V. 8-10. The heads of Ahab's sons, having been laid in a place of public concourse, would occasion much amazement and many enquiries; which gave Jehu an opportunity of addressing the multitude on the subject. He meant to abate the odium of his own conduct towards the family of Ahab, by contrasting it with the atrocious treachery and cruelty of these professed friends. At the same time he reminded them, that the whole was a performance of the word of the Lord by Elijah, which would receive a still more exact completion: instead, therefore, of condemning the persons, employed in this bloody work, they ought 9 And it came to pass in the morning, that he went out, and stood, and said to all the people, ^{Ye be} righteous: behold, ^I conspired against my master, and slew him: but who slew all these?

10 Know now, that there shall ^{fall} unto the earth nothing of the word of the LORD, which the LORD spake concerning the house of Ahab: for ^{the} LORD hath done ^{that} which he spake ^{by} his servant Elijah.

11 So Jehu slew all that remained of the house of Ahab in Jezreel, and all his great men, and his kinsfolks, and ^{his} priests, until ^{he} left him none remaining.

12 ¶ And he arose and departed, and came to Samaria. And as he ^{was} at the ^{shearing} house in the way, 13 Jehu ^{met} with ^{the} brethren of Ahaziah king of Judah, and said, ^{Who are} ye? And they answered, ^{We are} the brethren of Ahaziah; and we go down to ^{salute} the children of the king, and the children of the queen.

14 And he said, ^{Take} them alive. And they took them alive, and slew them at the pit of the shearing house, ^{even} two and forty men; ^{neither} left he any of them.

15 ¶ And when he ^{was} departed thence, he ^{lighted} on ^{Jehonadab} the son of ^{Rechab} coming to meet him: and he ^{saluted} him, and said to him, ^{Is} thine heart right, as my heart ^{is} with thy heart? And Jehonadab answered, It is. If it be, ^{give} me thine hand. And he gave ^{him} his hand; and ^{he} took him up to him into the chariot.

16 And he said, ^{Come} with me, and see my zeal for the LORD. So they made him ride in his chariot.

17 And when he came to Samaria, he slew all that remained unto Ahab in Samaria, ^{till} he had destroyed him, ^{according} to the saying of the LORD, which he spake to Elijah.

18 ¶ And Jehu gathered all the people together, to adore the truth and justice, and submit to the will of God in it. Thus he likewise avowed his purpose of going on with what he had begun: but, as the commission given him by the prophet was not publicly known, he did not mention it. (Notes, ix. 14-26. 1 Kings xxi. 21-24. Hos. i. 4, 5.)

V. 11. Priests. These seem to have been the priests, or prophets, of Baal and other idols, who had eaten at Jezebel's table, and who presided over all the others. As they were retainers to Ahab's family, Jehu may be supposed to have put them to death from reasons of state, rather than from zeal against idolatry.

V. 13, 14. All the sons of Jehoram, the father of Ahaziah, had been slain by the Philistines, during the life of Jehoram; (Notes, 2 Chr. xxi. 16-20. xxi. 1;) but these persons seem to have been the sons of Ahaziah's brethren, or his nephews. They belonged however to the family of Ahab, and fell within Jehu's commission. (Marg. Ref.) They supposed Jehoram and Jezebel to be still living, and were going in a company to see them; and thus they met their doom.

V. 15, 16. (Notes, Jer. xxxv.) Jehonadab was eminent for his cordial attachment to the worship of JEHOVAH, and for a life of strict piety, and deadness to the world. Having therefore heard that Jehu was executing the predicted vengeance upon the house of Ahab, he seems to have entertained hopes of a thorough reformation, and was desirous of giving his cordial support to so good a work: and he went to meet Jehu, who, with apparent piety, pronounced a blessing upon him; enquiring whether he met his sincere affection with reciprocal cordiality. (Marg. Ref.) Indeed, some think that Jehonadab first blessed Jehu, as Jacob had blessed Pharaoh; and that then Jehu addressed him. (Note, Gen. xlvii. 7.) Being, however, satisfied with Jehonadab's answers, he took him up into his chariot; secretly elated, as it seems, with the concurrence of so pious a person, and expecting by his influence to acquire the full confidence of the people. But, had he intended effectually to reform religion, he would doubtless have sent for Elisha, to counsel him and concur with him; and his neglect, in that particular, was no favourable indication of his designs. He seems to have ostentatiously boasted of his "zeal for the LORD," and wanted to have it noticed: (Notes, Num. xxiv. 16. Prov. xxvii. 2:) but in reality he was influenced by carnal policy, united with a temporary conviction, and not by true piety.

V. 18-20. The kings of Israel, who had seized the throne by conspiring against their predecessors, had commonly imitated, or exceeded, their idolatry; and this gave plausibility to Jehu's stratagem: but it was a measure which and said unto them, 'Ahab served Baal a little; but ¹Jehu shall serve him much.

19 Now therefore call unto me ¹all the prophets of Baal, ²all his servants, and ³all his priests; let none be wanting: for I have a great sacrifice to do to Baal; whosoever shall be wanting, he shall not live. ⁴But Jehu did it in subtlety, to the intent that he might destroy the worshippers of Baal.

20 And Jehu said, ¹Proclaim a solemn assembly for Baal. And they proclaimed it.

21 And Jehu sent through all Israel: and all the worshippers of Baal came, so that there was not a man left that came not. ²And they came into ³the house of Baal; and the house of Baal ⁴was ⁵full from one end to another.

22 And he said unto him that was over the vestry, Bring forth ¹vestments for all the worshippers of Baal. And he brought them forth vestments.

23 And Jehu went, and Jehonadab the son of Rechab, into the house of Baal, and said unto the worshippers of Baal, Search, and look that there be here with you none of the servants of the LORD, but the worshippers of Baal only.

24 And when they went in to offer sacrifices and burnt-offerings, Jehu appointed fourscore men without, and said, ¹If any of the men whom I have brought into your hands escape, he that letteth him go, his life shall be for the life of him.

25 And it came to pass, as soon as he had made an end of offering the burnt-offering, that Jehu said to the guard, and to the captains, ¹Go in, and slay them; ²let none come forth. And they smote them with the ³edge of the sword; and the guard and the captains cast them out, and went to the city of the house of Baal.

cannot be justified. It would have been sufficient, if he had destroyed the temples and images of Baal, and put to death the known abettors and ringleaders of his worship, and every one who should afterwards attempt to revive it. But to draw them into a snare, by a direct falsehood, and to tempt them to commit idolatry, that he might slay them in the very act, was "to do evil, that good might come," and resembled the abhorred maxim of those who maintain, that faith is not to be kept with heretics. (Notes, Josh. ix. 19, 20. 2 Sam. xiii. 21—29. Rom. iii. 5—8.)

V. 21. Numbers doubtless had been drawn in to bow the knee to Baal, in order to obtain the favour, or escape the displeasure, of their rulers, who did not cordially approve of that idolatry, though indifferent about the worship of JEHOVAH. And these would keep away till Jehu's intentions were more manifest: but the zealous idolaters were judiciously infatuated, and universally attended. Their number must have been small, compared with the state of things in the first days of Elijah: but Jehoram was not so zealous for the worship of Baal, as Ahab had been; and the incessant labours of Elisha, and the sons of the prophets, must have produced very great effects.—Some expositors, however, think that by the servants of Baal, (as in the original), his worshippers are not meant, but the persons who ministered to the prophets and priests, as the Levites and Nethinims did to the sons of Aaron.

V. 22. Vestments. The prophets, priests, and servants of Baal wore distinguishing garments, in which they were accustomed to perform their religious services.

V. 23. None of, &c. This was spoken in a dissembled zeal to preserve the purity of the worship of Baal: but had not the idolaters been infatuated, they must have suspected some design concealed under such a precaution.

V. 24, 25. (Note, 1 Kings xx. 41, 42.)—Perhaps, all the servants of Baal were not collected, nor all others separated, till the sacrifice was placed upon the altar; and therefore they were permitted to go through with their worship.—We may suppose that Jehonadab so much approved the substance of Jehu's service, that he was willing to allow for the informality with which it was performed: otherwise he certainly could not approve of his dissimulation, or his attendance on an idolatrous sacrifice, with apparent satisfaction.—It seems that the buildings around the temple of Baal, for the accommodation of his priests and their attendants, were so numerous, as to form a kind of city by themselves.

V. 27. A draught-house. The citizens therefore made a practice of carrying all the filth and rubbish of Samaria to that place, in contempt and abhorrence of the idolatry which had been there committed. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 28. After this, the worship of Baal was never restored in the kingdom of Israel, though other idolatry abounded.

V. 29—31. Had Jehu acted from genuine zeal for the honour of God, in destroying the worship of Baal, he would also have put down the worship of the golden calves; that idolatry being as expressly forbidden by the second, as the other was by the first, commandment. But that was a politic and profitable sin, and it appeared dangerous to attempt anything against it. In his general conduct "he took no heed to walk in the law of the LORD,—with all his heart;" and his partiality proved his hypocrisy. The Lord, however, sent a prophet to assure him, that he had done right, in executing vengeance on Ahab's family, as well as in destroying the worship of Baal; and to promise him a suitable recompense. Accordingly, his family sat on the throne of Israel longer than any other family did, either before or after; as the fourth generation reached to above one hundred years from the time when Jehu ascended the throne. (Notes, xv. 8. 12.) Yet, in other respects these very actions of Jehu were deemed deserving of punishment. (Note, Hos. i. 4, 5.)

V. 32—36.—At this time Hazael committed those barbarities which Elisha had predicted, and we may suppose that the miseries of Israel were very great. (Notes, viii. 12, 13. Am. i. 3—5.) But from the period, when Jehu ceased to do the work of God, his actions and might are no further noticed in sacred Scripture, and the account of his reign is very compendious.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—14. How soon are the most flourishing families and kingdoms desolated, when God ariseth to execute his judgments!—Such as bequeath his blessing to their children in answer to their prayers, and as a gracious recompense of their faith and charity, do far better for them, than those who leave estates to their descendants, burdened with the indignation of the Lord, for their injustice, oppression, and impiety.—The selfishness of the human heart gives peculiar energy to those temptations, which powerfully assail our hopes and fears. Where this principle has the ascendancy, men may be induced to such treachery and cruelty, as before they never thought of; and they who influence their inferiors to practise iniquity for them, need not to be surprised if they commit similar crimes against them. But nothing, except faith, fear of God, love to his name, and the hope of eternal life, can give a decided victory over all temptations; and enable us to obey the Lord, and venture all consequences in his service.—They who have done things really, or apparently evil, are often disposed to draw in others to do worse; and then to conclude, that they shall be acquitted by righteous judges, not being themselves so atrociously criminal. Yet the law of God, and not any conduct of man, is the rule by which our actions are to be judged: and, though tempters generally prove accusers, a moiety of the guilt properly belongs to them.—We readily perceive the propriety of submitting where we are unable to withstand, and of taking warning by the examples of those who have in vain opposed the will of earthly princes; at least we are disposed at any price to pacify their displeasure. But are not sinners sensible that they cannot stand against the indignation of the Almighty? And yet they persist in rebellion against him, and will not take proper measures, or make proper submissions, to avert his wrath and recover his favour!—If we call ourselves the servants of earthly potentates, they expect that our obedience to their mandates should evince the sincerity of our professions: and if we are the Lord's, we must shew that we are devoted to him by doing his will; and he never did, or can, command any thing unjust or unreasonable.—We should dread and abhor the man who had murdered our parents or children, the wife of our bosom, or our beloved friends; and who had aimed a dagger at our hearts, and having repeatedly wounded us, still avowed his purpose of assassinating us. But when we look back upon our deceased relatives, or forward to our own dissolution: when we reflect on the sufferings which we or ours endure or fear, or on those miseries which render the earth like one great hospital, slaughter-house, and burying-ground; when we consider the innumerable millions of human bodies which have been consigned to the tomb, and are reverted to the dust; and the vast multitudes daily following; yea, when our believing thoughts make excursions into the invisible world, and survey the miseries of fallen angels, and departed souls consigned to the place of torment: or when we look forward to the resurrection and the final judgment, and view the immense numbers of the wicked, appalled with horror and despair, attending to the awful sentence, "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels; in short, when the aggregate of all the misery in the whole creation, through eternal ages, hath been considered, and the question occurs, "Who slew all these?" The answer will be, "SIN! TRANSGRESSION OF GOD'S LAW has made all this havoc, and introduced all this misery into his most perfect creation; and worse than all that, sin hath crucified the LORD OF GLORY. Shall we then lodge this viper in our bosom, and madly seek for happiness from the cause of all possible misery? Rather, we should abhor and dread it with that complete detestation, which would render its distant approach more formidable to us than any temporal pain or affliction imaginable.—In the most awful transactions, even though attended by the basest villanies, the truth and justice of God ought to be acknowledged; nay, true faith assures us of them, even when to us imperceptible; for no word of God can fall to the ground, but all will be performed, and then his glory will be conspicuous to the whole world.

V. 15-36. Men of eminent godliness should countenance every work of public reformation; and wise men will value their presence and assistance. But they are frequently too hasty in their concurrence, and too sanguine in their expectations, when those in exalted stations stand forth the professed friends of religion: and thus they are drawn in to sanction those wrong measures which they are unable to prevent, to the discredit of the common cause.—Hypocrites and self-deceivers are often ready to say to godly persons, "Come and see our zeal for the LORD," when they are only aiming, by the assistance of a party, to establish their own authority and reputation, or other secular interests. And when men's professions are very strong, their progress very rapid, and their zeal tarnished with ostentation, or leavened with subtlety and a fickle or fierce demeanour, they may justly be suspected, and need to be watched and admonished by those who would avoid subsequent painful reflections. Vehemency and severity indeed were in some measure consistent with the awful executions, which a righteous God commanded formerly: yet the manner in which such orders were performed, might indicate a very improper spirit. Our zeal, however, is worthless, except it be tempered with humility, meekness, kindness, and a peaceable frame of mind: as, furious contentions and bitter recriminations cannot adorn the gospel, or meet the Divine acceptance; for neither the wrath, nor the falsehood of man can "work the righteousness of God." (Notes, Luke ix. 51-56. Jam. iii. 13-18.)—Hypocrites betray themselves by their earnestness about one part of religion, and their indifference about others: and generally profitable or plausible sins are spared, whilst those which would injure them with their party are cast off. Yet the church, and the world, may often reap advantage from their partial obedience: and God will not remain as it were indebted to them; but will recompense their external services with external rewards, and at the same time visit their sins with deserved punishments. Much more then will he recompense the upright services of his believing people, who may be encouraged to abound in his work.—The servants of Satan are often open enough in avowing what master they serve; therefore it is shameful and deplorable, when the servants of the Lord are unwilling that men should know they are employed by him.—If the wicked could so separate God's people from their company, as to let none remain in it, we might be sure that destruction was preparing for them: but what blessed ordinances should we have, if no servants of sin and Satan crept in among the worshippers of the LORD! Generally, if not always, we must say, "Ye are clean, but not all. Nay, many are useful to the souls of others, who themselves prove apostates and castaways. The Lord grant that this may not be the case with the writer, or any of the readers, of these observations!

NOTES.

CHAP. XI. V. 1, 2. It is probable that Athaliah was left in authority, when Ahaziah went to visit Jehoram; and, being informed that he was slain, she proceeded to destroy "all the royal seed," or the seed of the kingdom; that is, all who could claim the kingdom, as descended from David's royal race. This seems to include all, whom Athaliah knew to belong to that family, especially in the line of Solomon and Rehoboam, without even excepting her own grandchildren by Ahaziah. Some think, an impious revenge actuated her; and that, as God had ordered the family of Ahab, (whose daughter she was,) to be destroyed; so she was determined to extirpate that family which he especially favoured. But it is more certain that she was influenced by ambition, and desired to reign without a competitor; and to be able to defend herself against Jehu, by whom she must think herself marked for destruction. By this concurrence of events, Jehoshaphat's alliance with the house of Ahab proved almost the total ruin of his family: and of the house of David, from whence the Messiah was to descend! To appearance, and in Athaliah's intention, it was exterminated; and indeed that branch, which descended from Jehoshaphat, was so interwoven with Ahab's devoted family, that without a favourable construction of the sentence, none of them could have been spared: for Jehoshaphat's other sons had been slain by Jehoram, as soon as he had gotten possession of the throne, so that all who survived were the descendants of Ahab as well as of Jehoshaphat. (Note, 2 Chr. xxi. 4.) But by an act of grace, as it were, Joash, being both a branch of the house of David, and of that of Ahab, was considered as belonging to the former family, and snatched as "a brand from the burning." (Notes, iii. 7. 1 Kings xxii. 1-4.)—Some think that he was left for dead among the other victims of Athaliah's ambition; but being taken away, he revived, and was recovered: or else he was removed when they were slaying the others, and either was not sought for, or could not be found. Jehosheba, though the daughter of Jehoram, (whether by Athaliah, or some other wife, is not certain,) had been married some time before to Jehoiada the high priest; God thus preparing for the protection of Joash, before the danger became apparent.—Jehosheba concealed Joash in some of the chambers set apart for the use of the priests, where he remained in safety; Athaliah not suspecting that any of the family survived.

V. 3. It seems that the degenerate men of Judah did not oppose the usurpation of this vile woman! We are informed of nothing respecting Athaliah's conduct, during her continuance in authority; but that she established the worship of Baal, as a genuine daughter of Jezebel.

V. 4. Jehoiada, as high priest, and as having the lawful heir to the crown under his care, was fully authorized to act on this occasion. Indeed Jehosheba herself had a far better right to the throne, than Athaliah.—All the persons, whom Jehoiada first employed, seem to have been Levites; though others, by their means, were afterwards brought to concur. For the Levites were numbered, and arranged in companies under their several heads, called captains, or leaders; and they attended upon the service of the temple, in rotation, by weekly courses. (Notes, 1 Chr. xxiii. 3-6. xxv. 1-6. xxvi. 6.) These were first informed by Jehoiada, that the king's son was in the temple, and that he intended to place him on the throne: and he proposed to make a solemn agreement with them before God, to which they readily acceded, and bound themselves by oath to fidelity. Perhaps Athaliah's government had grown intolerably oppressive; or Jehoiada perceived that its continuance threatened the destruction of religion: therefore the priests, and the chief of the Levites, as most immediately engaged for the support of that cause, went among their brethren, to prepare their minds to attempt a deliverance.

V. 5-9. The Levites attended in their courses every week; one company coming in on the beginning of the sabbath, and another going out at the close of it. But Jehoiada employed both companies on this occasion; such only excepted, as were necessary to perform their ordinary services.—By "the king's house" some understand the chamber in which Joash resided; others the royal palace, from which there was an entrance into the court of the temple. This was guarded by one division, to prevent a surprise; another was set to guard "the gate of Sur," or the foundation; and another to protect the temple and courts from injury; or, as the original may mean, to guard the breach, which had been made in the temple, or its out-buildings. (2 Chr. xxiv. 7.) Others of the Levites, who came in on the sabbath, were stationed to guard the king

9 And "the captains over the hundreds did according to all things that Jehoiada the priest commanded:
and they took every man his men that were to come

10 And to the captains over hundreds did the priest himself, with orders to slay any one who attempted to come within their ranks. These arrangements no doubt were supposed suitable, and sufficient to secure the temple from being polluted by the partisans of Athaliah, whilst Jehoiada and his sons were engaged in crowning and anointing Joash. (Notes, 2 Chr. xxiii. 11.)—By employing the Levites almost exclusively, all suspicion was precluded: and, as the throne belonged to the family of David, not only by hereditary succession, but by the special appointment of God; and as these rights, and all the interests of the kingdom of Judah, and even the worship of God, were basely trampled upon by a murderous, idolatrous woman, of the devoted house of Ahab; they were fully justified in these decided measures against her. Perhaps they were likewise assured of the concurrence of the people at large, when matters were ripe for their interposition.

V. 10. It is probable, that these were arms, which David had taken from his conquered enemies, and dedicated to the Lord, by way of ascribing the honour of his success to him. (Marg. Ref.) This tends to confirm the interpretation before given, concerning these captains, namely, that they were not military officers, as some suppose: but the leaders of the several courses and companies of the Levites, who did not usually wear the weapons of war. (Note, 4.)

V. 12. Coronation is not before this expressly mentioned, in the appointment of any king, either in Judah or Israel; but it seems to have been customary: for the crown, as one of the insignia of royalty, is repeatedly mentioned. (Marg. Ref.) No doubt, "the testimony" signifies the book of the law; and Joash was instructed by this significant action, that he received his authority from God, and was accountable to him for it, according to the rule of his word. He was also anointed, in token of his divine appointment to the kingdom; as Athaliah's usurpation had interrupted the succession. (Note, Ez. xxxi. 18. Marg. Ref.) When this had been done, not only the priests and Levites, but the people who had witnessed the transaction, shouted for joy, and wished their king life and prosperity. (Marg. Ref. Note, Matt. xxi. 8—11.)

V. 13—16. Athaliah, after the manner of her mother Jezebel, instead of fleeing with feminine timidity, when she heard the noise, and suspected the occasion, went directly into the temple, unattended by a guard, as if she could by her presence overawe and confound the conspirators: but by this rashness she rushed upon her death. (Note, ix. 30—37.)—The people, it seems, were assembled, perhaps to celebrate some of their solemn feasts, and they, with their princes or magistrates, cordially united with Jehoiada, and the priests and Levites. When Athaliah saw Joash stand in the place appropriated to the king's use, she was aware of what had taken place; and expressed her abhorrence of the supposed treason by word and deed, in hopes of inducing the people to take her part. But her conduct had been so odious and unnatural, that none favoured her; and at the word of Jehoiada she suffered the punishment due to her complicated crimes. Doubtless Jehoiada acted, in all this business, by the direction and according to the will of God.—The Levites seem to have executed the sentence, and great care was taken not to pollute with blood the court of the temple.

V. 17—20. Jehoiada embraced this opportunity of engaging the young king and the people, in the most solemn manner, to renew their national covenant with the Lord, that they would worship and serve him alone; as well as perform their reciprocal duties to each other in the fear of God. As the protector and near relation of Joash, he was authorized to act for him, and the whole compact was deliberately ratified, as in the presence of God, (Notes, xxiii. 3. Deut. xxix. 10—15. Josh. xxiv. 25. 2 Chr. xv. 12—15.) When this was concluded, they proceeded to destroy the worship of Baal which Athaliah had established in Judah; breaking down the idolatrous temple and images, and slaying the priest of Baal at his altars; without imitating or emulating Jehu's subtlety in detecting his worshippers. (Note, x. 18, 19.) The people were greatly rejoiced at this happy revolution, and matters were soon brought to a quiet settlement. (Notes, 2 Chr. xxiii.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—12. When the thirst of dominion predominates, it extinguishes both common humanity and natural affections, and steels the hearts of parents, yea of mothers, against their own children or descendants. Nor can the most humane conceive how they should act, if brought within the magnetic influence of powerful temptations, through opening prospects of gratifying a vast ambition, united with fear, envy, resentment, or other vehement passions. We should therefore repress the first emotions of this aspiring temper, and pray without ceasing to be kept out of the way of temptation. And we may also learn to be thankful to God, for restraining others and ourselves, from acting forth all the desperate wickedness of our hearts, which otherwise would produce effects unspeakably horrid.—What fatal consequences flow from matrimonial connexions, or intimate acquaintance, with atrocious sinners! The mischiefs, which may thus be entailed upon children and remote posterity, cannot be ascertained; and may extend even to the ruin of the interests of true religion, in those places where before it flourished. These reflections should add energy to the Lord's prohibition of these incongruous alliances. Yet, he mixes his severest judgments, upon his professed people and offending servants, with mercy: in the midst of opposition, he provides for the performance of his promises; and the extremities, to which his cause may be reduced, are permitted, to illustrate the glory of his power and truth, in preserving and recovering it.—The most successful villainy will be short-lived: and, though in that little time dreadful havoc may be made in society, and irreligion or false religion may apparently be established upon the ruins of true godliness; yet, the cause of God cannot be kept down, but, like the fabled phoenix, it will revive from its ashes with renewed youth and vigour.—One pious man may, on some emergencies, become an instrument of most extensive good: especially when regard to the glory and worship of God are united with prudent contrivance and well-concerted measures.—In urgent cases, general rules of external propriety may be dispensed with: and ministers ought always to lead the way in opposing the prevalence of wickedness, and in promoting equity, and submission to lawful governors, as well as in promoting true religion.—To what peculiar dangers are those exalted stations exposed, through the ambition, treachery, and cruelty of men! We may therefore be thankful to be placed with our families in an obscure situation, beneath envy or jealousy.—Princes should be reminded, when entrusted with authority, of their accountability to God for the use of it: and every opportunity should be embraced to enforce a conscientious regard to his word.

V. 13—21. Evil will hunt out the wicked to destroy them; and they are often hardened and infatuated to rush upon their own destruction.—The most abandoned will, on some occasions, express abhorrence at the supposed crimes of others, especially when committed against themselves: but it is neither treason, nor cruelty, to execute vengeance upon usurpers and parricides, and to restore the authority to its rightful possessors.—As "one sinner destroyeth much good;" so the removal of one ringleader in iniquity may prepare the way for great reformation.—It is our duty to engage ourselves and each other, in as firm and solemn a manner as possible, to be the Lord's people: and when we begin with a due regard to religion, relative duties will be the better understood and performed. Yet they should be plainly declared and enforced, without the exception of those which subsist betwixt the prince and

CHAP. XII.

Jehoash reigns well so long as Jehoiada lives, 1-3. He gives orders that the temple should be repaired; yet the priests neglect the service; but he provides for the expense and completes the work, 4-16. He gives the consecrated treasures to Hazael, to divert him from assaulting Jerusalem, 17, 18. He is slain by his servants, and succeeded by his son Amaziah, 19-21.

IN the seventh year of Jehu, Jehoash began to reign; and forty years reigned he in Jerusalem: and his mother's name was Zibiah of Beer-sheba.

2 And Jehoash did that which was right in the sight of the LORD all his days, wherein Jehoiada the priest instructed him.

3 But the high places were not taken away: the people still sacrificed and burnt incense in the high places.

4 ¶ And Jehoash said to the priests, All the money of the dedicated things that is brought into the house of the LORD, even the money of every one that passeth the account, the money that every man is set at, and all the money that cometh into any man's heart to bring into the house of the LORD,

5 Let the priests take it to them, every man of his acquaintance; and let them repair the breaches of the house, wheresoever any breach shall be found.

6 But it was so, that in the three and twentieth year of king Jehoash, the priests had not repaired the breaches of the house.

7 Then king Jehoash called for Jehoiada the priest, and the other priests, and said unto them, Why repair ye not the breaches of the house? now therefore receive no more money of your acquaintance, but deliver it for the breaches of the house.

8 And the priests consented to receive no more money of the people, neither to repair the breaches of the house.

9 But Jehoiada the priest took a chest, and bored a hole in the lid of it, and set it beside the altar, on the right side as one cometh into the house of the LORD: and the priests that kept the door put therein all the money that was brought into the house of the LORD.

10 And it was so, when they saw that there was much money in the chest, that the king's scribe and the high priest came up, and they put up in bags, and told the money that was found in the house of the LORD.

11 And they gave the money, being told, into the hands of them that did the work, that had the oversight of the house of the LORD: and they laid it out to the carpenters and builders, that wrought upon the house of the LORD;

12 And to masons and hewers of stone, and to buy timber and hewed stone to repair the breaches of the house of the LORD, and for all that was laid out for the house to repair it.

13 Howbeit there were not made for the house of the LORD bowls of silver, snuffers, basons, trumpets, any vessels of gold, or vessels of silver, of the money that was brought into the house of the LORD:

14 But they gave that to the workmen, and repaired therewith the house of the LORD.

15 Moreover they reckoned not with the men, into whose hand they delivered the money to be bestowed on workmen: for they dealt faithfully.

16 The trespass-money and sin-money was not brought into the house of the LORD: it was the priests'.

17 ¶ Then Hazael king of Syria went up, and fought against Gath, and took it: and Hazael set his face to go up to Jerusalem.

18 And Jehoash king of Judah took all the hallowed things that Jehoshaphat, and Jehoram, and Ahaziah, his fathers, kings of Judah, had dedicated, and his own hallowed things, and all the gold that was found in the treasures of the house of the LORD, and in the king's house, and sent it to Hazael king of Syria: and he went away from Jerusalem.

19 ¶ And the rest of the acts of Joash, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

people. The rectifying of scandalous abuses, and the punishment of notorious criminals, form an introduction to the revival of true godliness. External regularity will afterwards more easily be re-established; and the effectual blessing of God may be expected. The way for a people to be joyful and at peace is to engage cordially in the service of God; for "the voice of joy and thanksgiving is in the dwellings of the righteous:" but "There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked."

NOTES.

CHAP. XII. V. 2, 3. Jehoiada acquired such influence over Joash, or Jehoash, by his services and counsels, in his younger years, as retained him in good behaviour, so long as he lived to give him advice. But the latter part of his life, after Jehoiada's death, was extremely wicked; and all the good, of his best days, was of that kind which springs from transient convictions, and external influence, or that which hypocrites do, to be seen of men. (Notes, 2 Chr. xxiv. 17-26.) His reign however should not be numbered with those of the worst kings of Judah: for he repressed idolatry, and maintained the worship at the temple; though he did not abolish the irregular worship of God in the high places; which indeed was never done till the days of Hezekiah. (Marg. Ref. Notes, xviii. 4. 22.)

V. 4, 5. The temple had been suffered to go to decay, during the reigns of Jehoram and Ahaziah, and the usurpation of Athaliah: and her sons, doubtless encouraged by her, had impiously broken down some part of the buildings, to adorn the house of Baal with the most costly materials of the temple; as well as spoiled its consecrated treasures to enrich those of their idols. (2 Chr. xxiv. 7.) But Jehoash, having had his life preserved in the precincts of the temple, seems to have had a strong desire of seeing it restored to its ancient splendour: whilst Jehoiada perhaps was more intent to promote the internal part of true religion.—The money, which Jehoash ordered the priests to collect from the people, seems to have arisen from the sale of such firstlings as were not fit for sacrifice; from the half-shekel apiece levied of all the people; from the redemption of things dedicated; from the redemption of those who were vowed to the Lord by a singular vow; and from voluntary contributions. (Marg. Ref.)—As several of these were the dues of the priests, whose incomes must have been greatly diminished by the defection of the ten tribes; that circumstance might render them more disaffected to the business, and negligent in it.

V. 6-12. Jehoash's orders must have been very long neglected, for nothing was done effectually, till the twenty-third year of his reign, or the thirtieth of his life. It is probable, that the priests appropriated considerable sums to their own use, which they received for the repair of the temple; till the people lost all confidence in them, and would give them no more money on that account. Jehoiada himself appears to have been remiss in this affair; but his great age would necessarily render him less capable of active services. The priests, however, readily consented to the alteration proposed by Jehoash; and a proclamation having been made for the collection of a half shekel from each male above twenty years of age, (2 Chr. xxiv. 6, 9. Note, Ex. xxx. 11-16.) and a chest so placed, that the money might be either put in by those that brought it, or by the priests in their presence; large sums were soon collected, and applied by Jehoiada and the king's secretary to the repairs of the temple. (Marg. Ref.)—As the chest is said in Chronicles, to have been "set without at the gate;" and that the "princes and people cast" the money into it; it has been thought, that the chest was at first placed in the inner court, so that the money still generally passed through the hands of the priests; but that not being satisfactory, it was removed to a situation, where all had ready access to it. (2 Chr. xxiv. 8. 10.)

V. 13-15. It seems that orders were given to the workmen, that the repairs of the temple should first be completed, before any vessels were made; though it is probable these were much wanted: but when the workmen had set the temple "in its state," they punctually brought the surplus of the money to the king and Jehoiada, without requiring to be called to an account; and then such vessels were made, as had been taken away by Athaliah and her sons. (2 Chr. xxiv. 7. 14.)—Silver. (13.) (Notes, Ex. xxv. 23-30. Num. vii. 13.)

V. 16. (Marg. Ref.) Besides the money paid as amends to the priests for trespasses committed in holy things; it is thought that persons, living at a distance, sent money to them to purchase trespass-offerings and sin-offerings, and sacrifice them in their name. And, as they commonly sent more than the sacrifice cost, the surplus became a perquisite, under the name of trespass-money, and sin-money. (Hos. iv. 8.)

V. 17, 18. Probably, the expedition of Hazael, here intended, is the same as that of the Syrians, which is recorded in Chronicles, (2 Chr. xxiv. 23, 24:) and, if so, the success of it, and the calamities brought on Judah by it, were vastly greater, than this short account seems to describe them. It took place,

NOTES.

CHAP. XIII. V. 1. Joash king of Judah began to reign in the seventh year of Jehu, (xii. 1;) but it was probably in the beginning of the year; and if Jehu reigned a little above twenty-eight years, Joash might have entered on his twenty-third year, when Jehu died, and was succeeded by Jehoahaz.

V. 3. All their days. Or, "all his days;" for the word their is not in the original; and Joash the son of Jehoahaz delivered Israel from Ben-hadad. (22-25.)

V. 4. 5. Jehoahaz, while he deprecated the wrath of God, and intreated the removal of his heavy judgments, seems not to have attempted any reformation. If, however, this took place towards the conclusion of his life, his faith and repentance might not have time to produce their genuine fruits: and this is probable, as the deliverance, in answer to his prayer, was not granted till the reign of his son Joash, the saviour or deliverer, here spoken of; as it appears from the subsequent narration.—Yet some think Joash began to deliver Israel during the life of his father.

V. 6. Either the grove, which Ahab had dedicated to Baal, was still used in that idolatry, or another was planted for that purpose. (Note, xvii. 16. Deut. xvi. 21. 1 Kings xv. 13. xvi. 33.)

V. 7. 8. Jehoahaz seems to have defended himself valiantly against Hazael, though without success: this might provoke the cruelty, which Elisha had foretold; and it eventually increased the miseries of Israel. (Notes, viii. 12, 13. x. 32-36. 1 Sam. xiii. 13-15. Marg. Ref.)

V. 10. The seventeen years of Jehoahaz reach to the thirty-ninth or fortieth year of Joash king of Judah; but Jehoash of Israel began to reign in the thirty-seventh year of Joash of Judah: Jehoash must therefore have reigned some time along with his father.

V. 12. (Notes, xiv. 8-14. 2 Chr. xxv. 17-24.)

V. 14. If Elisha was called to follow Elijah, no more than seven years before the death of Ahab, and if he died as soon as Joash mounted the throne, he prophesied at least sixty-six years! From the beginning of the reign of Jehu to Elisha's sickness and death, (that is, for more than forty-five years,) his name is never once mentioned: but without doubt he was very usefully employed, especially in superintending the schools of the prophets. There is ground to conclude, that great numbers were converted to God by his labours; though the bulk of the nation conformed to the idolatry established by authority. (Note, x. 21.) Neither Jehu nor Jehoahaz paid any attention to the prophet; yet they were not persecutors, and probably they respected his character. Being, however, employed in state-affairs, and determined to maintain the idolatry of the golden calves, they were not disposed to hearken to his admonitions: and he expressed his disapprobation of their conduct by keeping at a distance. (Notes, Eph. v. 8-14. 2 Thes. iii. 6-9.) But when Joash heard that he was apparently near death, at a time when Israel was brought very low by iniquity, he seems to have considered the dispensation as a divine rebuke; and, under the prevalence of present convictions, he visited and lamented over him, in the very words which Elisha had used when Elijah was removed, (Note, ii. 12;) acknowledging him to be the chief defence of Israel, whose death would more expose them to ruin, than all Hazael's successes. Yet we read of nothing, in the character or conduct of Joash, to warrant a con-however, after Jehoash's apostasy; and he made no scruple of spoiling the temple of the remains of its treasures, to purchase Hazael's departure. (Notes, 2 Chr. xxiv. 17-22.)

V. 20, 21. The Syrians left Jehoash "in great diseases:" and his servants, (probably some relations or friends of Jehoiaha, who deeply resented the murder of his son Zachariah,) took that opportunity of slaying him, (Notes, 2 Chr. xxiv. 25-27.)—Millo seems to have been a general name of public buildings for convening the people; and this Millo in the way to Sillah, was a distinct place from Millo in the city of David. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Wise and pious instructors and counsellors are a singular benefit to young persons, especially when called to fill up important stations: and it is a happy case, when they acquire a proper influence, and make an unexceptionable use of it. Indeed, restraining men from outward crimes, and inducing them to external good actions, does not imply conversion of the heart to the love of God, and delight in his holy service; yet it prevents much mischief, and occasions extensive benefit to the community; and often precedes, and is made the means of, men's internal renovation.—A too favourable regard to customary violations of the Divine law, and the fear of consequences in making innovations, often influence pious men to let slip the favourable opportunity of effecting still greater good: nay, mere formalists have frequently exceeded true and eminent believers, in their active earnestness about the externals of religion: for, in old age especially, they are apt to yield to the love of ease and peace, or to discouragement through reiterated disappointments, and so to become remiss.—The building or repairing of convenient places for divine worship falls peculiarly within the sphere of princes and nobles; and, if done from a proper principle, it is a good work which will not lose its reward: yet many abound in such useful services, whose "hearts are not right in the sight of God."—Too often have nominal ministers been convicted of seeking their own interests, rather than those of religion. As a body, they must be suspected; and therefore should carefully avoid the appearance of this evil, lest they lose the confidence of the people, and become useless and contemptible. (Notes, Mal. i. 9-11. ii. 14-9.) It is most grievous, that the disinterested fidelity and punctuality of tradesmen and mechanics should shame the mercenary conduct of priests; or that the activity and zeal of laymen should expose the lukewarmness and indifference of the clergy! These things are not the fault of the ministerial office, but of human nature, which that office will not change. The collective body is placed in a conspicuous station, and their faults are not easily concealed; and, as more is expected from them than from others, they meet with less allowance, and indeed their misconduct admits of less excuse. It is therefore most for their own credit and comfort, and for the honour of their profession, to stand aloof from those concerns in which large sums of money are employed. (P. O. John xii. 1-8. 2 Cor. viii. 16-24.) At least all works of piety and charity should be so managed, that they who contribute to them, may be assured their money is honestly and prudently expended: and they deserve commendation, who are faithful in such matters.—May the Lord preserve us from the disgraceful and wretched doom of the hypocrite and apostate! May our "hearts be sound in his statutes;" and may our "path shine more and more unto the perfect day!"

the vessels that were found in the house of the LORD, and in the treasures of the king's house, and hostages, and returned to Samaria.

15 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Jehoash which he did, and his might, and how he fought with Amaziah king of Judah, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

16 And Jehoash slept with his fathers, and was buried in Samaria with the kings of Israel; and Jeroboam his son reigned in his stead.

17 ¶ And Amaziah the son of Joash king of Judah lived after the death of Jehoash son of Jehoahaz king of Israel fifteen years.

18 And the rest of the acts of Amaziah, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

19 Now they made a conspiracy against him in Jerusalem: and he fled to Lachish; but they sent after him to Lachish, and slew him there.

20 And they brought him on horses, and he was buried at Jerusalem with his fathers in the city of David.

21 ¶ And all the people of Judah took Azariah, (which was sixteen years old,) and made him king instead of his father Amaziah.

22 He built Elath, and restored it to Judah, after that the king slept with his fathers.

23 ¶ In the fifteenth year of Amaziah the son of Joash king of Judah, Jeroboam, the son of Joash king of Israel, began to reign in Samaria, and reigned forty and one years.

24 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD: he departed not from all the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin.

25 He restored the coast of Israel, from the entering of Hamath unto the sea of the plain, according to the word of the LORD God of Israel, which he spake by the hand of his servant Jonah, the son of Amittai, the prophet, which was of Gath-hepher.

and Levites officiated in sacrificing and burning incense. (Marg. Ref. Note, xii. 2, 3.)

V. 5, 6. Amaziah did not at first venture to punish the conspirators who had slain his father; and it seems they continued at court as if they had done no wrong, and feared no danger; having only avenged the death of Jehoia's son on Jehoash, without attempting to injure Amaziah, or deprive him of the kingdom. But when he found himself sufficiently established in authority, he very properly punished them.—These references to the very words of the law, as they now stand in the books of Moses, should not be unnoticed. (Deut. xxiv. 16.) Undoubtedly these books were extant, and well known when this history was written.

V. 7. The name which Amaziah gave to Selah, signifies Obedience to God; in which, it is probable, he referred to his conduct in dismissing the auxiliaries of Israel at the Lord's command: but his behaviour, in the whole transaction, and afterwards, very little agreed with this name. (Note, 2 Chr. xxv. 5—16.)

V. 8. The peace betwixt Judah and Israel had continued from the time of Asa, during above an hundred years: and, though the connexion with the house of Ahab had been of fatal consequence to the royal family of Judah; yet, on the whole, peace had been far more conducive to the welfare of both nations, than the ruinous wars which preceded and ensued. Perhaps Amaziah bore resentment against the family of Jehu, for the slaughter of his relations: he had also received provocations from some Israelites, whom he had engaged in his service, and sent back, having been forbidden to employ them. (Notes, 2 Chr. xxv. 6—10. 13.) Perhaps he hoped to reduce Israel again under the dominion of the family of David. But, if he had not been actuated by a vain ambition, he would have made his complaints, and demanded satisfaction, and not have sent this foolish challenge. In effect, he informed Jehoash, that he scorned to attack him at a disadvantage: but wished him to bring forth all his forces, and make a fair trial of their military skill and valour in a pitched battle. (Notes, 2 Sam. ii. 14—16. 2 Chr. xxv. 17. Prov. xlii. 10. xlii. 14. xx. 18. xxv. 8—10.)

V. 9, 10. Jehoash rebuked Amaziah's pride, with an arrogance equally unreasonable. The thistle, an useless weed, which may by chance wound the foot of the incautious passenger, was made the emblem of the kingdom of Judah, and of the ancient and honourable house of David: whilst the house of Jehu was represented as a stately cedar! Jehoash intimated, that if Amaziah, upon his casual success against the Edomites, had presumed to solicit an alliance with him, he would have considered his proposals in the same light, as if the thistle should aspire to unite families with the cedar; and the meanest of his soldiers should have chastised his insolence, and crushed him, as easily as a wild beast of the forest could trample down the thistle: how much more then, when Amaziah dared to challenge him to battle, would he bring destruction upon himself! There was, however, much good sense in Jehoash's counsel: Let Amaziah rest satisfied with the reputation which he had acquired, and not meddle without occasion with his neighbour, who was disposed to peace, lest it should terminate in the ruin and disgrace of himself and his kingdom. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 11—14. As Amaziah prepared for war, it became necessary for Jehoash to oppose him: in consequence, Amaziah's army was completely routed, many lives were thrown away, Amaziah was made prisoner, Jerusalem was taken, and its fortifications demolished. and the very temple plundered by the rapacious and profane conqueror.

V. 17—20. Jehoash, it seems, set Amaziah at liberty; and he survived Jehoash fifteen years: but the ill success of his rash expedition, rendered his people disaffected to him, which at length produced a conspiracy, or open revolt; so that when the insurgents had slain him, either they brought him themselves, or suffered him to be brought, to Jerusalem to be buried. (Notes, 2 Chr. xxv. 25—27. Marg. Ref.)

V. 21. Azariah, or Uzziah, (words of similar meaning, the one signifying The help of the Lord, and the other, the strength of the Lord,) is thought by some to have been very young, not more than four years of age, when his father was slain; and they suppose that he was not made king till about twelve years afterwards. Thus he began to reign in the twenty-seventh year of Jeroboam, though his father was slain in the fifteenth year of Jeroboam, (23. xv. 1.) But the years of Azariah's reign are reckoned from his father's death: and therefore others suppose, that Jeroboam reigned along with his father Jehoash eleven or twelve years; so that, reckoning his reign from this time, Azariah began to reign in his twenty-seventh year, though only fifteen or sixteen years after he began to reign alone. (23. xv. 1. Margins.)

V. 22. Elath. This was a town upon the Red Sea, convenient for commerce, which the Edomites, or Syrians, had taken away from the kings of Judah. It is supposed that Amaziah had taken it, when he conquered the Edomites; but had not been able to derive much advantage from it, because of subsequent troubles: and that Azariah, after Amaziah's death, rebuilt and fortified it. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 25. The various enemies of Israel had encroached on their borders, from the northern to the southern extremity of the country belonging to the ten tribes; from Lebanon to the Dead or Salt sea, which had been the plain of Sodom, but Jeroboam, encouraged by the predictions of Jonah, drove back these enemies, and recovered the country. (Preface to Jonah.)

Azariah's good reign, 1-4. He is smitten with leprosy; and Jotham, his son, governs for him, and succeeds him, 5-7. Zachariah reigns ill, and is slain by Shallum; and the fulfilment of the word of God to Jehu is noticed, 8-12. After one month, Shallum is slain, and succeeded by Menahem; who treats his opposers with savage cruelty, reigns wickedly, becomes tributary to Pul, king of Assyria; dies, and is succeeded by his son Pekahiah, 13-22. Pekahiah reigns ill, and is slain and succeeded by Pekah, 23-26. Pekah imitates the sins of his predecessor; Tiglath-pileser of Assyria, carries captive part of Israel; and Hoshea kills and succeeds Pekah, 27-31. Jotham reigns well in Judah, 32-35. He dies, and is succeeded by his son Ahaz, 36-38.

V. 26, 27. Joash had been successful, both against the Syrians and Judah. But probably, the Syrians, not being totally subdued, still carried on destructive hostilities against Israel: and the neighbouring nations, as the Moabites, Ammonites, and Edomites, made continual incursions, and plundered whatever they could seize upon; so that the most valuable treasures of the Israelites were pillaged; they who seemed to have taken refuge in the safest places were destroyed, and there were none to help them. But as the time for their final dispersion was not yet come, the Lord saved them by the hand of Jeroboam, notwithstanding his idolatries.—(Blot out, (27,) Notes, Ex. xxxii. 30-33. Deut. xix. 20-25.)

V. 28. Damascus and Hamath belonged to Judah, in the reigns of David and Solomon: (Notes, 2 Sam. viii. 3-11. 1 Kings iv. 21;) and Jeroboam so effectually subdued the Syrians, that he obtained possession of them for Israel; which is called recovering them, because, though divided in government, Judah and Israel were still to be considered as one people.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-14. Many appear righteous unto men, whose inward parts are very wickedness, and whose base conduct at length betrays their hypocrisy. Yet the Lord gives due commendation to the actions which accord to his law, because thus far they honour him.—Where his judgments are most evidently righteous, the wickedness of the instruments may deserve punishment by the sword of the magistrate: and the Judge of all the earth may do many things consistently with his justice, which would not become short-sighted feeble mortals. It will appear, however, in the day of final retributions that no one has suffered who did not deserve it, and that none perish but for their own sins.—Unsatisfied success increases pride; pride excites contentions; and these are the sources of trouble and iniquity in private life: but when they arise between princes, they become the misery of whole kingdoms; and the blood of thousands is lightly esteemed by vain-glorious mortals, who seek to be admired and extolled by men as foolish and worthless as themselves.—The effects of pride in others are often insufferable, even to those who are proud themselves; and all naturally delight in expressing contempt for such as avowedly aim to outshine their neighbours.—We might smile at the ridiculous methods, which proud worms take to vaunt themselves, and to vilify their rivals for fame, did not the fatal effects of such competitions call for our lamentations: and the vain boasting of those who follow peace, are most tolerable, because most harmless. But did men consider from whom, and for what, their talents and successes were given, and how prone they are to abuse them; and did they understand how mean, guilty, and polluted man is, at his best estate, their boastings must needs be excluded. In reality all the distinctions betwixt one sinful worm and another would not be worth noting, except for the sake of relative obligations, and the peace of society; but what images can shadow forth the absurdity and madness of those, who by their daring crimes seem to challenge the Almighty to the conflict, and to rush upon the thick bosses of his buckler? Or, who could have conceived such an amity and union, as the Lord invites us worthless sinners to enter into with himself, through the mysterious union of the divine and human nature in our Emmanuel?—In all our undertakings we should previously consider our ability to accomplish them: and rather rest satisfied with moderate advantages, or inferior reputation, than risk the consequences of beginning what we are not able to finish, which is indeed to "meddle to our hurt": (Note, Luke xiv. 28-33.) But caution is especially needful, when, if we fail of success, we cannot suffer alone, but must involve many in our calamities. and they who will not take fair warning and good advice, even from an insulting enemy, may too late wish they had.

V. 15-29. Wicked princes and nations are frequently successful, because opposed by others more guilty than themselves.—The proud are often visited with most humiliating providences; and, if not humbled by them, their destruction is inevitable. Yet even in those places, where ungodliness is generally prevalent, the Lord takes notice of the extreme bitterness under which men groan, and spares them from time to time, that his goodness may lead them to repentance. Especially is he thus long-suffering to those nations, where he hath a remnant of true believers. But the lives and successes of wicked men are contracted within narrow limits, and they are soon "driven away in their wickedness," one after another. And though the Lord will never blot out the name of his true Israel from under heaven, but will always raise them up helpers, that the enemy may never prevail against his cause on earth: yet there is an appointed period to his patience and long suffering; beyond which he will no longer bear with impenitent sinners, corrupt professing churches, or wicked nations; but will proceed to deal with them according to the most awful denunciations of his holy word.

NOTES.

CHAP. XV. V. 1. (Marg. Notes, xiv. 21.) V. 2-7. (Notes, 2 Chr. xxvi.)

V. 8. Amaziah reigned fifteen years after Jeroboam came to the crown of Israel, (xiv. 17;) so that the death of Jeroboam, who reigned forty-one years, coincided with the twenty-sixth or twenty-seventh year of Azariah. An interregnum of about eleven years must therefore be allowed for, in the kingdom of Israel, between the death of Jeroboam and the succession of his son; either because of his youth, or through the factious temper of the people. (Margin.)

V. 12. Notwithstanding the wickedness of Israel, and the persevering idolatry of Jehu and his descendants, the Lord would not proceed to execute vengeance upon them till the predicted period; (Note, x. 29-31. Marg. Ref.) and bad as Jehu's family was, the times, during which they reigned, were by far the best that Israel experienced, from their separation from the family of David to their final dispersion.

16 ¶ Then Menahem smote ^bTipsah, and all that were therein, and the coasts thereof from Tirzah: because they opened not to him, therefore he smote it; and ^call the women therein that were with child he ripped up.

20 And ⁱMenahem exacted the money of Israel, even of all ^kthe mighty men of wealth, of each man fifty shekels of silver, to give to the king of Assyria: so the king of Assyria turned back, and ^lstayed not there in the land.

21 ¶ And ^mthe rest of the acts of Menahem, and all that he did, ⁿare they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

of Judah, ^aPekah the son of Remaliah began to reign over Israel in Samaria, and reigned twenty years.

28 And he did that which was ^eevil in the sight of the LORD; he departed not from the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin.

29 ¶ In the days of Pekah king of Israel came ^fTiglath-pileser king of Assyria, and took ^gIjon, ^hand ⁱAbel-beth-maachah, and ^jJanoah, and ^kKedesh, and ^lHazor, and ^mGilead, and ⁿGalilee, all the land of Naphtali, and ^ocarried them captive to Assyria.

30 ¶ And Hoshea the son of Elah ^pmade a conspiracy against Pekah the son of Remaliah, ^qand smote him, and slew him, and ^rreigned in his stead, ^sin ^tthe twentieth year of Jotham the son of Uzziah.

31 And the rest of the acts of Pekah, and all that he did, behold, they are written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel.

32 ¶ In the second year of Pekah, the son of Remaliah king of Israel, began ^uJotham the son of ^vUzziah king of Judah to reign.

33 Five and twenty years old was he when he began to reign, and he reigned sixteen years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was ^wJerusha the daughter of Zadok.

34 And he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD: he did ^xaccording to all that his father Uzziah had done.

35 Howbeit ^ythe high places were not removed: the people sacrificed and burned incense still in the high places. He built ^zthe higher gate of the house of the LORD.

36 ¶ Now ^athe rest of the acts of Jotham, and all that he did, ^bare they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

37 In those days the LORD ^cbegan ^dto send against Judah ^eRezin the king of Syria, and ^fPekah the son of Remaliah.

38 And ^gJotham slept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David his father: and ^hAhaz his son reigned in his stead.

V. 16. This savage barbarity was exercised by Menahem against the inhabitants of those cities which did not immediately submit to his usurped authority.—Things were now hastening to a fatal crisis in the kingdom of the ten tribes. After the death of Elisha, true religion evidently began to decline; and neither the labours, nor the writings, of the succeeding prophets could stop the rapid increase of immorality, idolatry, or profaneness, which inundated that people. This chapter gives such an account of their public affairs, as will afford the attentive reader great assistance in understanding the writings of those prophets who lived during that period, viz. Isaiah, Hoshea, Micah, and Amos. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 19, 20. The king of Assyria, coming to invade Israel, seems to have found the people much disaffected to Menahem, who must have been odious for his cruelties; but he, having made submission to Pul, and engaged for the payment of one thousand talents of silver, (nearly four hundred thousand pounds,) obtained his assistance in subjugating the Israelites, and was thus confirmed in the kingdom; and then by force he extorted the money from his richer subjects. Thus the kingdom was impoverished, and the people exasperated; and that powerful prince, having been so well paid for invading the land, left an example to his successors, which they followed till they had totally desolated the country.—The kingdom of Assyria is here mentioned, for the first time, after the building of Nineveh by Nimrod. (Note, Gen. x. 8—12.) And this shews, that the history, given by many writers, of a very prosperous and vast monarchy, lasting for much above a thousand years previous to this time, is in great measure a romance. David and Solomon met with no opposition from the kings of Assyria, in establishing their kingdom, even to the Euphrates. Nor is Assyria once mentioned in their history. Assur indeed helped the Moabites, Ammonites, and Edomites, on some occasion. (Note, Ps. lxxviii. 8.) But it seems that Nineveh had by this time become a very great city, and no doubt the king of Nineveh had a considerable territory. (Jon. i. 2. iii. 3, 4. iv. 11.) And some think that Pul was the king, when Jonah prophesied against Nineveh. It is not however, agreed, whether he was one of the ancient line of the Assyrian kings; or whether he was one of those who effected that revolution, which, all allow, took place about this time; and so the father of Tiglath-pileser. The latter indeed seems most probable: but such darkness and uncertainty rest on this part of ancient history, that the most learned men differ exceedingly in their opinions on the subject. (Note, 2 Chr. xxviii. 16.)

V. 25. It does not clearly appear, whether Argob, Arieah, and the fifty Gileadites, were slain with the king; or whether they were conspirators with Pekah.

V. 29. Pul seems to have carried captive some of the people that dwelt to the east of Jordan: (1 Chr. v. 26:) and Tiglath-pileser, who is, with great probability, thought to have been his son and successor, carried captive a considerable number of the inhabitants of the northern parts of the land, as well as of the districts to the east of Jordan.—Thus the prophecies, in this respect, had a gradual accomplishment. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 30. In the twentieth, &c. That is, the twentieth year from Jotham's accession; for he reigned only sixteen years. (33;) and Hoshea succeeded Pekah in the fourth year of Ahaz; though he was not established in the kingdom till the twelfth year of that king. It is also evident from the whole narrative, that Ahaz reigned over Judah some time before the death of Pekah. (Note, xvii. 1. Marg. Ref.)—In respect of many of these difficulties in settling the chronology, (which infidels vainly magnify into objections against the sacred history,) it may be proper to observe, that no writer wilfully contradicts himself within a few lines; and therefore some solution of the difficulty should be sought, and must exist, whether our information enable us to solve it or not.

V. 37. In the days of Jotham, those designs of Rezin and Pekah were formed, and in some degree carried into effect, which became for more formidable during the reign of Ahaz. (Note, 2 Chr. xxviii. 1—15. Is. vii. 1—9.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—12. The study of history has a tendency to render the reflecting person thankful even for a mediocrity of character, in those placed in authority; and to dispose him to bear patiently many evident faults in the administration of public affairs. For as every thing may be estimated by comparison; and as the history of the world exhibits by far the greater part of princes desperately wicked, and the people exposed to every kind of misery, in consequence of their ambition, cruelty, and tyranny, or the contests betwixt rivals for power: so, we may repress our murmurs under slighter grievances, by reflecting with grateful satisfaction on our exemption from flagrant oppressions. In this view, we seem to congratulate Judah, under the peaceful reigns of Azariah and Jotham, as that kingdom was very highly favoured; compared with the distracted state of Israel, under a succession of bloody murderers, usurpers,

CHAP. XVI.

Ahaz reigns very wickedly, 1-4. Rezin and Pekah war against him; and Rezin takes Elath, 5, 6. Ahaz hires Tiglath-pileser against them, who takes Damascus and slays Rezin, 7-9. Ahaz sends a pattern of an altar from Damascus; and Urijah, the high priest, makes one like it for burnt-offerings; reserving the brazen altar for Ahaz to enquire by, 10-16. Ahaz spoils the temple for the king of Assyria, 18. He dies, and is succeeded by his son Hezekiah, 19, 20.

IN the seventeenth year of Pekah the son of Remaliah, Ahaz the son of Jotham king of Judah began to reign.

2 Twenty years old was Ahaz when he began to reign, and reigned sixteen years in Jerusalem, and did not that which was right in the sight of the LORD his God, like David his father.

3 But he walked in the way of the kings of Israel: yea, and made his son to pass through the fire, according to the abominations of the heathen, whom the LORD cast out from before the children of Israel.

4 And he sacrificed and burnt incense in the high places, and on the hills, and under every green tree.

5 ¶ Then Rezin king of Syria, and Pekah son of Remaliah king of Israel, came up to Jerusalem to war: and they besieged Ahaz, but could not overcome him.

6 At that time Rezin king of Syria recovered Elath to Syria, and drove the Jews from Elath: and the Syrians came to Elath, and dwelt there unto this day.

7 ¶ So Ahaz sent messengers to Tiglath-pileser king of Assyria, saying, I am thy servant, and thy son: come up, and save me out of the hand of the king of Syria, and out of the hand of the king of Israel, which rise up against me.

king of Assyria, saying, "I am thy servant, and thy son: come up, and save me out of the hand of the king of Syria, and out of the hand of the king of Israel, which rise up against me.

8 And Ahaz took the silver and gold that was found in the house of the LORD, and in the treasures of the king's house, and sent it for a present to the king of Assyria.

9 And the king of Assyria hearkened unto him; for the king of Assyria went up against Damascus, and took it, and carried the people of it captive to Kir, and slew Rezin.

10 ¶ And king Ahaz went to Damascus to meet Tiglath-pileser king of Assyria, and saw an altar that was at Damascus: and king Ahaz sent to Urijah the priest the fashion of the altar, and the pattern of it, according to all the workmanship thereof.

11 And Urijah the priest built an altar according to all that king Ahaz had sent from Damascus: so Urijah the priest made it against king Ahaz came from Damascus.

12 And when the king was come from Damascus, the king saw the altar; and the king approached to the altar, and offered thereon.

and tyrants. And if the inhabitants of our land of liberty and peace can read this narration, without forgetting their imaginary or trivial causes for complaint, or without blessing God for their mercies, and praying for their rulers, and the continuance of our distinguishing privileges; they cannot be acquitted from the charge of base ingratitude.—But with regret we must observe, that such is the depraved tendency of human nature to evil, that revivals in religion are commonly transient: whereas corruptions endure from age to age, and few good men have at once power and courage effectually to remove them. For great defects are found even in godly persons: and, though they are graciously accepted, as to their eternal state, they are often in this world marked with the tokens of God's displeasure for particular offences, by which they have dishonoured him; nor can any situation prevent these effects of sin.—When persons in authority are incapacitated from the duties of their high station, it is peculiarly happy, for them and for the public, when they have children who, like Jotham, are disposed and qualified to fill up their places, and to enter into their views of serving God, and doing good to the people; and who can give satisfaction both to them and to the community.—The imperfections of true believers are very different from the allowed, habitual, and pertinacious wickedness of ungodly men. In the former, the remains indeed of depravity are visible, and occasionally break forth into evident evil: but in the latter case, when restraints of conscience, regard to reputation, fear of human laws, and want of power, are surmounted, the desperate wickedness of the heart, like an impetuous torrent which hath burst its banks, bears down all opposition, and spreads devastation all around.

V. 13-38. The words concerning Jeroboam, so often repeated, for ages after his death, that "he made Israel to sin," should impress our minds with dread and horror, at the thought of tempting others to wickedness; as it can never be known how extensively or durably the mischief may spread. For, however ungodly men may disagree in all other things, they perfectly accord in either utterly neglecting religion, or in making it a state-engine, or in some way subservient to their selfish projects: and the most notorious and detestable idolatries and superstitions have, in many kingdoms, been supported by authority from generation to generation, through successive revolutions in the government, by those who in their hearts despised the whole system which they patronized.—When the gratification of ambition, avarice, revenge, or lust, requires, there is no conceivable kind or degree of treachery and barbarity, which men may not be tempted to commit: yet the madness of such persons equals their wickedness, for repeated examples of the fatal ends of those, who through blood have waded to a throne, will not deter them from pressing forward in the same way, and mounting the slippery pre-eminence, to be thence hurried by a violent death to a premature grave! We should then be thankful for external restraints, and for being kept out of temptation; and beg of God incessantly to "create in us a clean heart, and renew a right spirit within us:" and may he help us to seek that honour which cometh from him, to those who "do good in their generation;" and to dread that greatness, which is obtained and secured by doing mischief and diffusing misery. Yet in these horrid scenes, the truth and justice of God are manifest. They perfectly accord to the character of human nature given in the Scriptures, and form a confirmation of their divine original.—"For the wickedness of the land many are the princes thereof;" whose crimes and sufferings are the punishment of the sins both of the governors and governed. (Note, Prov. xxviii. 2.) "A man that doeth violence to the blood of any person, shall flee to the pit; let no man stay him." (Note, Prov. xxviii. 17.) For a time, wicked men may prosper, to execute the vengeance of God on other sinners, and then others will be raised up to execute vengeance on them; as criminals, or the refuse of society, have often been employed for public executioners.—The most innocent sufferers from man's wickedness must plead guilty before God, and may often read his just displeasure in the injustice and cruelty of their oppressors.—Proud men cannot endure contradiction, and the ambitious are exasperated by opposition: yet often, in aiming at independence and supreme authority, they crouch with the basest submissions, and bring themselves into the most abject dependence on strangers and enemies, who from mercenary motives, at first assist, and then enslave, them. Death in various forms hurries men to God's judgment-seat: the righteous are then taken from the evil to come, and enter into rest; and it is a mercy to be spared the anguish of witnessing the miseries that are coming on corrupted churches and nations. But the wicked are stopped in their career, that they may do no more mischief, and "their lamp is put out in utter darkness." May we live the life of faith and holiness, and die the death of the righteous, that "an entrance may be ministered to us abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ!"

NOTES.

CHAP. XVI. V. 3, 4. Ahaz imitated the kings of Israel, in worshipping idols, and rebelling against the Lord. It is said in Chronicles, that he "burnt his children in the fire," and here that he "made his son to pass through the fire," to consecrate him to the demon which he worshipped. (2 Chr. xxviii. 1-4. Notes, Lev. xviii. 21. xx. 2-5.) In short, he copied the crimes of the Canaanites, whom God had destroyed by Israel; (Note, Lev. xviii. 24-30:) and not only allowed, but set the people an example of, a variety of idolatrous practices. Hezekiah was born some years before the death of Jotham; if he was the son here intended, he was past his infancy at the time. (Note, xviii. 2.) He, however, proved an eminently pious prince, and an entire contrast to his most wicked father. (Notes, xviii.—xx.)

V. 5. The Lord brought these enemies against Ahaz for his crimes: their successes, and the miseries of Judah, were very great, immense numbers being slain and taken prisoners; and Ahaz was extremely terrified. But they could not take Jerusalem, dethrone Ahaz, and destroy the family of David, as they had intended: for this was contrary to the purpose, the promises, and the prophecies of God. (Notes, 2 Chr. xxviii. 5-19. Ps. lxxvi. 10. Is. vii. 1-9.)

V. 6. (Note, xiv. 22.)—The word "Jews" is here first used. It is literally the Judeans; that is, the men of Judah; as all those, who adhered to the family of David, were called, to distinguish them from the subjects of the kings who reigned over the ten tribes, called Israel.—The general custom, of calling the nation of Israel, Jews, even in the preceding ages, is inaccurate and unscriptural.

V. 7-9. (Notes, xv. 19, 20, 29.) As the king of Assyria brought Ahaz into abject dependence on him, and both weakened him and drained his treasury, it is said that "he distressed him, but strengthened him not." (2 Chr. xxviii. 20, 21.) though he averted the present storm.—From this time Syria ceased to be a kingdom: and the region formed successively a part of the kingdom of Assyria, of Chaldea, or of Persia; till it was subjugated by Alexander the Great; after whose death, a new kingdom of Syria was formed, which, with all his other dominions, at length became a part of the Roman empire. (Note, Dan. vii. 6.)

V. 10-16. (Notes, 2 Chr. xxv. 14-16. xxviii. 22, 23.) Ahaz sacrificed to the gods of the vanquished Syrians, perhaps when he went to Damascus to congratulate Tiglath-pileser on his success. There he saw an altar, in the temple of some of their idols, which appeared to him more magnificent, or convenient, than that which Solomon had made according to the will of God. At the command of Ahaz, with which he sent a model of the altar from Damascus, probably adorned by many figures of idols, the wretched high priest, Urijah, without scruple or hesitation, prepared one like it, with which he

14 And he brought also the brazen altar which was before the LORD, from the forefront of the house, from between the altar and the house of the LORD, and put it on the north side of the altar.

15 And king Ahaz commanded Urijah the priest, saying, Upon the great altar burn the morning-burnt-offering, and the evening-meat-offering, and the king's burnt-sacrifice, and his meat-offering, with the burnt-offering of all the people of the land, and their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings; and sprinkle upon it all the blood of the burnt-offering, and all the blood of the sacrifice: and the brazen altar shall be for me to enquire by.

16 Thus did Urijah the priest, according to all that king Ahaz commanded.

17 ¶ And king Ahaz cut off the borders of the bases, and removed the laver from off them; and took down the sea from off the brazen oxen that were under it, and put it upon a pavement of stones:

18 And the covert for the sabbath that they had built in the house, and the king's entry without, turned he from the house of the LORD, for the king of Assyria.

19 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Ahaz, which he profaned the court of the temple; and when Ahaz returned, the altar of God was removed to make way for it. It is uncertain whether sacrifices were offered to the gods of Damascus on this altar, or whether the oblations were presented to JEHOVAH alone.—It seems, that Ahaz pretended to convert the former altar into an oracle, at which he might enquire: as the church of Rome, by adorning the host, has converted the Lord's supper into the most absurd and detestable idolatry, under the pretence of honouring it. (Note, xviii. 4.) Some, however, think, that Ahaz only meant, that he would take advice what to do with the altar: and tradition reports that he demolished it, and made a sundial, (called the sundial of Ahaz,) of the brass. (xx. 11.) In the whole transaction the high priest was willing to oblige the king by servile compliances; and did not, as far as it appears, need either menaces, or promises, or even bribes, to procure his concurrence! (Note, 2 Chr. xxvi. 16—23.)

V. 17, 18. Ahaz pillaged and defaced the temple, and its courts, and sacred utensils, in various ways, either to supply his necessities with the plunder, or to express his enmity against the worship of the Lord. (2 Chr. xxviii. 24, 25.) The covert of the sabbath, and the entry, seem to have been accommodations for the king and his attendants to repair to the temple-service. To please the king of Assyria, who it is probable paid him a visit, he turned these another way, or to other uses. (Notes, 1 Kings x. 5. Ez. xlvi. 1—3.)

V. 20. Ahaz died young; and it has been observed, that no king of Judah reached David's age of seventy years, though some of them reigned longer than he had done: but the age of Asa is not recorded.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The word of God affords abundant encouragement to pious parents to give their children good instructions, enforced by good examples, and to pray for them: and these means are so generally made effectual, as sufficiently to verify the proverb, "Train up a child in the way he should go; and when he is old, he will not depart from it." (Note, Prov. xxii. 6.) Yet there are exceptions recorded in the Scriptures, to remind us, that every man is born in sin, and that the grace of God alone can change the heart; in order that we may expect the blessing from him only. On the other hand, some who have been, as it were, early dedicated to Satan, and initiated into his service, have, by the victorious grace of God, been made eminent examples of faith and piety: and every accurate observer of mankind, in places favoured with the light of the gospel, has remarked instances of both.—The infatuated slaves of sin heedlessly proceed in those paths, whence others have been hurried into destruction. But we need not wonder that men violate the law of God, in the indulgence of their natural passions, when they cannot be restrained from disobeying him, in the most unnatural cruelty to themselves and their own children: nor should the insolence and obstinacy of prosperous sinners excite astonishment; seeing so many sin more and more, whilst severely suffering under the effects of former crimes!—Such is man's carnal enmity against God, that he will have recourse to any expedient, or make the most abject submission to his fellow-worms, rather than humble himself before him, and seek help from him! But the relief thus obtained, tends to enfeeble and enslave men the more; and it often accelerates, as well as increases, that ruin which it seemed to retard.—Our natural propensity to some sort of religion is not easily extinguished: but, except it be regulated according to the word, and by the Spirit, of God, it produces the most absurd superstitions, or the most detestable idolatries; or at best quiets the sinner's conscience, and amuses his mind, with a round of unmeaning ceremonies, frequently connected with the most immoral practices. Even infidels have been remarkable for credulity; and the capacity of believing, when not exercised on the truth, frequently embraces the most ridiculous falsehoods. But whether kings are impious, or superstitious, or infidel, or sacrilegious, they generally meet with priests of their own stamp, who court their favour by assisting their iniquities or idolatries! Yet such mercenary time-servers and men-pleasers, who bear the name and wear the garb of ministers,

CHAP. XVII.

Hoshea becomes tributary to Shalmaneser, conspires with the king of Egypt against him, and is shut up in prison by the king of Assyria, 1—4. Shalmaneser besieges Samaria, after three years takes it, and carries Israel captive into Assyria and Media, 5, 6. The crimes, which brought this punishment from God on his people, 7—23. The strange nations, planted in Israel, are plagued by lions, 24, 25: but, instructed by a priest of Israel, in the worship of the Lord, they serve him along with their own idols, 26—41.

IN the twelfth year of Ahaz king of Judah began Hoshea the son of Elah to reign in Samaria over Israel nine years.

2 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, but not as the kings of Israel that were before him.

3 ¶ Against him came up Shalmaneser king of Assyria; and Hoshea became his servant, and gave him presents.

4 And the king of Assyria found conspiracy in Hoshea: for he had sent messengers to So king of Egypt, and brought no present to the king of Assyria, as he had done year by year; therefore the king of Assyria shut him up, and bound him in prison.

are guilty of a greater breach of trust, and the prostitution of a more sacred character, than even the wicked princes whom they flatter and embolden in their sins: as their conduct is, in the highest degree, dishonourable to God and ruinous to man, they merit the deepest contempt and detestation; and assuredly they will "receive the greater damnation," except by a miracle of grace they are brought to repentance.—The arrogant self-wisdom, which induces men to new-model divine ordinances after their own vain imaginations, is insufferably provoking to that "God who resisteth the proud;" and that external magnificence which carnal minds affect in his worship, obscures the real glory of heavenly things, excites false ideas of the Divine character, and turns men aside from that spiritual service, which alone the Lord accepts and delights in. (Notes, John iv. 21—24.) Thus, new ways of worshipping God very speciously introduce gross idolatries; as the church of Israel, and that of Rome, among other examples, have abundantly evinced. But when men forsake God, they forsake their own mercies: and if they, who have been trained up in the ways of God, forsake his house and ordinances; and, affecting to be wiser than their pious parents, turn things into another channel; associate with more fashionable companions; and seek to acquire the favour, assistance, or commendation of ungodly men; there is reason to fear that sudden destruction is coming upon them, from which they shall by no means escape. (Notes, xxi. 1—3. 1 Kings xii. 6—15. Ec. ii. 18—23.)

NOTES.

CHAP. XVII. V. 1. (Note, xv. 30.) During more than eight years after the slaughter of Pekah, Hoshea was kept out of possession of the kingdom, or was unsettled in it: and the years of his reign are reckoned from his establishment on the throne, and not from the death of his predecessor.

V. 2. We are told by the Jewish writers, that the golden calf had before this been carried away from Dan, (Notes, Hos. x. 5—8;) that Hoshea did not enforce that idolatry as his predecessors had done; and that he allowed the Israelites, who were so disposed, to go up to Jerusalem to worship. He, however, did "evil in the sight of the Lord;" though he was not in all respects so vile as his predecessors. Whether an idolater, or not, he was ungodly; and his murder of Pekah, and usurpation of the kingdom, merited the punishment which he endured: whilst the people were fully ripe for destruction; and the guilt, which had been accumulating for ages, was punished in that generation. (Notes, Zech. v. 5—11. P. O.)—In finally destroying the kingdom of Israel, during the time of that king, who was less wicked than the rest; the Lord shewed, that he punished the crimes of the people at large, and not those of their princes only, as many might be ready to imagine. (Note, 2 Sam. xxiv. 1, 2.)

V. 3. It is most probable that Shalmaneser was the son of Tiglath-pileser.—Menahem had given his predecessor Pul footing in the land, and encouragement to come again, by raising a large sum of money for him, and by rendering his kingdom dependent on him. Ahaz king of Judah likewise, by purchasing the help of Tiglath-pileser, had procured the destruction of the kingdom of Syria, which was of small extent and force, compared with that of Assyria: and thus every rampart was broken down, which could exclude the Assyrians from the land of Israel and Judah. (Notes, xv. 19, 20. xvi. 7—9.)

V. 4. So, is supposed to be the same person as is called Sabacus, or Sabacon, in pagan writers. He was king of Ethiopia; but he invaded Egypt, took possession of the kingdom, and reigned there for a long term of years.—About this time, or rather earlier, the rivalry began betwixt the kings of Egypt, and the monarchs of different nations, who successively were powerful in Asia, to the north, or north-east of Canaan; which, lying betwixt the contending powers, was for many ages brought into dependence on the one or the other of them. (Notes, 2 Chr. xxxv. 20—24. Dan. xi. 5. Zech. ix. 8.) But the people, contrary to the commands of God, were more disposed to unite with the Egyptians, than with any of their opponents.—Had Hoshea endeavoured to effect a thorough

5 ¶ Then the king of Assyria came up throughout all the land, and went up to Samaria, and besieged it three years.

6 In the ninth year of Hoshea, the king of Assyria took Samaria, and carried Israel away into Assyria, and placed them in Halah and in Habor by the river of Gozan, and in the cities of the Medes.

7 For so it was, that the children of Israel had sinned against the LORD their God, which had brought them up out of the land of Egypt, from under the hand of Pharaoh king of Egypt, and had feared other gods,

8 And walked in the statutes of the heathen, whom the LORD cast out from before the children of Israel, and of the kings of Israel, which they had made.

9 And the children of Israel did secretly those things that were not right, against the LORD their God, and they built them high places in all their cities, from the tower of the watchmen to the fenced city.

10 And they set them up images and groves in every high hill, and under every green tree:

11 And there they burnt incense in all the high places, as did the heathen whom the LORD carried away before them; and wrought wicked things to provoke the LORD to anger.

12 For they served idols, whereof the LORD had said unto them, Ye shall not do this thing.

13 Yet the LORD testified against Israel, and against Judah, by all the prophets, and by all the seers, saying, Turn ye from your evil ways, and keep my commandments, and my statutes, according to all the law which I commanded your fathers, and which I sent to you by my servants the prophets.

reformation in Israel; and then, in dependence on God, had he openly attempted to shake off every foreign yoke, he might possibly have succeeded. But the manner, in which he attempted to change one yoke for another, without returning to the Lord, or seeking his assistance, formed a mixture of perfidy, impolicy, and ungodliness; and proved the immediate occasion of his ruin and that of his people.—It seems probable, that Shalmaneser by some means took Hoshea prisoner, before he laid siege to Samaria; and that Hoshea ended his days in a prison. His name is the same with that, by which Joshua was at first called; (Note, Num. xiii. 16 :) so that the settlement of Israel in Canaan, and their expulsion from it, occurred under the government of persons originally of the same name!

V. 5, 6. The inhabitants of Samaria doubtless endured great extremities, in the long siege and terrible destruction of the city: but the brevity of the sacred historian seems significantly to intimate, that the Lord did not now notice their affliction, as he had done before the measure of their iniquities was filled. (Notes, xiv. 26. 27. xviii. 8-10. Hos. vii. 7, 8. x. 14, 15. xiii. 15, 16. Mic. i. 5-7.)—When Shalmaneser had taken Samaria, and become absolute master of the whole land, he formed the project of changing the inhabitants, and in part accomplished it; but it was more fully completed by Esarhaddon, his grandson, several years afterwards. (Ezra iv. 2.) It is, however, here spoken of by anticipation. Yet, at the last, it seems, that some of the poorer Israelites were left in the land, many of whom were incorporated with the new inhabitants. (2 Chr. xxxiv. 6, 7.) But, as the northern part of the country, called Galilee, was, in the time of Christ, inhabited by persons acknowledged to be of the seed of Israel, who went up to Jerusalem to worship; whilst the middle of the country was occupied by the Samaritans, who were of another origin and religion; it is probable that the new inhabitants did not so fully occupy the northern, as the middle, parts of the land.—Probably, the Israelites, who were carried captive to a great distance, in the dominions of the conqueror, were chiefly incorporated among the nations: yet some of them seem to have retained the knowledge of their original, and of part of their religion; and either to have returned with their brethren after the Babylonish captivity, or to have united with those Jews, who were afterwards dispersed in many different countries of the world. (Note, Ezra ii. 64. Luke ii. 36.)—Some, however, think, that incorporated bodies of them are still existing.

V. 7-11. The iniquities of Israel were many and aggravated: but their apostasy from God to idolatry formed the violation of the national covenant. The Lord had, as it were, graciously espoused them to himself; but this spiritual adultery excited his jealousy; and, by persisting in it, they provoked him to give them a writing of divorcement, and to put them away. 14 Notwithstanding they would not hear, but hardened their necks, like to the neck of their fathers, that did not believe in the LORD their God.

15 And they rejected his statutes, and his covenant that he made with their fathers, and his testimonies which he testified against them, and they followed vanity, and became vain, and went after the heathen that were round about them, concerning whom the LORD had charged them, that they should not do like them.

16 And they left all the commandments of the LORD their God, and made them molten images, even two calves, and made a grove, and worshipped all the host of heaven, and served Baal.

17 And they caused their sons and their daughters to pass through the fire, and used divination and enchantments, and sold themselves to do evil in the sight of the LORD, to provoke him to anger.

18 Therefore the LORD was very angry with Israel, and removed them out of his sight: there was none left but the tribe of Judah only.

19 Also Judah kept not the commandments of the LORD their God, but walked in the statutes of Israel which they made.

20 And the LORD rejected all the seed of Israel, and afflicted them, and delivered them into the hand of spoilers, until he had cast them out of his sight.

21 For he rent Israel from the house of David: and they made Jeroboam the son of Nebat king: and Jeroboam drave Israel from following the LORD, and made them sin a great sin.

6-11.) They had, as a nation, experienced his power and love in delivering them from Egypt, and giving them Canaan; and they had witnessed, and executed, his vengeance upon the idolatrous Canaanites: yet, in disobedience to express and repeated commandments, they had ungratefully and absurdly worshipped their idols. They had also willingly obeyed the orders of idolatrous kings to worship the golden calves and Baalim. (Note, Hos. v. 11, 12.) They had also committed much secret idolatry, in addition to that which was established by law; and especially they had worshipped the sun, moon, and stars, which as the hosts, or armies, of God, stationed in the visible heavens, are employed to fulfil his will; (Note, Deut. iv. 19:) and finally, they so multiplied their temples, or altars, that they were found in every village, and at every shepherd's lodge, where he watched his flocks and fruits. (Is. i. 8. Note, Hos. xii. 10, 11.) as well as in the fenced cities; so that at length the predicted and denounced judgments came upon them. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 12-14. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Neh. ix. 29. Zech. i. 5, 6.) The people rejected the testimonies of God which he testified against them; and they did not believe in him, or depend on him for protection, according to his promises. Thus they hoped to sin with impunity, and concluded that the service of the Lord would be unprofitable.—“To harden the neck” is a metaphor taken from the stiffness of the neck of an ox, when with his full strength he resists the attempts of the husbandmen to put the yoke upon him, or to bring him to draw in it: and it aptly represents the self-will, earnestness, and stubbornness, with which the presumptuous sinner sets himself to rebel against God, in the midst of warnings, convictions, judgments, and mercies. (Note, 2 Chr. xxx. 6-9. Prov. xxix. 1. Is. xlviii. 3-5.)

V. 15. Vain. By making and worshipping lifeless images, the people became senseless, like unto them: and by worshipping imagined deities under these images, they learned to imitate all the vices ascribed to those demons. Thus among the Greeks and Romans, the worshippers of Bacchus revelled in intemperance, those of Venus rioted in licentiousness, and those of Mars delighted in shedding human blood: the case is the same with modern idolaters. By worshipping Satan under all these names, they were conformed to the very nature, and imbibed all the hateful qualities, of that arch-apostate and rebel. (Note, Rom. i. 24-32.)

V. 16. It is evident, that the word, rendered a grove, and groves, means some kind of image set up in the temples originally built in groves; and not the trees which formed the grove. (10. Notes, xxi. 7. 1 Kings xiv. 22-24.)

V. 17. (Note, xvi. 3. 4. Marg. Ref.) To provoke, &c. The people acted, as if their express intention had been to provoke the Lord to anger: they had sold themselves as slaves to Satan, to work evil in the sight of God, that they

"as he had said by all his servants the prophets. *So was Israel carried away out of their own land to Assyria, unto this day.

24 ¶ And the king of Assyria brought men from Babylon, and from Cuthah, and from Ava, and from Hamath, and from Sepharvaim, and placed them in the cities of Samaria, instead of the children of Israel: and they possessed Samaria, and dwelt in the cities thereof.

25 And so it was at the beginning of their dwelling there, that they feared not the LORD; therefore the LORD sent lions among them, which slew some of them.

26 Wherefore they spake to the king of Assyria, saying, The nations which thou hast removed, and placed in the cities of Samaria, know not the manner of the God of the land: therefore he hath sent lions among them, and, behold, they slay them, because they know not the manner of the God of the land.

27 Then the king of Assyria commanded, saying, Carry thither one of the priests whom ye brought from thence, and let them go and dwell there, and let him teach them the manner of the God of the land.

28 Then one of the priests, whom they had carried away from Samaria, came and dwelt in Beth-el, and taught them how they should fear the LORD.

29 Howbeit every nation made gods of their own, and put them in the houses of the high places which the Samaritans had made, every nation in their cities wherein they dwelt.

might in every thing displease him as much as possible. (Notes, 1 Kings xxi. 20, 25, 26. Jer. vii. 19. Ez. viii. 17.)

V. 18. The tribe, &c. That is, the tribe of Judah, with the Benjamites, Levites, and others, who were incorporated along with Judah into one people.

V. 20—23. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 1 Kings xi. 13. xii. 16. 26—33. xiv. 15, 16. Ps. li. 11.)

V. 24. Shalmaneser seems to have carried away all the chief men, and the bulk of the nation; but to have left some poor remains of the Israelites, who dwelt in the land, during the remainder of his reign, and the busy reign of Sennacherib. But Esarhaddon more entirely removed the old inhabitants, and peopled the country from different parts of his dominions: and by that time Babylon, which had formed a distinct kingdom, was brought under the government of the king of Assyria, and some of these new inhabitants were removed from thence. (Note, 2 Chr. xxxiii. 11.)—The cities had not been destroyed, but reserved for the new inhabitants. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 25, 26. These colonists had met with no remarkable judgments, when they served idols in their own countries: but they now possessed the land, which JEHOVAH had called by his own name; and he was pleased to shew them, that Israel had not been dispossessed, because he was not able to defend them, but because he had given them up to ruin for their sins. It was also proper, they should be convinced that they had no right to their new possessions, except by JEHOVAH's allowance; and that he expected that they should do him homage for their estates: and therefore a number of lions were let loose upon them, as soon as they entered the land. The desolations of war would naturally make way for the increase of wild beasts; but these lions assaulted the people after so remarkable a manner, that they concluded, according to truth, that they were sent by "the God of the land," to punish them for not serving him. (Note, Judg. xvi. 23, 24. 1 Kings xx. 23, 24. Dan. v. 1—4.)

V. 27, 28. It is not probable, that this instructor was a priest of the family of Aaron, or that he taught the people from the book of the Divine law; as some have thought. He had, most likely, been one of the priests, either of the golden calf at Beth-el, or of some high place in that neighbourhood: accordingly he resorted to Beth-el as his residence, when sent to teach the people to worship the God of the land, having doubtless assistants in the business.—It is, however, probable, that he did not teach them to worship JEHOVAH by images; though we can only know what he taught, by the result: but it is evident, they were led to consider JEHOVAH as the local tutelary god of the land, one among a group of other deities; instead of worshipping him as the one, true, eternal, almighty, and glorious Creator, Governor, and Judge of the world. (Note, Jer. x. 6—8. 11. Zeph. ii. Zech. xiv. 6—9.) They probably learned to offer sacrifices, with some external regard to the Mosaic law, but without understanding the meaning and use of that sacred ordinance. Along with these, and such like observances, they were allowed, or they assumed, the liberty of serving their own idols, according to the customs of their several tribes.

32 So they feared the LORD, and made unto themselves some of the lowest of them priests of the high places, which sacrificed for them in the houses of the high places.

33 They feared the LORD, and served their own gods, after the manner of the nations whom they carried away from thence.

34 Unto this day they do after the former manners: they fear not the LORD, neither do they after their statutes, or after their ordinances, or after the law and commandment which the LORD commanded the children of Jacob, whom he named Israel;

35 With whom the LORD had made a covenant, and charged them, saying, Ye shall not fear other gods, nor bow yourselves to them, nor serve them, nor sacrifice to them:

36 But the LORD who brought you up out of the land of Egypt with great power, and a stretched-out arm, him shall ye fear, and him shall ye worship, and to him shall ye do sacrifice.

37 And the statutes, and the ordinances, and the law, and the commandment, which he wrote for you, ye shall observe to do for evermore; and ye shall not fear other gods.

38 And the covenant that I have made with you, ye shall not forget, neither shall ye fear other gods.

39 But the LORD your God ye shall fear; and he shall deliver you out of the hand of all your enemies.

40 Howbeit they did not hearken, but they did after their former manner.

41 So these nations feared the LORD, and served their graven images, both their children and their children's children: as did their fathers, so do they unto this day.

V. 29—31. Learned men have framed many conjectures concerning the meaning of the names here made use of, and the idols and idolatries signified by them. But such obsolete abominations, with which every thing brutal, cruel, and licentious was connected, are not much worth understanding. (Notes, Ez. xxiii. 13. Josh. xxiii. 7. Jer. x. 11. Zech. xii. 2.)

V. 32. After the example of Jeroboam, these men chose the priests of JEHOVAH from the lowest of the people; (1 Kings xiii. 33;) whilst probably, the chief nobles were ambitious of the honour of being priests to their favourite idols!

V. 33—40. The new inhabitants of the land imitated the idolatrous Israelites, by associating their idols with JEHOVAH, as the objects of worship. The remainder, however, of the verses seems to relate to the Israelites after they were carried captive. They still persevered in idolatry and disobedience; and, not being purified, were left to be consumed, in the furnace.—It is said, that the Israelites "did not fear the LORD;" (34:) yet the heathens who followed their example, are said, "to have feared the LORD." (Marg. Ref.) The Israelites did not so much as fear the wrath of the almighty God: but on the other hand, the poor pagans feared the power of his wrath, and to avert it paid him some ignorant worship, according to the wretched instructions given them. As this was an external acknowledgment of his power and godhead, and a homage paid to him, he was pleased in consequence to withdraw his judgments from them.

V. 41. Some ascribe these words to Jeremiah, the supposed penman of this part of the history, others to Ezra after the captivity. However, these Cuthians, (as the Jews call them from Cuthah, 24,) maintained this mongrel religion till after that latter period, and so were proper successors of idolatrous Israel, the professed people of God. About four hundred years before Christ, a temple was built by them, in competition with the temple at Jerusalem: for, having been joined by a number of apostate Jews, they renounced gross idolatry, and became schismatical worshippers of JEHOVAH, receiving some parts and rejecting others, of the Jewish scriptures. (Note, Neh. xiii. 23—30.) We need not decide, whether there were any true godliness among them: but, as a people, "they knew not what they worshipped, for salvation was of the Jews;" (Notes, John iv. 19—24.) Christ commanded his disciples, whom he sent forth in his life-time, not to enter into any city of the Samaritans: yet he himself spent two days at Sychar, one of their cities; (Note, John iv. 39—42:) and the apostles after the day of Pentecost do not seem to have regarded the Samaritans as Gentiles; for they preached in their cities before the conversion of Cornelius. (Notes, Acts i. 4—8. viii. 5—8. x. 1, 2.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—6. The long-suffering of God, instead of leading sinners to repentance, often renders them more secure: for, having long transgressed with impunity, they conclude that there is no danger; and thus they "treasure up wrath against the day of wrath." (Note, Ec. viii. 11—13.)—Ungodly men are not all

CHAP. XVIII.

Hezekiah reigns well, abolishes idolatry, and prospers, 1-8. In his time Samaria is taken, and Israel carried captive, 9-12. Sennacherib invades Judah, and Hezekiah pays him tribute, 13-16. Rabshakeh, sent by Sennacherib, in an insulting and blasphemous speech, aims to induce the people to revolt, 17-35. Hezekiah's servants hold their peace, and rend their clothes, 36, 37.

NOW it came to pass in the third year of Hoshea son of Elah king of Israel, that Hezekiah the son of Ahaz king of Judah began to reign.

2 Twenty and five years old was he when he began to reign; and he reigned twenty and nine years in alike abandoned to flagrant enormities: but the least criminal deserve worse than the most severe temporal calamities; and consequently have no right to complain, if God the righteous sovereign shall see good, in their days, to execute upon a guilty people the accumulated vengeance of many generations. For when the appointed measure of iniquity is filled up, the Lord will forbear no longer. Then kings and people reciprocally suffer on account of each other's crimes; and their causes and interests are no more separable, in the great concerns of national judgments and mercies, than those of the head, or heart, and the several members of the human body.—When the service of God, which is perfect freedom, is renounced, men become slaves to the vilest and most tyrannical of masters: and sinners, left to themselves, never attempt more than a change of one tyrant for another; not having any idea or expectation of complete liberty. The extravagant profligate sometimes, in advancing years, exchanges the bondage of his sensual lusts, for the yoke of avarice or ambition: and the immoral and profane may commence Pharisees, or hypocrites: but mere nature can advance little further than this. Yet the gospel calls us, not only to break our league with every lust, and to renounce every sinful connexion, however formed, confirmed, or palliated by specious pretences; but to refuse obedience to every superior who would require us to sin against God; which, if we would do, we must seek the assistance of his special grace. In all other cases the Lord marks with disapprobation men's violations of agreements, and refusal of obedience to those whom his providence has placed over them: and perfidious attempts for deliverance from trouble or thralldom, commonly terminate in deeper misery and ruin.

V. 7-23. When God arises to judgment, all opposition is vain, and only tends to prolong or increase misery. He keeps an exact register of our advantages, as well as of our sins and their aggravations: and when the day of retribution arrives, he will produce the whole account; that all the world may see "he hath not done without cause, all that he hath done" against the workers of iniquity; for the day of his wrath will be the revelation of his righteous judgment, and indeed his justice in the temporal sufferings of guilty nations is frequently evidenced in the same manner. (Note, Ez. xiv. 22, 23.)—No authority or example can bear men out in breaking the commandments of God: but the judgments which they have known to be executed upon sinners; the favours conferred on themselves; and the testimony of the Lord's ministers, warning, exhorting, and inviting them to repent and to turn to God, will aggravate the guilt of those, who harden their hearts in disobedience.—Enormous as the outward wickedness of the world evidently is, the secret crimes, and sinful thoughts, desires, and purposes of mankind are immensely worse.—Murders, rapines, adulteries, and treachery are horrid evils, which for the good of society are marked with a black brand of infamy: yet in the balance of unbiased reason, as well as in holy writ, ingratitude and enmity to God, proud rebellion against him, and contempt, neglect, or defiance of him; and all the idolatry, or impiety, which result from these propensities, violate still higher obligations, with far deeper malignity, and spring from the worst state of the heart imaginable. These evils will therefore be peculiarly considered, in the condemnation of the wicked: especially of such as have been favoured with revelation, and the ordinances of God; and who have been his professed people, outwardly dedicated to him, and admitted into covenant with him.—Without turning from every evil way, and keeping God's commandments and statutes, there can be no true godliness: yet, this conversion must spring from a belief of his testimony, both concerning "his wrath revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men," and concerning his mercy in Jesus Christ, to all who repent and embrace this salvation. The rejection of his statutes and covenant is always the effect of unbelief; through which sinners harden their hearts against the fear of God, exclude the desire of his favour, and obstinately set themselves to break his commandments; and thus following lying vanities, become worthless and vile, like their worldly idols.—When sinners have resolutely turned away from God, they not only commit those sins, which promise present advantage or gratification; but they transgress without any conceivable temptation, as if they purposely devised to provoke the Lord to anger: and, having sold themselves to do evil, they serve Satan, with greater self-denial, and violence done to their most rational natural affections, than ever could be required of them in the service of God. He peculiarly abhors those, who seduce or drive others, by any means, from following him, and cause them to sin against him; and generations yet unborn may curse the inventors of any false religion, or plausible system of infidelity, as the occasions of their everlasting perdition: nay, bad examples alone may render men chargeable with this tremendous guilt of murdering the souls of others; for human nature is far more ready to copy the evil than the good, and to listen to tempters than to monitors. How circumspectly then should we walk, seeing such dreadful consequences may ensue, for so long a time, in various ways, from our misconduct!

V. 24-41. When the Lord casts off his professing people, or delivers them into the hands of their enemies, he will take care of his own glory: and he can let their insulting conquerors know, that they have not prevailed against them for their own righteousness, or by their own power; but that he hath been provoked by the sins of those who were called by his name, to give their enemies power against them.—All rational creatures ought to serve their Creator: and the very heathen, who honour not his "eternal power and god-head," and are not thankful for his goodness, are left without excuse: yet that ignorance, which springs from a comparative want of the means of instruction, is an alleviation of the sinner's guilt, and will plead effectually for the mitigation of his punishment; and the nearer we approach to "the valley of vision," the more inexcusable shall we be, if we continue irreligious, or attached to vile superstitions.—The terror of the Almighty sometimes induces unconverted sinners to a forced or feigned submission: but, when instructed by ignorant, or hypocritical teachers, they form very unworthy thoughts of God, expect to please him by an outside form and a lip-labour; and endeavour to reconcile his service with that of mammon, the love of the world, and the indulgence of their darling lusts. Thus, slavish fear, united with ignorance, produces an unwilling worship, with the worthless dregs of men's time and spirits, when the prime of them have been spent and exhausted in pursuits and pleasures more agreeable to their carnal minds; and they remain destitute of true repentance, faith, love, and devotedness to God. This kind of religion abounds from age to age, being congenial to the human heart, meeting with little disquietude from the natural conscience, and exciting no opposition from the world; or from Satan, who willingly compounds to give up a part, for a time, that he may at length engross the whole. Yet, even such a worthless form of godliness is less dishonourable to the Lord, than the confident presumption of bold hypocrites and apostates. These come short even of this fear of God; and in opposition to the knowledge which they have acquired, they cast his law behind their back; set his threatenings, his power, and justice at defiance; and despise or abuse his mercies and his promises.—If severe afflictions fail to bring such men to repentance, (an effect which they seldom produce,) their ruin will be inevitable and most tremendous. But, may that "fear of the LORD which is the beginning of wisdom," possess our hearts and influence our conduct, that we may be ready for every change! Our worldly settlements are precarious: we know not whither we may be driven before we die; and we must soon leave this world: then "the wicked will be driven away in his wickedness," but the righteous hath "chosen that good part, which will never be taken from him."

NOTES.

CHAP. XVIII. V. 1. Hoshea seems to have been placed on the throne above four years before the death of Ahaz; but his establishment in quiet possession of the kingdom might take place some time after, from which the next year here mentioned was reckoned, (Notes, 9 10. xv. 30. xvi. 1.) For it is not likely that Hezekiah reigned a year along with his father.

V. 9. Twenty and five, &c. If we suppose that Ahaz at his death had nearly completed his thirty-seventh-year, and Hezekiah was only entering on his twenty-fifth when he began to reign, Ahaz must have been under thirteen years of age, when his son was born! (Note, xvi. 1.) But there are on record well-attested instances, especially in those climates, of men having children at as early a period: and there seems to have been a peculiar wisdom of Providence displayed in this uncommon circumstance; for thus Ahaz had a son of mature age to succeed him, when he had filled up so speedily the measure of his iniquities. And as Hezekiah was about nine years of age at the death of Jotham his grandfather, perhaps some good seed, which that pious prince had sown in his tender mind, might conduce to the excellency of his character. (Note, xvi. 3, 4.)

V. 3. After the example of David, Hezekiah was sincerely and inwardly devoted to God; he delighted in his service, and persevered in promoting the cause of true religion to the end of his days: and, whilst preserved from scandalous offences such as David had been betrayed into, he emulated the strength of his faith, the vigour of his love, and the fervency of his piety. (Notes, xxii. 1, 2.)

V. 4. We shall hereafter meet with a fuller account of Hezekiah's reformation; (Notes, 2 Chr. xxix. xxx. xxxi.)—His father had set him a very bad example, and probably had given him as bad an education: yet he came to the throne, a confirmed servant of God, full of zeal for his glory, and confidence in his protection and assistance. Perhaps he had previously formed an acquaintance with Isaiah, who was at this time very eminent and useful. (Notes, Is. i. 1. vi. 1-4. vii. 3. xiv. 28-32.) The prophet had occasionally been sent to Ahaz; but he was the friend and counsellor of Hezekiah.—In this reformation, he not only removed the monuments of idolatry, which abounded through the wickedness of Ahaz, his predecessor; but he suppressed the irregular worship upon the high places, which had subsisted for many ages: and in doing this he must have risked much opposition even from his own subjects.—One instance of Judah's idolatry, and of Hezekiah's reformation, is mentioned in this place alone. The brazen serpent had been preserved by Israel, as a monument of the miracles wrought by means of it in behalf of their forefathers, in order to excite their gratitude, and encourage their faith and hope. (Notes, Num. xxi. 6-9. John iii. 14, 15.) We are not informed where it was placed; but it seems that after a time the people, stupidly and wickedly, made an idol of it, and burnt incense to it; as if it had wrought the cures, instead of being the external sign of God's operation! Hezekiah finding this idolatry deeply rooted, destroyed the brazen serpent, and called it Nehushtan, or the piece of brass; by way of exposing the folly of those who worshipped it, when it was those days the children of Israel did burn incense to it; and he called it [†]Nehushtan.

5 He [†]trusted in the LORD God of Israel; so that [†]after him was none like him among all the kings of Judah, nor [†]any that were before him.

6 For [†]he clave to the LORD, and departed not [†]from following him, but [†]kept his commandments, which the LORD commanded Moses.

7 And [†]the LORD was with him, and [†]he prospered whithersoever he went forth: and he [†]rebelled against the king of Assyria, and served him not.

8 He smote [†]the Philistines, even unto [†]Gaza, and the borders thereof, [†]from the tower of the watchmen to the fenced city.

9 ¶ And it came to pass in [†]the fourth year of king Hezekiah, which [†]was the seventh year of Hoshea son of Elah king of Israel; that [†]Shalmaneser king of Assyria came up against Samaria, and besieged it.

10 And at the end of three years [†]they took it, even in the sixth year of Hezekiah, (that [†]is, the ninth year of Hoshea king of Israel,) Samaria was taken.

11 And [†]the king of Assyria did carry away Israel unto Assyria, and put them in Halah and in Habor by the river of Gozan, and in the cities of the Medes:

12 Because [†]they obeyed not the voice of the LORD their God, but transgressed his covenant, and all that [†]Moses the servant of the LORD commanded, and would not hear [†]them, nor do [†]them.

of no more value or efficacy than any other piece of brass.—The superstitious veneration paid to sacred relics in the Christian church, and especially the adoration paid to the form of the cross, and even in express words to the wood and nails of it, with all the impostures which have arisen from that absurd idolatry, have been exactly parallel to the worship of the brazen serpent; and Hezekiah's example fully authorizes the total abolition, or disuse, of every thing of that kind in religious worship. There were no relics under the Old Testament church, except the pot of manna, Aaron's rod, and this brazen serpent. The two former were preserved by God's own appointment, but they were concealed in the holy of holies from popular inspection: the other was preserved by human contrivance, and became an occasion of idolatry, until a pious king, who doubtless recollected with reverence and gratitude the event commemorated by it, destroyed it with decided abhorrence. And there never were any relics preserved in the Christian church, however good the intention of the preserver might be, which have not issued in such abuses, superstitions, and impositions, as must cause all judicious friends to the gospel to unite in wishing for their extirpation. Yet, true piety, and fervent affection for holy things and holy men, naturally lead this way; unless sound judgment, and considerable acquaintance with human nature, and the history of superstition, counteract their efficacy.

V. 5, 6. None of the kings of Judah, from the time of the division of the kingdom, equalled Hezekiah, in the vigour and simplicity of his dependence upon the Lord; in which he aspired to an equality with his progenitor David, who had reigned over the whole land. Even Asa, through weakness of faith, sought the assistance of a heathen prince; and Jehoshaphat formed an alliance with idolatrous Ahab: but Hezekiah clave to the Lord in entire confidence and unreserved obedience, to the end of his life. (Notes, xxii. 1, 2. 1 Kings xv. 17-23. 2 Chr. xvi. 7-12. xix. 4.)

V. 7. (Note, xvii. 4.) Ahaz had basely made the land tributary to the king of Assyria, to purchase his assistance against the Israelites and Syrians: but Hezekiah, who was under no personal engagements to that prince, would not stand to the agreement which his father had formed. (Notes, xvi. 7-9. xvii. 3.) Having set about a thorough reformation, and confiding in the Lord's assistance, he refused submission to any foreign potentate: and, as the king of Assyria would call this [†]rebellion against him, that term is here used. But it does not appear that Hezekiah violated any treaties; and the king of Assyria could have no just claim to domineer over the king of Judah. Some think, however, that he was too precipitate in this measure; being rather elated by his prosperity in other transactions.

V. 8. The Philistines had recovered strength, in the unsettled state of affairs in Israel and Judah; but Hezekiah again reduced them to subjection. (2 Chr. xxviii. 18. Is. ix. 12. Note, Is. xiv. 28-32.)

V. 9, 10. Shalmaneser began the siege of Samaria, in the beginning of the fourth year of Hezekiah, and the seventh of Hoshea; so that the [†]three years' siege was concluded, by the end of the sixth of the former, and the ninth of the latter prince. (Note, 1.)—The desolations of Israel would tend to dispose the Jews to concur with Hezekiah, and thus facilitate his endeavours for reformation, as well as quicken him in them.

* Or, but counsel and strength are for the war. Prov. xxi. 30, 31. 14.

did [†]Sennacherib king of Assyria [†]come up against all the fenced cities of Judah, and took them.

14 And Hezekiah king of Judah sent to the king of Assyria to Lachish, saying, [†]I have offended; return from me: that which thou puttest on me, will I bear. And the king of Assyria appointed unto Hezekiah king of Judah three hundred talents of silver, and thirty talents of gold.

15 And Hezekiah [†]gave him all the silver that was found in the house of the LORD, and in the treasures of the king's house.

16 At that time did Hezekiah cut off [†]the [†]gold from the doors of the temple of the LORD, and from the pillars which Hezekiah king of Judah had overlaid, and gave [†]it to the king of Assyria.

17 ¶ And [†]the king of Assyria sent Tartan and Rabсарis and Rabshakeh, from Lachish to king Hezekiah, with a [†]great host against Jerusalem. And they went up and came to Jerusalem: and when they were come up, they came and stood by [†]the conduit of the upper pool, which [†]is in the highway of the fuller's field.

18 And when they had called to the king, there came out to them [†]Eliakim the son of Hilkiah, which [†]was over the household, and [†]Shebna the [†]scribe, and Joah the son of Asaph [†]the recorder.

19 And Rabshakeh said unto them, Speak ye now to Hezekiah, [†]Thus saith the great king, the king of Assyria, [†]What confidence [†]is this wherein thou trustest?

20 Thou [†]sayest, (but [†]they are but [†]vain words,) [†]I have counsel and strength for the war. Now on whom dost thou trust, that thou [†]rebellest against me?

V. 13. A few years after the reduction of Samaria, Shalmaneser died, and was succeeded by his son Sennacherib. Shalmaneser doubtless would have attempted to subjugate Hezekiah; but he was otherwise employed, and this leisure was given to Hezekiah, to effect his reformation without interruption. (Notes, 2 Chr. xxxi-xxxii.) Sennacherib, as soon as he mounted the throne, emulated his father's military honours, and imitated his example. He therefore purposed to treat Jerusalem and Judah, as Shalmaneser had done Samaria and Israel: and it pleased God to chastise the lukewarmness, hypocrisy, or reluctance, with which many of the Jews concurred in Hezekiah's reformation; and to try his faith, and that of other believers, by permitting this potent monarch to reduce all the other strongholds, and to threaten Jerusalem with a siege. (Notes, 2 Chr. xxxii. 1. Is. vii. 17-25. viii. 6-8. x. 5-14. 28-34. xxxvi. 1, 2.)

V. 14-16. Some expositors charge Hezekiah with criminality, in revolting from the king of Assyria; but he seems rather to have sinned by yielding to him in so timid a manner. He evidently distrusted God's protection; (Note, Gen. xii. 11-16:) and by confessing to the haughty conqueror, that he had offended, and was ready to submit to any imposition that he laid upon him, and by hiring his departure with his own treasures, and the gold of the temple, he invited and encouraged his further impositions. The event shews, that if he had boldly stood out, and committed his cause to God, he would have been protected. But though Hezekiah's conduct might perhaps be reprehensible; yet it served to render Sennacherib's subsequent violence more inexcusable.—Probably, Ahaz had cut off the gold from the doors and pillars of the temple, and Hezekiah had replaced it: yet he too, in this emergency, cut it off, to purchase peace. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 2 Chr. xxxii. 2-8.)

V. 17. This second invasion is computed by some learned men to have been three years after the former agreement; during which time Sennacherib was occupied in other wars. But it seems more probable from the narrative, that he returned the ensuing year. Having, however, accomplished his other projects, and being lifted up with pride, he was determined, without provocation, to reduce Jerusalem, and to treat its inhabitants as his father had done those of Samaria. (Notes, Is. x. 8-14. xxxiii. 5-9.) He therefore sent his commanders with a large army to encamp against that city; being himself engaged in besieging Lachish; (2 Chr. xxxii. 9:) and they were instructed to summon Hezekiah to surrender at discretion, having doubtless particular orders what to say to him, or his envoys, on that subject.

V. 18. Hezekiah, though summoned to a personal conference, did not choose to trust himself with his perfidious and domineering invaders: and therefore he appointed commissioners, or deputies, to attend in his name. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 19. Rabshakeh, &c. This man is reported by tradition to have been an apostate Jew; which supposition, if well grounded, may account both for his fluency in speaking the Hebrew tongue, and about the God of Israel, and for his bitter enmity against true religion.

V. 20, 21. It does not appear that Hezekiah, after the preceding agreement, had refused to pay tribute to the king of Assyria, or had attempted to shake off its yoke: but when he found him determined so to destroy Jerusalem and enslave its inhabitants, he refused to surrender at discretion, and prepared to 21 Now, behold, thou [†]trustest upon [‡]the staff of this bruised reed, even [§]upon Egypt, on which if a man lean, it will go into his hand and pierce it: [¶]so is Pharaoh king of Egypt unto all that trust on him.

22 But if ye say unto me, [¶]We trust in the LORD our God: is not that he, [¶]whose high places and whose altars Hezekiah hath taken away, and hath said to Judah and Jerusalem, Ye shall worship before this altar in Jerusalem?

23 Now therefore, I pray thee, give [†]pledges to my lord the king of Assyria, and [¶]I will deliver thee two thousand horses, if thou be able on thy part to set riders upon them.

24 How then [¶]wilt thou turn away the face of one captain of the least of my master's servants, and put [¶]thy trust on Egypt for [¶]chariots and for horsemen?

25 Am [¶]I now come up without the LORD against this place to destroy it? The LORD said to me, Go up against this land, and destroy it.

26 Then said Eliakim the son of Hilkiah, and Shebna, and Joah, unto Rabshakeh, Speak, I pray thee, to thy servants [¶]in the Syrian language; for we understand it: and talk not with us in the Jews' language, in the ears of the people that are on the wall.

27 But Rabshakeh said unto them, Hath my master sent me to thy master, and to thee, to speak these words? hath he not sent me to the men which sit on the wall, that they may [¶]eat their own dung, and drink [¶]their own piss with you?

28 ¶ Then [¶]Rabshakeh stood and cried with a loud voice in the Jews' language, and spake, saying, Hear the word of [¶]the great king, the king of Assyria.

29 Thus saith the king, [¶]Let not Hezekiah deceive you: for he shall not be able to deliver you out of his hand.

30 Neither let Hezekiah [¶]make you trust in the LORD, saying, The LORD will surely deliver us, and [¶]this city shall not be delivered into the hand of the king of Assyria.

31 Hearken not to Hezekiah: for thus saith the king of Assyria, [¶]Make an agreement with me by a present, and come out to me, and [¶]then [¶]eat ye every man of his own vine, and every one of his fig-tree, and drink ye every one the waters of his [¶]cistern:

32 Until [¶]I come and take you away to a land [¶]like your own land, a land of corn and wine, a land of bread and vineyards, a land of oil-olive and of honey, that ye may live, and not die: and hearken not unto Hezekiah, when he [¶]persuadeth you, saying, The LORD will deliver us.

33 Hath [¶]any of the gods of the nations delivered at all his land out of the hand of the king of Assyria?

34 Where are [¶]the gods of Hamath, and of Arpad? where are [¶]the gods of Sepharvaim, Hena, and Ivah? have they delivered Samaria out of mine hand?

35 Who are they, among all the gods of the countries, that have delivered their country out of mine hand, [¶]that the LORD should deliver Jerusalem out of mine hand?

36 But the people [¶]held their peace, and answered him not a word: for the king's commandment was, saying, Answer him not.

37 Then came Eliakim the son of Hilkiah, which was over the household, and Shebna the scribe, and Joah the son of Asaph the recorder, to Hezekiah, [¶]with their clothes rent, and told him the words of Rabshakeh.

stand a siege; and this was deemed rebellion, and the most unreasonable presumption! (Note, 1 Kings xx 2-11.)—Rabshakeh supposed that Hezekiah had neither counsel, nor strength, for such a war: and indeed he did not place his dependence on his own wisdom, or on the number and valour of his troops.—Hoshea had confided in the king of Egypt, and had been deceived and ruined by that confidence; (Note, xvii. 4.) and if Hezekiah had done the same, he might have proved to him like a bruised cane, which deceives those who lean on it, and not only lets them fall, but runs into their hands. (Note, Ez. xxix. 6, 7.) He, however, had not put his trust in Egypt for chariots and horsemen; though probably many of his nobles were disposed to that measure, and some engagements of that kind had before been attempted. (Notes, Is. xxx. 1-7. xxxi. 1-5.)

V. 22. The Assyrians had learned that Hezekiah professed to confide in God; and Rabshakeh combated that confidence, by enquiring how he could presume to expect assistance from him, whose altars and high places he had destroyed. (Notes, 4. 2 Chr. xxxi. 1.) For he ignorantly supposed that the Lord would be pleased, and deem himself honoured, in proportion to the number of the temples and altars dedicated to him, though erected contrary to his express command: and therefore he concluded that Hezekiah had forfeited God's protection, by that very reformation which ensured it. (Note, 1 Cor. ii. 14-16.)

V. 23, 24. If Hezekiah would give security, that he would submit in case of failure, Rabshakeh vaunted that he would send him two thousand horses, provided he could find men to ride them. By this he meant to insult and expose Hezekiah's inability to resist the immense army of Sennacherib; or even a small detachment of it, under the command of the least of his captains. But the Israelites were forbidden to multiply chariots and horses, and Hezekiah had learned to depend on a firmer support. (2 Chr. xxxii. 6-8. Note, Ps. xx. 6-8.)

V. 25. Rabshakeh intended to discourage the people, and to induce them to a revolt. Samaria had been destroyed according to the denunciations of God's word, and Shalmaneser had been considered as his instrument in that destruction. The Jews also were menaced with judgments for their sins, and Rabshakeh affected to believe, that Sennacherib was commissioned to execute similar vengeance on Jerusalem. (Note, 2 Chr. xxxv. 20-24. Is. xxxvi. 10.) But there was no truth in his assertion, which the late effectual reformation might inspire the people with confidence to disregard: and the impiety of pretending, that Sennacherib came by God's command, when he was entirely instigated by ambition, resentment, and rapacity, and when he treated God himself in the most blasphemous manner, was very horrible. (Notes, xix. 4. 25-28. 2 Chr. xxxii. 15. 19. Is. x. 5-15.)

V. 26. The ambassadors understood the drift of Rabshakeh's discourse, and reasonably and mildly required him to make his proposals to them in the Syrian language; and not to address himself to the people, who were not proper judges in such matters. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 27. These were hyperbolic expressions, denoting the utmost extremities of famine, which the people must expect to endure, in case they dared to resist the king of Assyria. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 28-35. Rabshakeh supposed that the Assyrian monarchs had overpowered the gods, as well as the kings, of all the nations which they had subjugated; and that JEHOVAH was no more powerful than the rest of them: and therefore if the Jews regarded Hezekiah's persuasions, and expected help from the LORD, they would certainly be deceived, for he would never be able to deliver them. What mean thoughts of the infinite God, and what arrogant thoughts of himself, must have possessed the mind of Sennacherib, who doubtless had instructed his servant to speak of him in this style! The gods of Hamath, &c., were mere idols, not able to do good, or evil. The people of Samaria had provoked the Lord to sell them into the hands of their enemies; and the idols, which they had chosen, were indeed unable to defend them: but, soon after, the new inhabitants experienced to their loss, that the God of their land could, if he had so pleased, have delivered Samaria out of the hand of the king of Assyria. (xvii. 25, 26. xix. 17-19. 2 Chr. xxxii. 19.) Surely, if this proud worm had not been intoxicated with success, he must have admitted, that somewhere in the universe there was a power superior to that of mortal man! and if so, it must be highly irrational to set thus at defiance "all that was called God, or worshipped!" But, by this blasphemy the Lord was expressly engaged in the cause; and his honour required him to crush the self-important wretch, who dared to exalt himself against him: so that the greatest kindness imaginable was done to the king and the people of Judah, by this language of impiety and defiance. (Notes, xix. 4. 19. 25-29. Ps. lxxix. 8-13. Is. x. 15-19.)—The proposal made to the people was not very alluring, unless they could be previously terrified with the dread of impending destruction: for Rabshakeh avowed the intention of extorting more money from them; and only of permitting them to continue in their own land, till the king had leisure to remove them to another: and the fertility of that other country was not likely to be very useful to those, who were to be captives and slaves in it. But who could have depended upon the word of such a man, if he had made more equitable proposals?

V. 36, 37. Hezekiah was aware what language Rabshakeh would employ, and had wisely counselled his envoys, and commanded the people, to hold their peace; lest they should get engaged in a reviling contention, or provoke him to further impiety. In abhorrence, however, of his blasphemy, and in grief for the afflicted estate of the nation, they rent their clothes, and returned to the king. (Notes, Is. xxxiii. 7-13.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-8. In times of increasing impiety we should not despond, as if things must necessarily proceed from bad to worse; for the Lord is able to give them an unexpected and effectual turn. From the most abandoned families he sometimes raises up the brightest ornaments, and most useful friends, of true religion, to illustrate the sovereignty and power of his grace: and when parents have been notoriously profane and wicked, their children should not hesitate to express, by an opposite conduct, a decided disapprobation of their crimes; and to counteract to the utmost the effects of them on others; whether they have occupied a public, or a more private station in society: for, when the honour of God is concerned, the reputation of the nearest relatives is entitled to a very subordinate regard. (Notes, Matt. x. 37-39. Luke. xiv. 25-27. 2 Cor. v. 16. 1 Pet. i. 17-21. P. O. 17-21.) It is not enough, that we do not imitate the conduct of atrocious offenders, or that we tread in the steps of those, who have upon the whole served God sincerely; but we should aim high; and, in aspiring at that eminency which the Scripture proposes, we should set before our eyes the most approved patterns, whose actions are there recorded; that we may follow those who have most nearly followed Christ, and most effectually served God and their generation; and thus become good examples for others to copy. (Note, 1 Thes. i. 6-8.) In attempting personal or public reformation, those things should be removed or avoided, which have proved occasions of evil, though not sinful in themselves.—Human depravity is prone to pervert the bounty of Providence into fuel for sinful lusts: and, in some circumstances, is equally propense to abuse the peculiar mercies of God into occasions of superstition and idolatry. It is natural to fallen man to put the creature in the place of the Creator, and to regard the instrument, rather than the Author, of our comforts: and though this is more absurd when the instrument is irrational or inanimate; it is equally idolatrous, when the most exalted of intelligent agents are thus unduly honoured. However excellent, useful, or deserving of honour, such creatures have been; when they are thus idolized, their comparative meanness and worthlessness ought to be exposed, and the abuse of them treated with the deepest indignation and abhorrence: nay, it were better that the most exalted creature should perish, than that God should be dishonoured by having the least of his glory given unto another. Much more, then, should every monument of his former mercies be extirpated, when it becomes the occasion of fatal delusions, and the perversion cannot otherwise effectually be prevented: but the propriety of such a measure is still more conspicuous, when the relic, or the custom, was originally the creature of superstition, a mere human invention, perhaps the result of fraud and imposture. True faith needs not such aids to devotion: the word of God, daily meditated upon, leads the mind to realize past, future, and invisible things, as if present: thus every good end proposed by other expedients is answered, without the danger to which they expose us; and the simple scriptural use of the sacramental signs, and pledges of heavenly things, may effectually be preserved from such abuse, and answer every purpose, which can be obtained by presenting the objects of our faith to our bodily senses, in any way not warranted by the word of God: which only tends to distract the mind, to interrupt the simple exercise of faith, to excite spurious affections, to deprave the imagination with gross and false notions of heavenly things, and to introduce, either absurd superstition, or wild enthusiasm.—They, who most entirely trust in God, will feel themselves most effectually emancipated from other dependencies, and from the dominion of every other master; and will be encouraged to resist every enemy and rival, "that they may cleave to the Lord, and not depart from following him, and keeping his commandments."

V. 9-16. While the interests of religion decline, or are run down, in one place, the Lord takes care that they shall revive and flourish in another. The judgments, which desolate degenerate churches and nations, instead of injuring his cause, tend to warm, animate, and embolden others in personal religion, and in attempting public reformation; nay, they often facilitate the work of active instruments in religious revivals, by intimidating opposers, and exciting those who were indifferent, or reluctant to assist.—Yet, the believer, when pursuing heavenly things, and seeking the glory of God with the greatest simplicity and most vigorous affections, must stand prepared for trouble. For a time, he may enjoy the sunshine of peace and prosperity, to encourage him in his labour of love, and to enable him to bring it to some establishment; and whatsoever he doeth shall eventually prosper. But, when the Almighty is pleased to remove his restraining hand, Satan and wicked men will assault him, with rancour and vehemency proportioned to his zeal and success: and the Lord will often permit them to do this; for he regards not so much the present feeling of his beloved servants, as the final happy and glorious event of their trials and conflicts. Nations also may meet with public calamities, when true religion is most vigorously and successfully promoted, by the general concurrence of all orders of men. (Notes, 2 Chr. xx. 2-4. Ps. xlv. 17-22.) The secret dislike, the hypocrisy, and the lukewarmness of numbers require correction: while trials tend to purify the faith and hope of upright persons; to bring them to greater simplicity in their zeal for the honour of God, and in their dependence on his help; and to increase the fervency of their addresses at the throne of grace: and thus they make way for the fuller display of the glory of God in their deliverance. Yet, in such trying situations the strongest believers are apt to waver, to make improper concessions, and to speak and act unadvisedly.—Whatever is withheld or withdrawn from God, which has been or ought to be devoted to him, in order to purchase exemption from trouble, or peace with the enemies of his church, will eventually occasion our shame, and involve us in greater difficulties.

V. 17-37. No dependence can be placed on the engagements of the covetous or ambitious: and all attempts to purchase their favour, or to soothe them into peace, are vain. When it is in their power, they will find some pretence for seizing on those possessions which they covet, while every acquisition increases their insatiable rapacity. Success in wickedness elates them with pride and insolence: they forget that they are men, or have any superior; and treat all as enemies or rebels, who do not implicitly comply with their exorbitant demands. Our only safety then consists, in committing our persons, property, connexions, reputations, liberty, and every thing which we value, into God's powerful keeping, in the exercise of faith, and by adhering to the path of duty.—"The tongue is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison; it setteth on fire the whole course of nature, and is set on fire of hell." What pride, reproaches, lies, impiety, atheism, and blasphemy, have, in all ages, been vented by it, to the dishonour of God, and the unutterable prejudice of mankind! We may form some estimate of the desperate wickedness of the human heart, from the horrible language which is uttered by the lips of men; "for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." (Note, Jam. iii. 3-6.) May the Lord replenish our hearts with his grace, that out of that good treasure we may speak such things, and such only, as may "minister grace unto the hearers!"—If indeed, "as the fool hath said in his heart, there were no God," it would in general be vain and presumptuous for the weaker to resist the stronger: but, as "the Lord doeth what he will in the armies of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth;" so, "the race is not always to the swift, nor the battle to the strong." All confidence in man may justly be exploded, as leaning on a broken staff, which will not only fail, but also wound: and dependence on our own counsel and might, whatever proportion they may bear to those of our opponents, is equally vain and fallacious. But our God never faileth those who trust in him: in this confidence the believer, when more conscious of his own extreme debility, than his insulting foes can conceive, may boldly defy the most potent of them; and if they deride this dependence on the omnipotent God, they only engage him, "for his own name's sake," the more decisively to fight against them; and to turn their vauntings and threatenings, into confusion, dismay, and ruin.—When they, who have domineered over their fellow-worms, presume to assault those whom the God of heaven protects; they will soon feel their inability to resist his power, or to endure the weight of his indignation. Yet many who atheistically, or impiously, deny his existence, blaspheme his truths, or condemn his authority; inconsistently, upon other occasions, advance claims to his favour, and express their expectations that he will prosper their wicked devices! Because they have succeeded in exposing, or seducing, hypocritical and degenerate professors of Christianity; they triumph as if they had, or soon should, run down the cause of vital godliness, and prevail against the house of David and his kingdom, which is founded upon an immovable foundation. Numbers also, ignorantly and absurdly, suppose those things to be pleasing to God, which he most abhors; because they form their judgment on the deductions of their own understandings, and not on the plain testimonies of his word: "For, the things of the Spirit of God are foolishness to the natural man." Hence they embolden themselves, and endeavour to discourage scriptural worshippers, upon the most false and preposterous grounds. Such cavils, objections, and arguments have no weight with the established believer: and therefore these men pretend to despise him, that they may address the prejudices and passions of the ignorant, unstable, and unthinking multitude, with whom their specious declamations go further, than either solid arguments or scriptural testimonies. They endeavour to insinuate, that the persons, who labour to prevail with them to trust and serve God, according to the plain meaning of his holy word, are deceivers, to whom they cannot safely attend: and, whilst they are only aiming at the gratification of their own ambition or avarice, they pretend great compassion and kindness for them, are lavish of good words, and set before them alluring prospects of felicity. But, it is often best to leave persons of this description to rail and blaspheme, without directly answering: because such attempts ordinarily increase their self-importance, and tend to disseminate still wider the effect of their poisonous tenets; while a decided expression of abhorrence of their guilt generally forms the best testimony against them. The matter must be left to the Lord, who hath all hearts in his hands: he will plead his own cause, and that of his truth and people; and our business is to commit ourselves into his hands, in the exercise of humble submission, believing hope, and fervent prayer.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIX. V. 1. By these actions Hezekiah expressed his abhorrence of Rabshakeh's blasphemy, his grief for the afflictions of his people; and his humble consciousness of his own and his people's unworthiness, and need of pardoning mercy; whilst he wholly depended upon God for protection.

V. 2. Isaiah had at this time prophesied almost fifty years, if he entered upon that office only a short time before the death of Uzziah: for he prophesied, in the days of Uzziah, who died about 758 before Christ; and these transactions occurred about 710. (Notes, Is. i. 1. vi. 1.) It must be supposed that Hezekiah had often consulted him: and the nature of this message implies a previous acquaintance, and a mutual confidence. (Note, xviii. 4.) Isaiah's visits to Hezekiah, at and after his sickness, are thought by some to have taken place before this, though recorded afterwards, (xx.); and many parts of his prophecy evidently refer to these events.—In this emergency therefore Hezekiah sent to Isaiah the prophet, rather than to the high priest; though he had employed the priests and Levites in his reformation. Perhaps Urijah was still living, or some other high priest too much resembling him in character: there seems, however, to have been an intended slight upon the high priest. (Note, xvi. 10-16.) Some learned men indeed think, that the appointed method of 4 It may be 'the LORD thy God will hear all the words of Rabshakeh, 'whom the king of Assyria his master hath sent to reproach the living God; and will 'reprove the words which the LORD thy God hath heard: 'wherefore 'lift up thy prayer for 'the remnant that are 'left.

5 So the servants of king Hezekiah came to Isaiah.

6 ¶ And 'Isaiah said unto them, Thus shall ye say to your master, Thus saith the LORD, 'Be not afraid of the words which thou hast heard, with which 'the servants of the king of Assyria have blasphemed me.

7 Behold, I will send 'a blast upon him, and he shall 'hear a rumour, and shall return to his own land; and 'I will cause him to fall by the sword in his own land.

8 ¶ So Rabshakeh returned, and found the king of Assyria warring against 'Libnah: for he had heard that he was departed 'from Lachish.

9 And 'when he heard say of Tirhakah king of Ethiopia, Behold, he is come out to fight against thee: 'he sent messengers again unto Hezekiah, saying,

10 Thus shall ye speak to Hezekiah king of Judah, saying, 'Let not thy God in whom thou trustest deceive thee, saying, Jerusalem shall not be delivered into the hand of the king of Assyria.

11 Behold, 'thou hast heard what the kings of Assyria have done to all lands, by destroying them utterly: and shalt thou be delivered?

12 Have the gods of the nations delivered them which my fathers have destroyed: as 'Gozan, and 'Haran, and Rezeph, and the children of 'Eden which were in Thelassar?

enquiring of God by the high priest, was disused from the time that the temple was built: but this can only be collected from the silence of Scripture, as no express declaration to that effect is recorded.—Shebna, who was employed on this occasion, as well as in receiving the message of Rabshakeh, is elsewhere represented in an unfavourable light. (Notes, Is. xxii. 15—19.) For pious persons cannot always employ such persons, and such only, as they approve. The elders of the priests accompanied the chief officers of the king, in going to the prophet.

V. 3. It was not only a season of great distress to Israel; but the confidence of the king, in the protection of God, was rebuked as a groundless presumption, and the name of JEHOVAH was blasphemed on that account. Indeed, matters were come to a crisis: every thing valuable was at stake. As the woman in travail, who hath not strength to bring forth, must die, if she be not speedily assisted; so, Hezekiah and his people, in their pressing necessity, were utterly unable to do any thing effectual to extricate themselves, and must perish without immediate help from God. (Note, Hosh. xiii. 12, 13.)

V. 4. Will hear, &c. Hezekiah's confidence in God was in some respects encouraged by the blasphemy of the Assyrians. For though he and his people were unworthy of the Divine favour; yet it was proper for the Lord to rebuke and silence the reproachful words which had been spoken. In this hope therefore he entreated the prophet to lift up his prayer, with earnestness and importunity, for the remnant which was left, that the people of God might not be swallowed up and extirpated. Israel had been carried into captivity, and dispersed; and Judah was reduced to extremities: and would God suffer his blasphemers finally to prevail against his worshippers, and entirely to destroy his holy religion? (Notes, Is. viii. 6—8. x. 5, 6.)

V. 7. A blast, &c. Some have supposed that this expression related to the manner in which the Assyrian army was destroyed: viz, by exciting one of those scorching winds, which in those countries have been known to destroy great multitudes in a moment. But this is uncertain: and perhaps it only means, that the Lord would destroy all his prosperity, as easily as the pinching gale of wind blasts the tender vegetables; whilst the death of his numerous forces, probably attended by a report, that Tirhakah and the Ethiopians were marching to assault him, as a terrifying rumour in his ears, would hurry him home with dismay and disgrace. (Notes, 35—37. Job xx. 10—29.)—As the word, rendered blast, is often translated spirit, some explain the expression to mean, that God would send an angel, or spirit, to destroy Sennacherib's army; but others think it signifies, that God would fill his heart with terror by some supernatural agent. "I will infuse a spirit into him."—"The words never signify any thing but putting a spirit into a person. This was a spirit of fear." (Bp. Lowth.)

V. 8. It seems probable, that Rabshakeh marched the army back from Jerusalem to join Sennacherib, when he found that Hezekiah would neither surrender, nor return any answer to his insulting message, (32.) For Jerusalem was so advantageously situated, and so well fortified, that, with a moderate garrison, it might have made a stout resistance against the Assyrian army.

13 Where is 'the king of Hamath, and the king of 'Arpad, and the king of the city of Sepharvaim, of Hena, and Ivah?

14 ¶ And 'Hezekiah received the letter of the hand of the messengers, and read it: and Hezekiah went up into the house of the LORD, and 'spread it before the LORD.

15 And Hezekiah 'prayed before the LORD, and said, 'O LORD God of Israel, which 'dwellest between the cherubims, 'thou art the God, even thou alone, of all the kingdoms of the earth; 'thou hast made heaven and earth.

16 LORD, 'bow down thine ear, and hear: 'open, LORD, thine eyes, and see: and hear the words of Sennacherib, 'which hath sent him to reproach the living God.

17 'Of a truth, LORD, 'the kings of Assyria have destroyed the nations and their lands, 18 And 'have 'cast their gods into the fire: 'for they were no gods, but the work of men's hands, wood and stone: therefore have they destroyed them.

19 Now therefore, 'O LORD our God, I beseech thee, save thou us out of his hand, that all the kingdoms of the earth may know that thou art the LORD God, even thou only.

20 ¶ Then Isaiah the son of Amoz sent to Hezekiah, saying, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, 'That 'which thou hast prayed to me against Sennacherib king of Assyria, 'I have heard.

21 This is the word that the LORD hath spoken concerning him: 'The virgin 'the daughter of Zion

(Notes, xxv. 1—5. 2 Sam. v. 6—8. Ps. xlviii. 12, 13. cxxxv. 2. Lam. iv. 12:) though it must probably at length have shared the fate of Samaria, if the Lord had not immediately interposed. The siege, however, was postponed, or not carried on with vigour, till Sennacherib had leisure to come against it in person. In the mean time he had withdrawn from Lachish, (it is not known whether he had taken it or not); and was besieging Libnah, another city, which refused to open its gates to the conqueror.

V. 9—13. When Sennacherib had, the first time, levied contributions upon Hezekiah, he marched his army into Egypt; probably in resentment against the king, for forming alliances with the vassals of the Assyrians, as he regarded the Jews and the Samaritans to be. After several successes there, while he was besieging Pelusium, an important fortress in that country, he heard that Tirhakah king of Ethiopia was marching against him with a great army: and, not choosing to wait his approach, he raised the siege; and returning into Judea, began to commit hostilities there, as it has been before related. But, finding that Tirhakah pursued him as a fugitive, he marched back to encounter him; and, having totally routed his army, he returned to wreak his vengeance on Hezekiah and Jerusalem. This gave the Jews some respite for preparation and for prayer; and afforded Sennacherib an occasion for more deliberately uttering his blasphemies, by a letter sent to Hezekiah, when detained for a time from marching against him.—Learned men differ in opinion concerning Tirhakah: whether he were king of Ethiopia or Cush to the south of Egypt in Africa, or of the Cushites in Asia. He was, however, an ally of the king of Egypt. (Note, xviii. 22, 29—35. Marg. Ref.)

V. 14—19. (Note, 3, 4. 1 Kings viii. 33, 34. 2 Chr. xiv. 9—15. xx. 6—12.)—Spread it, &c. By this action Hezekiah referred the matter entirely to God, intimating, that as His honour was immediately assaulted, he was chiefly concerned to defend it: and by this appeal the king meant to shelter himself and his people under the shadow of the Almighty; that while the Lord pleaded his own cause, he might also deliver them from their enraged enemies. (Notes, 2 Chr. xx. 14—17. Ps. xxi. 13.)—Him, &c. (16.) That is Rabshakeh, who perhaps was sent with this letter also.—Cast their gods, &c. (18.) (Notes, 2 Sam. v. 21. Ps. cxv. 3—8. Is. xlv. 12—20. xlv. 1, 2. 5—9. Jer. x. 3—11. Hos. viii. 5, 6.)—Now, &c. (19.) It would have been comparatively a small matter for Hezekiah and his people to perish; but it would be an evil of infinite magnitude, for all the nations to conclude, that JEHOVAH was no more powerful than their worthless idols; and it would be unseemly honourable to the name of God, to shew the difference between the Creator of the world, and these his puny rivals; and to prove, that he only was the Lord Almighty, able to save and to destroy. Sennacherib's blasphemous challenge gave a fair opportunity of publicly demonstrating this most important truth: and a plea grounded so directly on the honour of God could not but prevail. (Notes, Ez. xxxiii. 11—14. Is. xxxvii. 20. Matt. vi. 9, 10, 13.)

V. 21. The virgin, &c. The inhabitants of Jerusalem, as forming or representing the visible church of God, having his temple and instituted worship among them, are called in one body, "the daughter of Zion," or of Jerusalem.

hath despised thee, and laughed thee to scorn; the daughter of Jerusalem hath 'shaken her head at thee.

22 "Whom hast thou reproached and blasphemed? and against whom hast thou 'exalted thy voice, and lifted up thine eyes on high? even against "the Holy One of Israel.

23 By "thy 'messengers thou hast reproached the LORD, and hast said, "With the multitude of my chariots I am come up to the height of the mountains, to the sides of Lebanon, and will cut down the "tall cedar-trees thereof, and the choice fir-trees thereof: and I will enter into the lodgings of his borders, and into "the forest of his Carmel.

24 I have digged and drunk strange waters, and "with the sole of my feet have I dried up all the rivers of 'besieged places.

25 "Hast thou not heard long ago how I have done it, and of ancient times that I have formed it? now have I brought it to pass, that thou shouldest be to lay waste fenced cities into ruinous heaps.

26 Therefore their inhabitants "were 'of small power, they were dismayed and confounded; "they were as the grass of the field, and as the green herb,

(Marg. Ref.) They were safe under his protection and care, as a virgin-daughter in the house of a wise and tender parent: and though now the Assyrian attempted brutal violence, they might treat his efforts with disdain and defiance; might despise them, and laugh them to scorn, and menace his destruction by shaking their heads at him. Perhaps the term, virgin, might refer to the state of Jerusalem, as free from idolatry, and reserved for the Lord alone, (2 Cor. xi. 1, 2); or as having never been exposed to the ravages of an enraged victor. (Notes, Is. xxiii. 12. xlvii. 1—3.) The city of David or Zion, seems never to have been taken by any assailant from the time when David got possession of it, till the Babylonish captivity.—The former part of this message is addressed, not to Hezekiah, but to Sennacherib, as if present; first by the daughter of Zion, and then by the Lord himself.

V. 22. Sennacherib had both exalted his voice, in reproach and blasphemy against God; and lifted up his eyes, in pride and ambition; as if he even aspired to his throne, and affected equality with him, or even superiority above him. (Notes, 2 Chr. xxxii. 15. 19. Is. x. 15—19. Ez. xxviii. 2—10. Dan. v. 18—24. 2 Thes. ii. 3, 4.) But he did not well consider whom he had thus affronted; not the idols of the heathens, which, being wood and stone, he had easily cast into the fire; but Israel's holy protector, who would execute vengeance upon him for his bold presumption; and being the Creator of heaven and earth, could crush as a moth the feeble worm which had set him at defiance.

V. 23. The Assyrian monarch was elated by his successes; and, on account of the number and valour of his troops, his chariots, and other military preparations, supposed that nothing would be too hard for him to accomplish. He is here introduced as glorying in what he had done, and would do. No mountain was so inaccessible but he could drive his chariots over it; no forest so impervious, but he could level it with the ground; no place so fortified, but he would force his way into it! Some suppose he meant, that he had marched his army through the defiles, or over the craggy summits of mount Lebanon: but others think that by these expressions, the temple on mount Zion is intended; and that he gloried, as already indisputably master of the whole land; and as if he had marched his army, and driven his chariots, into the mountain of the Lord's house, and dispossessed him of his habitation. The temple may be called Lebanon, either because difficult of access, or because it was built with cedars of Lebanon; the removal of all obstructions, by slaying the bravest of Hezekiah's captains, may be denoted, by cutting down the cedars and choice fir-trees; and, "the lodgings of his borders, and the forest of his Carmel," may mean the strongholds upon the borders of the land; and the fruitful fields, which would come into the possession of the conqueror. For Carmel being situated in a very fruitful part of the land, every fruitful spot seems to have been called by that name. (Margin Notes, Is. x. 13—15.)

V. 24. Hezekiah had before taken measures to prevent the Assyrians from finding water near Jerusalem, (2 Chr. xxxii. 3, 4.) But this haughty conqueror boasted, that wherever his armies marched to besiege cities, they dried up all the rivers by which they were defended, either by the numbers who drank of them, or by diverting their course into other channels: and also, that by digging wells, he found water, where none was ever found before: as if he had been capable of dividing the rivers, that his army might march over: and of bringing waters from the rock, as JEHOVAH had done for his people! (Notes, Ex. xiv. 26—31. xvii. 5, 6. Josh. iii. 15—17.)—The cities of Egypt, where Sennacherib had been very successful, were chiefly defended by rivers or deep moats.

—V. 25. When the Lord had declared the vain-glorious thoughts of Sennacherib's heart, who affected to be thought invincible and omnipotent; he addressed him as in person, and interrogated him, whether he had never heard that these were the peculiar works of Israel's God? In ancient times, long before Sennacherib, or the ancestors of whom he boasted, were born, JEHOVAH

27 But "I know thy "abode, and "thy going out, and thy coming in, and thy rage against me.

28 Because "thy rage against me "and thy tumult is come up into mine ears, therefore I will put "my hook in thy nose, and my bridle in thy lips, and I will turn thee back "by the way by which thou camest.

29 And this shall be "a sign unto thee, "Ye shall eat this year such things as grow of themselves, and in the second year that which springeth of the same; and in the third year, sow ye and reap, and plant vineyards, and eat the fruits thereof.

30 "And "the remnant that is escaped of the house of Judah "shall yet again take root downward, and bear fruit upward.

31 For "out of Jerusalem shall go forth a remnant, and "they that escape out of mount Zion; "the zeal of the LORD of hosts shall do this.

32 Therefore thus saith the LORD, concerning the king of Assyria, "He shall not come into this city, nor shoot an arrow there, nor come before it with shield, nor "cast a bank against it.

33 By the way that he came, by the same shall he return, and shall not come into this city, saith the LORD.

(for the deliverance of his people, and to form them into a nation worshipping him,) had, as it were, levelled mountains: he had literally dried up rivers and seas, to afford them a passage; and caused them to drink strange waters flowing from the rock of flint. Or rather, Sennacherib, in what he had done, had only fulfilled the purposes and predictions of JEHOVAH, as his instrument in his least honourable work of executing vengeance; and this without intending it, and instigated only by his own ambition, rage, and insatiable rapacity. God, in righteousness, had allotted him the service of "laying waste fenced cities into ruinous heaps," which he performed in a most iniquitous manner.—Isaiah's prophecies concerning the Assyrians may also be intended. (Notes, Is. vii. 17—25. viii. 6—10. x. 5—15. 24—34. xxx. 27—32. xxxiii. 1—13.)

V. 26. The Lord had been pleased to enfeeble and intimidate all the enemies, which Sennacherib had hitherto encountered; so that they fell before him as the grass before the scythe; nay, they withered of themselves, "as grass on the house-tops, or as corn blasted before it be grown up." (Note, Ps. cxxxix. 6—8.) His success was therefore no decided proof, that he possessed extraordinary power, courage, or conduct; and he had no reason thus to vaunt, as if he had done wonderful things.

V. 27, 28. The Lord knew Sennacherib's secret thoughts, as well as his undertakings; and that he was actuated by implacable enmity against his perfections, authority, worship, and worshippers: especially since Hezekiah, trusting in the Lord, had dared to disregard his menaces and resist his will. This rage had vented itself in blasphemies and reproaches against God; and it had also occasioned insolent threatenings and tumultuous preparations against Jerusalem. But the Lord was about to deal with him by force, as with some savage beast, or untractable horse or mule: he would fasten a hook in his nose, and a bridle in his mouth, and let him know that there was One, infinitely above him; and send him home baffled and disgraced. (Notes, Job xli. 1—11. Is. xxxvii. 29. Ez. xxix. 3—5. xxxviii. 4.)

V. 29. The Lord here addresses Hezekiah.—The devastations of the Assyrians had, probably, prevented the land from being sown that year; and the next is supposed to have been the sabbatical year; (though this is the only intimation, in all the history of Israel, that any regard was paid to that institution:) but the Lord here engaged, that the spontaneous produce of the land, from the corn shaken out, in gathering the preceding harvest, should be sufficient for the support of the people, during those two years, and till a supply was obtained in the ordinary way. (Note, Lev. xxv. 20—22.) As the performance of this promise was evidently subsequent to the destruction of Sennacherib's army, it was a sign to Hezekiah's faith, that the present deliverance would be an earnest of the Lord's persevering care of the kingdom of Judah; and of the accomplishment of that part of the promise which related to events still more remote. (Note, Exod. iii. 12.)

V. 30, 31. The ten tribes were already carried captive; Judah was brought very low; Jerusalem alone withstood the victor's arms, and it was menaced with a siege. (Note, Is. viii. 6—8.) The professed worshippers of God were a very small remnant, and seemed devoted to ruin. But that remnant would be as seed-corn; which, striking root in a fruitful soil, springs up and yields a large increase. (Note, Is. xxvii. 6, 7.) They were destined to go forth from mount Zion, to possess the land, and to spread into distant countries; and were a typical resemblance of the apostles and primitive Christians, who from Jerusalem carried the gospel into all the nations of the earth, in order to produce an immense increase of true believers, who are all the children of Abraham, and heirs according to the promise. (Note, Gal. iii. 26—29.) This the Lord himself undertook to perform; not because of their righteousness, but out of zeal for his own glory; to make known his perfections, to magnify his law and authority, and to promote his worship. (Note, Is. ix. 6, 7.)

V. 32. (Notes, 8. Is. xxxiii. 20—22.)

34 For 'I will defend this city, to save it, ^{for mine} own sake, and for 'my servant David's sake.

35 ¶ And it came to pass that night, that *the angel of the LORD went out, and smote in the camp of the Assyrians an hundred four-score and five thousand: and "when they arose early in the morning, behold, they were all dead corpses.

37 And it came to pass, as he was worshipping in the house of 'Nisroch, his god, that Adrammelech and Sharezer 'his sons smote him with the sword: and they escaped into the land of 'Armenia. And 'Esarhaddon his son reigned in his stead.

V. 34. For my servant, &c. That is, from a gracious regard to David's faith and piety, to perform the promises made to his family, and to make way for the coming of the Messiah, who was to descend from him.

V. 35. Rabshakeh seems to have rejoined the king with his detachment: and, after the victory gained over Tirhakah, Sennacherib marched directly to besiege Jerusalem; and was just arrived and encamped near that city, but had not made any assault upon it. And this happened the very night after Hezekiah had spread the letter before God, and sought his help by prayer. The devastation was made with such profound silence, that the survivors were not aware of the blow, till they arose in the morning, and found one hundred and eighty-five thousand of their comrades dead in the camp! "When they arose,—these," (the hundred and eighty-five thousand,) "were all dead corpses." Probably, Rabshakeh perished among the rest; but Sennacherib was preserved to still deeper disgrace, and a more dreadful end.—The angels excel in strength: this angel was commissioned by divine authority, and armed with adequate power; and it is not requisite for us to determine in what manner he effected this tremendous slaughter. (Notes, Ps. lxxvi. Is. x. 16—19, 28—34. xxix. 5—8. xxxi. 8, 9. xxxiii. 23, 24.)—Herodotus reports from the Egyptians, that their king, being also a priest, by his prayers to his god, brought this destruction on the Assyrians, as they lay before Pelusium: a great army of rats coming in the night, and gnawing all their bowstrings in pieces, so that they could not fight. So studious were they to pervert the truth, and corrupt the sacred story! (Bp. Patrick.)

V. 36, 37. Sennacherib is supposed to have survived this catastrophe for some time; and to have lived under great contempt, but exercising the most odious cruelty towards his subjects. Though he had had such awful demonstration of the power of JEHOVAH, and the impotence of his own idols; yet, he adhered to the latter, and died in an act of idolatrous worship: a striking example of the difference between the God in whom Hezekiah trusted, to whom he prayed, and by whom he was miraculously delivered, in the most urgent extremity; and the god of Sennacherib, who could not defend him in his own capital, during profound peace, from the sword of his sons, even while employed in acts of religious worship!—Some have conjectured, that Sennacherib had vowed to sacrifice his sons to his idol, and that they murdered him in self-defence.—Esarhaddon seems to have been a man of much better character than his father. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—13. In times of great distress and prevailing impiety, strong expressions of poignant sorrow and deep humiliation are peculiarly seasonable: for, "the LORD calls to weeping, and mourning, and girding with sackcloth," and the contrary spirit and conduct are irrational, offensive, and tokens of a profane, sensual, and selfish heart. (Note, Is. xxii. 8—14).—They, who best know the efficacy of fervent believing prayer, will most desire the supplications of others for them; and especially of those, who have long been eminent for piety and simplicity. Alas! few kings are very earnest to form alliances with the zealous ministers of God, against their hostile invaders; yet, they are of more real utility, than increasing numbers of brave and disciplined troops: and whenever princes, prophets, and people unite in prayer, in real dependence on God, and a disposition to give him the praise; a prosperous event may be confidently expected, notwithstanding their own weakness, and the rebukes and insults of haughty enemies.—The Lord resisteth the proud, and will vindicate his own cause against those, who reproach, defy, or blaspheme his name; or who rival him, and rob him of his glory.—The more we are humbly conscious that we cannot help ourselves, but must be miserable and perish without his aid; the more simple will be our dependence on him, and the more fervent our applications to him, whether in temporal or spiritual exigencies.—Man's extremity is, therefore, God's opportunity: and while his servants can speak nothing but terror to the proud, the profane, and the hypocritical; they have comfortable words to say to the discouraged believer. "Be not afraid: thine enemies are God's enemies, and thy cause is his cause: in glorifying himself, he must protect and save those who trust in him. He delighteth in giving the very blessings for which thy soul is athirst; and with the breath of his mouth he can slay the wicked, and blast all the machinations of earth and hell against his church."—The Lord finds wicked men other employment, when he would give his servants a respite from conflict and persecution: and even those projects, which are in themselves most trifling or most detestable, often so engross the minds, occupy the time, and fill the hands of the ungodly, as to detain them from attempting that mischief to the cause of God, to which otherwise they would be disposed. But their pursuits of wealth, of honour, of pleasure, or of learning, do not prevent their discovering the enmity of their hearts, or filling up the measure of their sins: and when this is done, they are taken away, and their place knoweth them no more.—The blasphemies, which many utter, are not unmeaning words, as they suppose, but the natural produce of their depraved hearts: and therefore they reiterate them, and grow more outrageous in them, when recent occasions are afforded. Absurd as it appears, men really think, that they who trust in God will be deceived; and they presume upon success, whilst they despise him, and set him at defiance! Impunity and prosperity inspire confidence and arrogance; and men expect to prevail against all who resist them, because in some instances they have been successful!

V. 14—22. We can easily say, "If God be for us, who can be against us?" but in the crisis of danger, when the eye of sense perceives no way of escape, without removing mountains, and effecting apparent impossibilities, faith is constrained to maintain a severe conflict against unbelief, even in the experience of the most established believers. But prayer is the never-failing resource of the tempted Christian; whether he be called to struggle with outward difficulties, or to engage in the more distressing warfare with his inward enemies. At the mercy-seat of his almighty Friend he opens his heart; before him he particularly spreads the case; to him he makes his appeal: and when he can discern, that the glory of God is engaged on his side, his faith gains the victory, and he again exults in the assurance, that he never shall be moved. He knows the difference between JEHOVAH, whose mysterious nature and harmonious perfections are revealed in the sacred Scriptures; and all those idols, which are the work of men's hands, or the creatures of their imaginations. Infidels may indeed triumph over superstition, hypocrisy, and every form of worthless profession: and they may vaunt and boast, as if they could, with equal ease and certainty, prevail against the truths and spiritual worship of God our Saviour. But, whether they employ the terrors of persecution, or the more specious armour of blasphemous reproaches, sarcastic wit, or proud reasonings; their assaults are vain against the faith and prayers, the holy lives and scriptural preaching, of the Lord's true servants. "The weapons of our warfare are mighty through God," not only to repel the assaults of Satan and his ministers, whether they assume the form of the roaring lion, the subtle serpent, or the angel of light; but to subvert his strongholds, and "to cast down imaginations," or reasonings, "and every high thing, that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and the obedience of Christ;" (Note, 2 Cor. x. 1—6).—No weapon that is formed against the church can prosper: and the daughter of Zion, whilst untainted with idolatry or hypocrisy, and faithfully reserving herself for him, who hath "espoused her in righteousness, and faithfulness, and lovingkindness," may despise and defy the feeble efforts of all assailants, and confidently predict their speedy and terrible destruction. Oh, that such persons would consider, "whom they have reproached and blasphemed!" whom they have opposed and attempted to run down! "against whom they have exalted their voice, and lifted up their eyes on high!" They may think that he is only a man like themselves: but they will find, that he is "the Holy One of Israel." He sees their inmost thoughts; he discerns the rage and enmity of their hearts; as well as hears the stout and arrogant words, which they instigate each other to speak against him: and what will they do, when from his awful tribunal he shall give the mandate, "These mine enemies, which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither, and slay them before me?" (Note, Luke xix. 11—27.)

V. 23—37. The greatest exploits of men are unworthy of notice, compared with the most ordinary works of God: they all undesignedly accomplish his secret purposes, or express predictions; and the most successful prosper only, till they have filled up their part of his universal plan. Some the Lord employs, contrary to their own intentions, as executioners of his vengeance, "to lay waste fenced cities into ruinous heaps;" and therefore their opposers prove weak, timid, or infatuated: but, when they have accomplished their work, (perhaps with hearts full of rage against Him who had exalted and prospered them;) their turn comes next, and others execute vengeance upon them: or he deals with them by his own hand, as with some great behemoth, and restrains, confines, or enfeebles, them, as he sees good. But his believing people, safe under his protection, and living upon his grace and providential bounty, are employed as willing instruments to perform his works of goodness and mercy, which when finished shall meet a sure reward. Whilst all creatures here below subserve their good; and nature itself is made to transcend her usual limits, or alter her settled course, to supply their wants; and whilst the mighty angels are all ministering spirits, sent forth to protect them, or avenge them on their enemies; they, in their places, would imitate that prompt obedience, and "delight to do the commandments" of God, "hearkening unto the voice of his word."—But, all creatures, yea, the holy angels, and the Lord of angels himself, fight against those who fight against his church: nay, those objects on which they chiefly depend, and those persons from whom they expect the greatest kindness, will concur in effecting their destruction; and every respite will finally add to their infamy and misery.—The cause of God, however reduced, will surely revive: the remnant of every generation will yield an increase to that which succeeds; and at length "Israel shall blossom, and bud, and fill the face of the earth with fruit." The zeal of the Lord of hosts, which appointed, and sent the mighty Saviour, is engaged to apply and spread his salvation, and to fill the earth with the knowledge of his glory: not now for his servant David's sake, but for the sake of his "beloved Son, in whom he is well pleased." May our hearts be prepared as good ground, that his word may strike root in them, and bring forth fruit in our lives! then we shall witness the full completion of all those prophecies, of which he hath already given us so many signs and earnestness, whilst with exulting millions we shall sing, "Hallelujah! the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth, and the kingdoms of the earth are become the kingdoms of the Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign for ever and ever. Amen, and amen."

H. C. 713.

Hezekiah, when sick, is warned by Isaiah to prepare for death, 1; but praying, receives the promise of fifteen years added to his life, and of deliverance from the Assyrians, 2-7. In confirmation, the shadow on Ahaz's dial goes back ten degrees, 8-11. The king of Babylon sends to congratulate Hezekiah, who shows the ambassadors all his treasures, 12, 13. Isaiah reproves him for this, and foretells the Babylonian captivity, 14-19. Hezekiah dies, and is succeeded by Manasseh, 20, 21.

IN those days "was Hezekiah sick unto death. And the prophet Isaiah the son of Amoz came to him, and said unto him, Thus saith the LORD, 'Set thine house in order; for 'thou shalt die, and not live.

2 Then "he turned his face to the wall, and prayed unto the LORD, saying,

3 I beseech thee, O LORD, 'remember now how 'I have walked before thee 'in truth, and with 'a perfect heart, and have done that which is good in thy sight. And Hezekiah 'wept 'sore.

4 And it came to pass, afore Isaiah was gone out into the middle 'court, that the word of the LORD came to him, saying,

5 'Turn again, and tell Hezekiah, 'the captain of my people, Thus saith the LORD, "'the God of David thy father, 'I have heard thy prayer, 'I have seen thy tears: behold, 'I will heal thee; on the third day 'thou shalt go up unto the house of the LORD.

9 And Isaiah said, 'This sign shalt thou have of the LORD, that the LORD will do the thing that he hath spoken: Shall the shadow go forward ten degrees, or go back ten degrees?

NOTES.

CHAP. XX. V. 1. Hezekiah reigned twenty-nine years, and he lived fifteen after this sickness: it must therefore have happened in the fourteenth, or beginning of the fifteenth, year of his reign; about the time of Sennacherib's first invasion of Judea. (xviii. 13.)—It is not likely, that all the events recorded in the two preceding chapters were crowded within a part of one year; yet, this must have been the case, if Hezekiah's sickness was subsequent to the destruction of the Assyrian army. (Notes, 2 Chr. xxxii. 25, 26. Is. xxxviii. 6.)—The expression, "Set thine house in order," or, command concerning thine house, was a direction to Hezekiah, to make without delay, a full and final settlement of his domestic and civil concerns, that nothing might interrupt his mind, or take it off from the exercise of devotion, in the nearer approaches of death; and yet, that nothing might be neglected, which related to the interests of survivors. Hezekiah's disorder was in itself mortal, and must have terminated in death, without a miracle: the prophet therefore spoke according to the natural tendency of the disorder, and not according to the Lord's secret purposes. Hezekiah's prayer shewed, that he did not consider the sentence to be irreversible.

V. 2. It is probable that Hezekiah turned his face to the wall of his chamber, (which might perhaps be towards the temple,) merely that he might have more freedom and privacy, in pouring out his heart before God.

V. 3. Hezekiah evidently prayed, that he might recover, though he expressed himself with submission to the will of God: and doubtless he was very unwilling to die at that time. To account for this, it has been said, that believers under the Old Testament, having dark views of the eternal world, might be expected to die with more regret, than those under the New: but facts by no means support this supposition; for Abraham, Jacob, Aaron, Moses, Joshua, David, and others, seem to have left the world with as much joyfulness as Paul himself. We must, therefore, ascribe Hezekiah's reluctance to die, either to the state of his mind, or to the circumstances of his family and the nation. Nothing appears peculiarly to have distressed him, in the view of immediate death, as to the state of his own soul. But the circumstances of his family, and the state of affairs in Israel, seem to solve all the difficulty. Probably, at that time Hezekiah had no son; for, Manasseh, who succeeded him, was not born till three years after, (1. xxi. 1.) By his death, therefore, this branch of David's family would have been extinct, and the succession must have been continued in a more remote and obscure branch of it: and this would have been a discouraging rebuke to him, as if he had forfeited the covenant of royalty. It is a general and probable opinion, that the nation was at this time threatened with an assault by the whole force of the king of Assyria; they therefore needed a commander, who united wisdom, courage, and faith, to head them in such an emergency: and if he were removed, and they were left to a disputed succession, and the weakness of an usurped or opposed government, there could be little prospect, but that Jerusalem would share the fate of Samaria. With great earnestness and perseverance, Hezekiah had brought his reformation to a hopeful establishment: but he might fear, lest the instability of the people, and the dissensions of the nobles, would subvert all, if he were taken away. He therefore desired to live, not for his own sake so much, as for that of his family and people, especially for the interests of true religion; and he prayed to that effect, with many tears, as well as with great fervency. (Notes, Is. xxxviii. 3. 9-20.) The Lord knew, and Hezekiah could appeal to him, that he had walked before him in sincerity and uprightness of heart; having used his authority to suppress idolatry and wickedness, and by every means to promote the worship and service of God; and that he had done what was good in his sight, being an example to his people. The consciousness of his integrity gave him confidence; and he begged the Lord to remember the fruits of grace which had been produced, and to spare him, that he might be yet more fruitful and useful. (Notes, 2 Chr. xxx. 22-27. xxxi. 20, 21. Neh. xiii. 14. 31.)

V. 4, 5. (Notes, 2 Sam. 1-5.) The captain, (5.) This title implies that Hezekiah was spared, that he might lead the people to victory, by the prevailing weapons of faith and prayer. (Note, Josh. v. 13-15. Marg. Ref.) The Lord knew his heart, and saw that he would be disposed, in the first place, after his recovery, to go up to his courts to return thanks for the mercy; and therefore he suited the message to his secret desires and intentions. (8.)

V. 6. Hezekiah was the only person, that we read of, who was previously informed how long he was to live. Such information would be of very bad tendency to ungodly men: and it would not be either comfortable or useful to a believer, unless animated with a vigorous faith, and glowing zeal for the honour of God. Doubtless, this pious king made a good use of his knowledge, and waited the appointed period of his days with calm resignation; but we need not envy him this peculiar privilege. He was not more than fifty-four years old when he died.

V. 7, 8. It seems that Hezekiah's sickness was a species of the plague, accompanied with a boil of fatal tendency: whether this application were medicinally proper, or not, doubtless it was rendered effectual by miracle; or rather, it was a token of the Divine operation by which he was healed.

V. 8. What, &c? As the Lord was graciously pleased, frequently, to confirm his promises by signs, Hezekiah desired one in this case; not in unbelief, but for the confirmation of his wavering faith. (Notes, Judg. vi. 36-40. Is. vii. 10-12.)

V. 9-11. The dial, it is probable, was placed full in Hezekiah's view, and the sun shining upon it: and he was allowed to choose, whether the shadow should go forward or backward ten degrees; (that is, half-hour lines, as it is conjectured.) The progression of the shadow with accelerated speed, though evidently miraculous, seemed not so extraordinary to Hezekiah as its retrograde motion, which he preferred, and which accordingly took place. We are not concerned to determine, how God produced this effect: if he saw good, he was able to cause a temporary change in the motion of the earth and heavenly bodies. (Note, Josh. x. 12-14:) and some think that the same effect was produced in other places, especially at Babylon; (Notes, 2 Chr. xxxii. 31. Is. xxxviii. 8.)—It appears from Herodotus, that the Egyptians had observed some few instances, in which the course of the sun and moon was very different from what was usual; though their traditions of them were greatly distorted, and unlike the real facts as recorded in Scripture.

V. 12, 13. The king of Babylon seems at this time to have reigned independent; but he was in danger of being reduced under the power of the Assyrian monarch: yet, in process of time Babylon acquired the pre-eminence, and swallowed up the Assyrian empire. (Notes, 17, 18. xvii. 24. xxiii. 29, 30. 2 Chr. xxxiii. 11. Is. xxxix. 1.) This prince, having heard of Hezekiah's sickness, and the miraculous circumstances of his recovery, and knowing that he had refused submission to the Assyrians, seems to have wished to enter into a confederacy with him against that potent nation. Hezekiah was too well pleased with this flattering embassy; and, in order to convince the ambassadors, who brought the letters, that he was a desirable ally, he shewed them all his treasures, and every kind of armour. This resulted from pride and ostentation, and might have led to an improper alliance with an idolatrous prince. He seems likewise to have missed the opportunity of instructing the Chaldeans, concerning the perfections of JEHOVAH, who had wrought the miracles which had excited 14 ¶ Then 'came Isaiah the prophet unto king Hezekiah, and said unto him, 'What said these men? and from whence came they unto thee? And Hezekiah said, They are come from a far country, even from Babylon.

15 And he said, What have they seen in thine house? And Hezekiah answered, "All the things that are in mine house have they seen: there is nothing among my treasures that I have not shewed them.

16 And Isaiah said unto Hezekiah, "Hear the word of the LORD.

17 Behold, the days come, that all that is in thine house, and that which thy fathers have laid up in store unto this day, shall be carried into Babylon: nothing shall be left, saith the LORD.

18 And of 'thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away; and 'they shall be eunuchs in the palace of the king of Babylon.

19 Then said Hezekiah unto Isaiah, 'Good is the 21 And Hezekiah 'slept with his fathers: and 'Manasseh his son reigned in his stead.

CHAP. XXI.

Manasseh reigns very wickedly and idolatrously, 1-9. Prophecies against Judah because of his wickedness, 10-16. He dies, and is succeeded by Amon, 17, 18. Amon reigns wickedly, 19-22. He is slain by his servants; the people put the conspirators to death; and make his son Josiah king, 23, 24. Amon's acts and burial, 25, 26.

MANASSEH 'was twelve years old when he began to reign, and reigned fifty and five years in Jerusalem: and his mother's name was 'Hephzibah.

2 And 'he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, 'after the abominations of the heathen, whom the LORD cast out before the children of Israel.

their attention; and concerning his authority, law, and worship; and of shewing them the absurdity and evil of idolatry, especially their worship of the sun, which was evidently the creature and servant of the God of Israel. (Notes, 2 Chr. xxxii. 25, 26. Is. xxxix. 2.)

V. 14, 15. Hezekiah did not resent the prophet's interference in state-affairs; (Notes, 2 Chr. xvi. 7-10. xxv. 14-16;) for he revered his person, confided in his prudence and affection, and desired to hear the will of God from him. In his answer, he intimated, that he had counted it an honour to receive ambassadors from a far country. (Notes, Josh. ix. 8-15.) Perhaps, he was not at first conscious of having done wrong; yet, in reviewing and relating his conduct, he seems to have been made sensible of his sin and folly. (Note, 2 Chr. xxxii. 31.)

V. 17, 18. Considering the small power of the king of Babylon at this time, compared with that of the Assyrian kings, who seemed about to establish a permanent dominion over all the adjacent countries; nothing could well be more unlikely, than the accomplishment of this prediction: yet in somewhat more than a hundred years it was exactly fulfilled!—All the remaining treasures of the temple, palace, and city, were carried to Babylon; and Daniel and his companions, some of whom were descended from Hezekiah, became eunuchs in the king of Babylon's palace; (Note, Dan. i. 3-7.)—It seems to have been soon after this, that Hezekiah exhausted his treasures, hoping to pacify Sennacherib. (Note, xviii. 14-16.) He dreaded the power of the Assyrians; but he was more disposed to expect help, than to fear ruin, from the king of Babylon.

V. 19. Hezekiah humbly and submissively allowed the justice of the sentence, and the goodness of God in the respite; and gratefully acknowledged his unmerited kindness, in the peace, prosperity, and continuance of true religion in his days. Yet the prospect, respecting his family and nation, must have occasioned him many painful sensations. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-11. 'In the midst of life we are in death:—happy then are they, and they alone, who are habitually prepared for that event! Yet even to them, it is desirable to be apprised of its immediate approach: that they may settle all their temporal concerns, for the peace and benefit of their survivors; and then meet the separating stroke, with that calmness, and in that frame of spirit, which may most impress and edify surrounding friends.—If the Lord seem to command us "to set our house in order, for we must die, and not live;" and yet afterwards unexpectedly prolong our days; our preparation in that case will neither mar the comfort, nor lessen the usefulness, of our future lives.—It is frequently required of ministers, to intimate to sick persons the probability of their approaching dissolution; as well as to assist them in improving the visitation, and in preparing for the event: and should such intimations afterwards prove erroneous, they ought not to be censured; for they can only speak according to their judgment, and deliver that message from God, which appears to them suited to the case of those whom they address.—Though miracles, properly so called, have ceased: yet the Lord hears the prayer of faith for the sick, and sometimes remarkably prospers simple means, used in dependence on his blessing. And though physicians, (for prophets are not now sent from God to inform us in these matters;) should give little encouragement respecting the recovery of beloved and useful persons; we may still continue to pray for them: for, "with God all things are possible," and the most sagacious of men are often found mistaken. In respect of ourselves, it is generally best to be willing to depart, and to pray especially for spiritual blessings in behalf of ourselves and others. Yet there may be cases, in which men may with propriety be importunate for the continuance of life and health, in order to complete designs of public and allowed utility, and which appear likely to be frustrated if they should be removed; or when in any way the important interests of families, churches, or nations appear to them connected with their lives. Yet, as we are all liable to mistake in these concerns, submission to the Divine will should be invariably united with such petitions; and nothing else should make any man desirous to live in this wretched world, who knows that he is ready for a better.—The mercy of our God, and the merits of our heavenly Advocate, form the sinner's never-failing plea at the throne of grace: yet, the consciousness of sincerity in our professed faith and piety, gives confidence in times of trial; and and may, on some occasions, be pleaded before him, without the imputation of pride or self-righteousness.—Secret earnest prayer is the approved and never-failing method of obtaining relief and comfort, in seasons of the deepest distress: and sometimes the Lord immediately turns the mourning of the humble supplicant into joy and thanksgiving. He always hears the prayers and sees the tears of the broken in heart; and will give health, length of days, and temporal deliverances, as much, and as long, as they are truly beneficial.—The minister of Christ must deliver his Lord's message, when it contains alarms and rebukes; but he delights to be the messenger of joy and consolation, to those whom his word hath previously wounded.—If we would have promised mercies, we must observe the instituted means; for these, being connected with the end by the express promises of God, are far more certainly efficacious, when used properly, than any of those means which produce their effect in the ordinary course of Providence: and yet, the latter ought not to be neglected, lest we tempt rather than trust the Lord.—Recovery from sickness should always be publicly acknowledged, by first "going up to the house of the Lord," to render the sacrifices of praise and thanksgiving, if it can be done: yet, alas! few observe this rule, and many of those few do it as a formal task; whilst re-established health is employed in scenes of diversion or business, if not more directly devoted to the service of Satan by licentious pleasures. (Note, Luke xvii. 11-19.) But the true believer values the ability and opportunity of attending on God's ordinances, and will go up with a glad and thankful heart. (Notes, Ps. cxviii. 17-24;) and value that more than any other privilege of health.—True faith is not without its misgivings, so that the strongest believers desire to have their more strengthened: and in their experience, the Lord is pleased sometimes to give those evidences of his power, truth, and love to them, which establish their hearts as effectually as miraculous signs did of old. All creatures are his servants, to minister to the good of his children; and in answer to their prayers he can, in innumerable ways, render them subservient even to their spiritual benefit.

V. 12-21. Alas! how seldom do we make suitable returns to the Lord for his condescending mercies to us! Ambition and ostentation too generally intrude where thankfulness alone should occupy the heart; and we are often chargeable with pride, vanity, and carnal confidence, when we do not suspect ourselves.—It is very difficult to possess distinctions in rank, wealth, elegant furniture, or any thing valued by men, without a secret self-preference, and a desire that others should admire the possessor's ingenuity, taste, magnificence, or felicity. This foolish pride the Lord will rebuke and correct in those whom he loves; and especially when they idolize the opinion of ungodly men, and court their acquaintance, because they profess to esteem and admire them. But it is hopeful, when persons in superior rank will endure to be reasoned with, and reproved by those, who, in outward circumstances, are greatly their inferiors; for generally such interference, however well meant and prudently conducted, excites resentment.—If we could look into futurity, it would damp our joy in present prosperity; and we may expect vexation from every object, in proportion as we have been inordinately pleased with it.—Our regard to posterity, and our grief for the gloomy prospects before us, in the church or the world, must not render us unmindful of our present mercies, or induce impatient murmurs. Our God hath wise and righteous reasons for all he doeth, or permiteth to be done: and if we enjoy peace, and the advantages of true religion in our days, we should be very thankful. Shortly, our trials and services will end together. Our space is limited, though its limits are unknown to us, and then we shall sleep with our fathers. And "blessed are the dead, which die in the Lord; for they rest from their labours, and their works do follow them!"

NOTES.

CHAP. XXI. V. 1, 2. It is uncertain whether Hezekiah had any other children than Manasseh, or any other wives than Hephzibah, (whose name signifies, My delight is in her. (Notes, Is. lxii. 1-5.)) Doubtless, Manasseh had been properly educated during the life-time of his father; and the rudiments of religious knowledge which he then imbibed, though they aggravated the guilt of his enormous impiety, might prove the seeds of his subsequent repentance: at least we may be sure that his pious father offered many prayers for him, which at length were answered. (Notes, 2 Chr. xxxiii. 12-17.)—It would be pleasing to his youthful mind to inherit a prosperous kingdom so early in these abominations, and hath done wickedly 'above all that the Amorites did, which were before him, and hath 'made Judah also to sin with his idols;

life; but this circumstance proved extremely prejudicial to him, and was still more ruinous to his people. (Notes, Luke xv. 11—16. P. O. 11—16.) The event, as well as the testimony of the prophets, evinces, that Hezekiah's reformation had been complied with in a reluctant and hypocritical manner, especially by the chief men; and that the nation was ripening fast for destruction. The nobles, upon whom the regency, or the counselling of the young king must necessarily devolve, seem to have been disposed to idolatry; and, by humouring and flattering Manasseh, they trained him up to concur with their wishes, and probably to go beyond them: (Notes, 2 Chr. xxiv. 17, 18. Matt. xxiii. 15.) Soon after Hezekiah's death, his reformation seems to have been subverted; and the king proceeded from bad to worse, till he was carried captive to Babylon. Thus Hezekiah, though a prince of eminent piety and excellency, was the son of a very wicked father, and the father of a more wicked son! (Marg. Ref.)

V. 3. It is probable that Manasseh was taught to consider his father's attachment to the temple, as the effect of a weak and bigoted mind. It appeared to the nobles more convenient, liberal, and magnificent, to have a variety of temples and altars, than to be confined to meet with the poorest of the people, from all parts of the land, at Solomon's temple. (Notes, 1 Kings xii. 29. 2 Chr. xxiv. 17, 18. Is. xxix. 13—16.) In contempt, therefore, of his father's memory, the king rebuilt the high places which had been piously destroyed. (Notes, xviii. 4. 22. 2 Chr. xxxi. 1. Ec. ii. 12—17.) Yet this seemed but a light thing, and he soon proceeded to copy Ahab's idolatry, and even to exceed it. (Note, 1 Kings xvi. 30—33.)

V. 4, 5. In order, as it were, the more directly to insult the God of Israel, Manasseh built altars to his idols, and to the host of heaven, the sun, moon, and stars, not only in Jerusalem, where the Lord had recorded his name, but even in the courts of the temple itself; both that into which the priests and Levites, and such as brought sacrifices, entered, and that in which the other worshippers assembled. (Marg. Ref. Note, 2 Chr. xxxiii. 6.)

V. 6. His son. "His children." (2 Chr. xxxiii. 6.) Amon was not born till the thirty-third year of Manasseh's reign, which is generally computed to have been subsequent to his captivity and repentance. (1. 19.) If so, some other son was thus dedicated to his idol, perhaps with some of his daughters likewise, of whom nothing is recorded. But it may be doubted whether Manasseh's captivity was so long before his death: the general character of his reign in Scripture, and the very imperfect reformation which afterwards took place, seem to militate against that opinion; and there is no scriptural information concerning the date of his captivity, or even the name of the Assyrian king who carried him captive; so that, perhaps Amon was the son here peculiarly intended. (Note, 2 Chr. xxxiii. 11.)

Observed times, &c. The persons who practised, or pretended to, these several methods of holding correspondence with invisible agents, or obtaining information from them, were Manasseh's oracles: and he enquired of them, instead of consulting the Lord by his prophets, or by the high priest. No doubt, they humoured his vanity, and gratified his curiosity, without teaching him his duty, or reproving him for his sins. In this he went beyond all his predecessors. (Marg. Ref. Note, 1 Chr. x. 13, 14. 2 Chr. xxxiii. 9.)

V. 7, 8. (Notes, 2 Sam. vii. 8—11. 1 Kings vi. 11—13. ix. 3—6. Ps. lxxviii. 69.) Of the grove. (7.) Perhaps this was a model of some grove, used for idolatrous worship: though it is commonly supposed to have been the image of one of Manasseh's idols, as the original word Ashterah is nearly the same with Ashteroth, which denotes the female imaginary deities, which were worshipped along with Baalim. (Notes, xvii. 16. Judg. ii. 11—13.)—Manasseh seems to have placed this image in the temple itself. Thus he purposely affronted the Lord, and set him at defiance; making the idol his rival, to intercept the adoration of his worshippers.

V. 9. Manasseh proposed one idolatry after another; and the people in general readily complied, both to obtain his favour, and because it suited their depraved inclinations. Thus they proceeded to such an excess of wickedness, that they became worse than the ancient Amorites, or Canaanites, on whom Israel had inflicted the vengeance of heaven. (Notes, Lev. xviii. 24—30. Ez. xvi. 48—55.)

V. 10. It is not certain that any of the prophets, whose writings have come down to us, lived in the time of Manasseh. Isaiah and Hosea, probably, were dead. (Notes, 16. xix. 2. Is. i. 1. Hos. i. 1.) Jeremiah did not begin to prophesy till several years after Manasseh's death. It is not known when Joel flourished. Nahum and Habakkuk seem to have lived at a later period. But a succession of prophets was raised up; and many, doubtless, addressed their contemporaries, whose writings, or names, have not reached us.

V. 12. Tingle. (Note, 1 Sam. iii. 11.)

V. 13. As the builder keeps his work exactly straight and perpendicular, by the line and the plummet; so the Lord would execute exact justice upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem; proceeding by the same measure with them, as he had done with those of Samaria, whom he divided to the famine, to the sword, and to captivity; nay, he would be as severe with them as he had been with the idolatrous family of Ahab. (1 Kings xxi. 21—24.) The subsequent expressive similitude emphatically represents the city subverted, and totally desolated; yet not destroyed, but cleansed from idolatry, and reserved for the future residence of the Jews. (Notes, Ez. xxiv. 3—11.)

V. 14. Forsake, &c. Not finally, but for a season, during the Babylonish captivity; yet this only related to the collective body of the nation, and their external privileges; for individual believers were preserved, and peculiarly noticed, even during that visitation. (Note, 1 Sam. xii. 22.)

V. 16. Probably, infants were burnt in the fire, by Manasseh's authority, to Moloch; and the oppression, violence, and cruelty, of his general administration might occasion much unrighteous shedding of blood; but his persecuting rage, against those who opposed and reproved his idolatries, seems especially intended. The Jewish writers assert, that he caused the venerable Isaiah to be sawn asunder, for warning him and his people of approaching vengeance: but this is of very questionable authority.

V. 18. We shall hereafter meet with a more pleasing account of Manasseh's

19 ¶ Amon was twenty and two years old when he began to reign; and he reigned two years in Jerusalem: and his mother's name was Meshullemeth, the daughter of Haruz of Jotbah.

20 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, as his father Manasseh did.

21 And he walked in all the way that his father walked in, and served the idols that his father served, and worshipped them:

22 And he forsook the LORD God of his fathers, and walked not in the way of the LORD.

23 ¶ And the servants of Amon conspired against him, and slew the king in his own house.

24 And the people of the land slew all them that had conspired against king Amon; and the people of the land made Josiah his son king in his stead.

25 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Amon which he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

26 And he was buried in his sepulchre in the garden of Uzza: and Josiah his son reigned in his stead.

Jerusalem: and his mother's name was Jedidah, the daughter of Adaiah, of Bosath.

2 And he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD, and walked in all the way of David his father, and turned not aside to the right hand or to the left.

3 ¶ And it came to pass in the eighteenth year of king Josiah, that the king sent Shaphan the son of Azaliah, the son of Meshullam, the scribe, to the house of the LORD, saying,

4 Go up to Hilkiah the high priest, that he may sum the silver which is brought into the house of the LORD, which the keepers of the door have gathered of the people:

5 And let them deliver it into the hand of the doers of the work, that have the oversight of the house of the LORD: and let them give it to the doers of the work, which is in the house of the LORD, to repair the breaches of the house,

6 Unto carpenters, and builders, and masons, and to buy timber and hewn stone to repair the house.

7 Howbeit, there was no reckoning made with them of the money that was delivered into their hand, because they dealt faithfully.

8 ¶ And Hilkiah the high priest said unto Shaphan latter end: (Notes, 2 Chr. xxxiii. 11-19.)—He was not buried in the sepulchre of the kings, "but in the garden of Uzza," "in his own house," or some sepulchre which he had prepared there for himself. This seems to have been a penitent confession, that his crimes had rendered him unworthy to be numbered with the descendants of David. Some, however, suppose that the people would not allow him that honour. (Marg. Ref.) No doubt, however, he was a true penitent, though it is not here mentioned. (Note, 1 Kings xi. 42, 43.)

V. 20-24. If Manasseh repented only in the latter years of his life, Amon was trained up in his youth, with the worst instructions, and was accustomed to copy the worst examples: and to these he adhered without regarding his father's subsequent good behaviour or advice. (Notes, 6. 2 Chr. xxxiii. 11. 21-24.) But Amon's reign was very short, and he was soon cut off in his sins. Perhaps, his murderers meant to exclude the family of David, and seize the throne for themselves: but this was contrary to the purpose of God; and their wickedness only made way for Josiah, under whose government the nation had one bright expiring gleam of reformation and prosperity.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-9. Young persons are generally desirous of being their own masters, and of obtaining early possession of riches or power, that they may indulge their inclinations and self-importance; and too often, from such motives, are secretly rejoiced at the death of their parents. But this generally ruins the comfort of their future lives, and renders them the instruments of immense mischief to those who are unhappily connected with them. It is much safer and happier, when youth is sheltered under the fostering care of affectionate and prudent parents, or of faithful guardians and tutors: till greater maturity of age and experience gives a more hopeful prospect of discretion. Though such young persons are less indulged, caressed, and flattered, and are laid under restrictions unpleasant at the time; they may live to be thankful for the restraints under which at present they are impatient.—None are more abandoned than those who become wicked after a religious education; for they cannot have quietness in vice, till, by desperate courses, they have effectually stupefied their consciences; and, in every case, the greater the obstacles which are surmounted, before men attain to the undisturbed indulgence of their lusts, the more lost they are afterwards to all sense of shame or decency. But the Lord will put his fear into the hearts of his true people, that they shall not finally depart from him: yet, in the reformation of collective bodies, numbers are mere time-servers, such as "believe for a season, but in temptation fall away." (Note, Matt. xiii. 20, 21.) The mind of man is disposed to vibrate from one extreme to another; as the descending stone falls with a force proportioned to the height to which it was raised; so that times of remarkable revival in religion have often been succeeded by those of most notorious infidelity, impiety, and profligacy.—The ambition of excelling prompts sinners to aspire after pre-eminence, even in crimes; and men are capable of glorying in having gone beyond all their predecessors in iniquity, and in refining upon the blasphemy and sensuality of former times, or of contemporary rivals in vice!—An infidel neglect of true religion is often connected with the most absurd credulity and ridiculous superstitions!—Some daring sinners not only seek to gratify their lusts, but seem desirous of forcing their crimes upon the notice of the Almighty; as if ambitious of provoking his indignation by every token of contempt and defiance! and they peculiarly delight in seducing others to commit the same wickedness, as if ambitious also of promoting the ruin of their souls!—The vain-glory of young persons often appears in affecting to be wiser than their prudent and pious parents, by reversing all their plans, and especially by treating with contempt their religious singularities, as they suppose them to be.—But these are the ways in which men expose their own folly, and bring ruin upon themselves: thus they forfeit the Lord's favour and protection, and fall under his dreadful indignation: and all the mischief which they have done to others, will recoil upon themselves, to their increasing guilt and condemnation; except a timely repentance prevent the fatal consequences.

V. 10-26. If temporal judgments are so dreadful when foreseen or reported, what will be the horror of that day, when "the earth shall disclose her blood, and shall no more cover her slain!" Yet, in the severest vengeance, the Lord proceeds by rule and measure, and does not punish either nations or individuals beyond their deserts.—External privileges, instead of benefiting those who neglect the obedience of faith, will immensely enhance their guilt and punishment.—The Lord will cast off any professing people, who dishonour him by their crimes, and who persecute his servants, but he will never desert his cause on earth.—When sinners disregard the invitations and exhortations of God's ministers, they are constrained to denounce his awful vengeance. Then will resentment be awakened in the hearts of the proud and rebellious, and faith and patience will be peculiarly requisite: but the servants of the Lord will overcome all, "by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony."—It is inconceivable what wickedness some men have lived to commit, who yet have not only been spared, but pardoned: such transgressors cannot forgive themselves, but would live and die covered with shame and self-abbhorrence for all their crimes.—Whether the Lord bear long with presumptuous offenders, or whether he more speedily cut them off in their sins, all those who persist in forsaking him, and in refusing to walk in his ways, must perish: and the wickedness of the parent often occasions the destruction of the children. It is well, however, when the removal of the ungodly makes way for better characters; yet they who, instigated by any corrupt passion, execute deserved vengeance upon wicked men, will bring deserved vengeance upon themselves also.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXII. V. 1, 2. Josiah was seated on the throne by those who brought his father's murderers to justice, and who, doubtless, were friends to the family of David. (xxi. 24.) We may therefore suppose that the persons entrusted with his education were at least averse to idolatry, and favourable to the worship of JEHOVAH. Perhaps his mother was a pious person, and instilled good principles into his tender mind. By the blessing of God, however, on the means used, he was very early brought under religious impressions, and set about the work of public reformation; and the event of his succession, when a child, was widely different from that of Manasseh. (Notes, xxi. 1-3.) For his character was most excellent: he copied the faith, zeal, and piety, of his ancestor David, and kept the middle path, without diverging to any of those extremes to which human nature is prone. (Notes, xvii. 3. 5.) And had the people as cordially concurred in his reformation, as he entered upon and persevered in it, blessed effects would have followed; but they were given up to the most infatuated idolatry and wickedness, and his efforts only served to evince the incurable wickedness of that generation, (Notes, Jer. iii. 6-11. vi. 27-30. Ez. xxiv. 12, 13.)—We can obtain but a superficial knowledge of the state of Judah from these compendious historical records, unless we compare them with the writings of the contemporary prophets.

V. 3-7. Josiah began to seek the LORD in the eighth year of his reign, and to attempt a public reformation in the twelfth; so that considerable progress had before been made in destroying the idols, which filled Judah and Jerusalem to an almost inconceivable degree: but in his eighteenth year he proceeded to reinstate the temple and its worship in their former splendour, and the principal reformation in his reign was effected at this time. (Note, 2 Chr. xxxiv. 3-7.)—The money was collected by voluntary contributions, as in the time of Jehoash: but the Levites proved more active and faithful, than the priests had then done; and the workmen were no less worthy of confidence. (Notes, xii. 4-15.)

the scribe, "I have found the book of the law in the house of the LORD. And Hilkiah gave the book to Shaphan, and he read it.

9 And "Shaphan "the scribe came to the king, and brought the king word again, and said, Thy servants have gathered the money that was found in the house, and have delivered it into the hand of them that do the work, that have the oversight of the house of the LORD.

10 And Shaphan the scribe shewed the king, saying, Hilkiah the priest hath delivered me a book. And "Shaphan read it before "the king.

11 And it came to pass, when the king had heard the words of the book of the law, "that he rent his clothes.

12 And "the king commanded Hilkiah the priest, and "Ahikam the son of Shaphan, and "Achbor the son of "Michaiah, and Shaphan the scribe, and Asahiah a servant of the king's, saying,

13 Go ye, "enquire of the LORD for me, and for the people, and for all Judah, concerning the words of this book that is found: for "great is the wrath of the LORD that is kindled against us, "because our fathers have not hearkened unto the words of this book, to do according unto all that which is written concerning us.

14 So Hilkiah the priest, and Ahikam, and Achbor, and Shaphan, and Asahiah, went unto Huldah "the prophetess, the wife of Shallum the son of "Tikvah, the son of Harhas, keeper of the "wardrobe; (now

V. 8—11. The enquiries and controversies, which this account of finding the book of the law has occasioned, seem to have been quite unnecessary. If it were conceded, that no other complete copy existed in all the world, at the time when this book was found, it would not in the smallest degree invalidate the authenticity of that part of holy writ: because all the succeeding writers of the Scriptures, with Christ himself and his apostles, have given the sanction of their testimony to its divine original. All the cavils and objections therefore of infidels, grounded upon this circumstance, mean nothing; except they are intended to demonstrate their imbibed enmity to the sacred Scriptures.—It is highly probable, that copies of the law were at that time very scarce, through the idolatry of the former reigns, and the lamentable ungodliness of the people. It may also be reasonably conjectured, that the priests had made abstracts from it, of the outlines of their worship, without specifying particulars, or inserting the solemn sanctions annexed to each of them. This would spare them the trouble of transcribing, or studying, or reading to the people, the whole book; and, as these abstracts would come into common use, few people would look any further. But had not an universal traditional recollection of the law, and in general of its contents, prevailed in the nation; how could the book, when found, have obtained proper and implicit credit as the word of God by Moses? In the dark ages of popery this was precisely the case: the liturgies and rituals contained a few selected portions of Scripture; and not only were the people kept in the dark as to the entire contents of the Bible, but few even of the priests had ever read it through, and numbers of these had never seen a complete copy of it. The same naturally becomes the case still, (notwithstanding the multiplication of copies of the Bible by the art of printing, and its public allowance in the vulgar tongue, and the commendable pains bestowed by pious persons to disperse them;) wherever any set of men become strenuous for one part of religion in preference to the rest. They, who are the oracles of each party, insert in their writings those portions of Scripture, which are supposed to inculcate the doctrines for which they contend; but keep out of sight, perhaps without design, those passages which as strongly declare, what they undervalue, overlook, or are prejudiced against. And these writings form the religion of the zealous friends of that party, while the rest of the Scripture is comparatively neglected or forgotten. Indeed, we all are disposed to have favourite passages of Scripture, to which we are more attentive than to the rest; so that without great care we shall be led into this error.—And may it not be hinted with propriety, that some text-books, which were well designed, are yet capable of a dangerous abuse? I mean those books, which give a text of Scripture for every day, with pious observations upon it. Many read these in family-worship, instead of the Bible itself; and others, it is likely, do the same in their closets; but many will thus undesignedly be led to substitute a part for the whole; the abstract with an exposition, instead of the book of the law: whereas "all Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." (Note, 2 Tim. iii. 14—17.) The proper use of such books is to suggest subjects for pious meditations and ejaculations, in the intervals of conversation and business.—The book, which Hilkiah found, seems to have been the original book of the law, deposited by Moses at the side of the ark, (Note, Deut. xxxi. 26;) but which in those distracted times had been removed, either for concealment, lest it should she dwelt in Jerusalem in the "college;) and they communed with her.

15 ¶ And she said unto them: "Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Tell the man that sent you to me, 16 Thus saith the LORD, 'Behold, I will bring evil upon this place, and upon the inhabitants thereof, even "all the words of the book which the king of Judah hath read.

17 Because they "have forsaken me, and have burned incense unto other gods, that they might provoke me to anger with all "the works of their hands; therefore my wrath shall be kindled against this place, and "shall not be quenched.

18 But to the king of Judah, which sent you to enquire of the LORD, "thus shall ye say to him, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, As touching the words which thou hast heard;

19 Because "thine heart was tender, and thou hast "humbled thyself before the LORD, when thou heardest what I spake against this place, and against the inhabitants thereof, that they should become "a desolation, and a curse, and hast rent thy clothes, and "wept before me; "I also have heard thee, saith the LORD.

20 Behold therefore, "I will gather thee unto thy fathers, and thou shalt be "gathered into thy grave in peace; and thine eyes shall not see all the evil which I will bring upon this place. And they brought the king word again.

be destroyed by the idolaters, or in contempt by those who were turning every thing into confusion. Some argue that this circumstance occasioned Josiah's consternation: but he certainly acted like a man who had never seen the law before; and this most likely was the case, though there might be copies dispersed among his subjects. It is probable his reformation had hitherto been conducted by such abstracts as have been mentioned, or by traditional knowledge. If the kings of Judah had observed the rule of transcribing the law with their own hands, very salutary effects might have been produced; but it seems to have been entirely neglected, as well as the command to read the law publicly to the people, every year at the feast of tabernacles. (Notes, Deut. xvii. 18. xxxi. 9—13. Neh. viii. 1—18. ix. 3.)—It is supposed that the portion, which was first read to Josiah, was the twenty-eighth and twenty-ninth chapters of Deuteronomy; and these were doubtless well suited to convince him, that the guilt and danger of his people was much greater than he had apprehended, and to induce the expressions of fear, sorrow, and humiliation which he shewed. We may conclude, that he afterwards conducted his reformation with more exactness; as he now wrought by rule, and was aware of the imminent danger to which he and his subjects were exposed. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 12, 13. Very little is recorded concerning the high priests, as active instruments in reformation, and reviving true religion. Hilkiah indeed seems to have been a man of good character; though, it is likely, not well acquainted with the Divine law. (Marg. Ref.) Josiah, however, never proposed enquiring of the Lord by him and the breast-plate of judgment; nor did Hilkiah object, when sent with others, to enquire of a prophetess. Either he was ignorant, that to enquire of God was one distinguishing part of his office; or he humbly thought himself unworthy to perform it; or this method of enquiry was considered as obsolete; having fallen into disuse, perhaps, from the too general want of true piety in the high priests, who had been superseded in this respect by the prophets raised up in constant succession. (Note, xix. 2.)

V. 14. Huldah, &c. Jeremiah and Zephaniah prophesied at this time; but perhaps being young, and newly entered on their work, they were of inferior note; or they were elsewhere employed. (Notes, Jer. i. 1—3. Zeph. i. 1.) The ordinary ministry, both under the Old and New Testament, is confined to men: but the Lord is not bound by those restrictions which he imposes upon us: and he has often conferred on women the spirit of prophecy. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 1 Cor. xiv. 34, 35. 1 Tim. ii. 11—14.)—Huldah was doubtless a person of eminent piety, and well known to be a prophetess. She was a married woman, and her husband being keeper of the wardrobe, might make her better known to Josiah, who perhaps had before this consulted her.—Whether the word rendered "the college" means an institution at Jerusalem, in some respects similar to the schools of the prophets in Israel; or whether it only denotes, according to the marginal reading, the part of the city in which she lived, is not agreed. The latter opinion, however, seems most probable, as the same word is in the next chapter translated "of the second order." (Note, xxiii. 4.)

V. 15—20. The sentence denounced concerning the desolations of Jerusalem was irrevocable: but as Josiah was a man of a broken heart and a tender conscience, a true penitent and a real believer, he was spared the anguish of witnessing those dire calamities. (Notes, Is. lvii. 15, 16. lvi. 1, 2. Jer. xxxvi. 23—25.) Though he was slain in battle, yet he died in peace with God, and went to glory. As he was not forty years old when he died, and the total destruc-

Josiah causes the law to be read in a solemn assembly, 1, 2. He enters into covenant with God; and abolishes idolatry in Judah, 3-14. He burns men's bones on the altar at Beth-el; fulfils the prediction of the prophet sent to Jeroboam; destroys the high places in Samaria, and slays the priests, 15-20. He celebrates a solemn passover, 21-23. He puts away wizards, &c. 24: and excels all his predecessors, 25. The wrath of God against Judah is yet unappeased, 26-28. Josiah is slain in battle by Pharaoh-nech, and succeeded by Jehoahaz, 29, 30; who reigns wickedly three months, is led away prisoner by Pharaoh into Egypt, and is succeeded by Jehoiakim, 31-34; who takes the land for Pharaoh's tribute, and reigns wickedly, 35-37.

AND the king sent, and they gathered unto him all the elders of Judah and of Jerusalem.

2 And the king went up into the house of the LORD, and all the men of Judah and all the inhabitants of Jerusalem with him, and the priests, and the prophets, and all the people, *both ^bsmall and great: and he read in their ears all the words of ^cthe book of the covenant which was found in the house of the LORD.

tion of Jerusalem took place within twenty-three years after, he might have lived to that time, according to the ordinary course of nature. But as his piety and zeal could not avail to prevent that catastrophe, he was mercifully "taken away from the evil to come." (Marg. Ref. Note, Is. lviii. 1, 2.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-11. They who have been favoured, in their tender years, with prudent and pious instructors, have very great cause for gratitude: for that circumstance is immediately ordered in providence, without their even appearing to choose it for themselves, and frequently in opposition to their inclinations; yet it commonly proves the means of determining both the comfort and usefulness of their future lives.—The Lord frequently demonstrates the sovereignty of his grace, by raising up the brightest ornaments of his church from the most degenerate families.—It is a peculiar favour to be brought to seek and serve God in early life, and to be led to copy closely the best examples.—It is incumbent on us to keep the narrow way, and to avoid the extremes, which are found on the right and on the left: and great watchfulness is requisite so to shun self-righteous pride, as to keep clear of antinomian abuse of the gospel. In escaping from superstition, we are in danger of running into inexperienced indulgence, or irreverence to things sacred. Fierce and contentious zeal, in some men, leads others to soothe themselves in lukewarmness, indolence, and timidity: and in numberless ways, when avoiding one evil, we are prone to run into another: or so to attend to one part of religion, as to neglect others, and thus to mar that proportion and symmetry, which are its peculiar ornament. But if, with all our circumspection, we are kept from great and mischievous mistakes; we must give all the praise to Him, who leads his people "in the midst of the paths of judgment."—The interests and passions of men raise up so many obstructions, that public reformation commonly moves heavily; and can only be effected by perseverance, gradually, and as the zealous reformers obtain influence, and establish their characters by "patient continuance in well-doing."—Yet, in the worst of times, we meet with examples of liberality, fidelity, and integrity, which are worthy of praise and imitation.—The prevalence of impiety, infidelity, superstition, or licentiousness, renders the word of God a neglected book; and that neglect reciprocally augments these evils. And when professed ministers grow careless, selfish, or superstitious, the people of course become generally ignorant of the sacred oracles. But whenever the clergy shall make it their great business, to call the attention of the people to the Scriptures, and to bring them acquainted with the whole of them; their conduct will have a most extensive effect, in preventing the influx of vice, and in promoting true knowledge and genuine piety. "For the word of God is quick and powerful;" and being "sharper than any two-edged sword," it penetrates the heart and conscience with irresistible energy. (Notes, Jer. xxiii. 28, 29. Heb. iv. 12, 13.) By the holy law is the knowledge of sin, and by the blessed gospel is the knowledge of salvation. When the former is understood, in its strictness, extent, excellency, and awful sanction, the sinner perceives his guilt, is convinced that the great wrath of the Lord is kindled against him for his transgressions; and begins to enquire, "What must I do to be saved?" This excites his attentive regard to the ministry and ministers of the gospel; who point out to him "Jesus Christ, as the end of the law for righteousness, unto every one that believeth." And when the sinner has been taught to trust and love the Saviour, he will thenceforth walk in newness of life.—The scarcity of the written word did not excuse Israel's degeneracy and idolatry, because it was the effect of it; "the people loved to have it so:" but the abundance of Bibles, with which this land is favoured, will exceedingly aggravate the guilt of our national impiety, infidelity, and licentiousness: for what greater contempt of God can we show, than to refuse to read his word, when put into our hands; or, reading it, to refuse to believe and obey it?

V. 12-20. The ministers of religion must communicate to the people whatever they have learned respecting the will of God, whether alarming or encouraging: otherwise they do not declare his whole counsel," nor "keep themselves pure from the blood of all men."—Kings and rulers, being personally as much concerned as their subjects to humble themselves before God, to know his will and to seek his salvation, and their conduct being of still greater importance to others, they, who minister before them in sacred things, should especially instruct them in the whole of divine revelation; and they are guilty of the basest and most cruel unfaithfulness, to them, and to millions, if, from regard to their own safety or emolument, they keep back offensive truths.—Those princes who are acquainted with able and faithful servants of God, and who are not deterred by evil counsel from consulting them, and from encouraging them without needless ceremony to speak the whole truth, best consult their own good and that of their subjects.—It is also becoming, when superior stated pastors and rulers of the church discard prejudice and jealousy, respecting those among their inferiors, or of other orders in society, whom God endows with peculiar spiritual gifts for the edifying of his people; when, instead of standing upon character and precedence, and hindering others from regarding their advice, they take the lead in honouring the grace of God in them, and gladly receive their profitable instructions. Such are wise men, and will daily grow wiser; because they are conscious that they have not attained, but need continual accessions to their measure of divine knowledge and grace: but they, who are too great, or too proud, to learn, even from their inferiors, are likely to live and to die without true wisdom.—In communicating his special blessings, the Lord does not restrict himself to age, or sex, or order, or condition in society; but "divideth severally to every one, as he will:" and true sanctity consists in separation from sin, and devotedness to God; and not in seclusion from society, or from that state which he hath pronounced honourable.—There are kinds and degrees of guilt, which the Lord will not pardon, either in individuals or nations; and the discovery of men's iniquities will fully demonstrate the justice of his most tremendous vengeance on them. But a tender, broken, and contrite heart; an humble consciousness of having deserved wrath, and an earnest application for mercy, are things which accompany salvation, and will never be rejected by our gracious God. Whatever persons of this character fear, suffer, or witness, or in what way soever they are removed out of the world, they shall be gathered to the grave in peace, and shall enter into the rest reserved for his people.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIII. V. 2. (Note, Deut. xxxi. 10-13.) The prophets. It may be supposed, that Jeremiah, Zephaniah, Huldah, and others, were present on this occasion, encouraging and assisting the king in his pious undertaking: yet it is probable, that the king neither employed them, nor the priests, in reading the law to the elders of the people, at least not exclusively; but that he performed the service personally. The opinion, that he only engaged others to read the law, seems to be taken from modern refinements, and sentiments of royal dignity, and not from facts, good sense, or the examples of pious princes in those days: (Notes, 2 Sam. vi. 12-22. 1 Kings viii. 12-61. Ec. i. 1.) For such is human nature, that so trivial a circumstance as the rank of the reader, or speaker, will frequently excite greater attention, than matters of acknowledged superior importance.—Though Josiah was assured that no reformation could prevent the desolations of Jerusalem; yet he would do what he could to prolong her state, to rescue a remnant as brands out of the burning, and to sow good seed, which might afterwards produce a reformation even among the dispersed captives.

V. 3. The prophets, priests, and elders, and through them the whole nation by their representatives, bound themselves at this time, in the most solemn manner, to renounce and abolish every species of idolatry, to re-establish the worship of God according to the law, and to serve in righteousness and true holiness. We learn from the event, that the most of those present, who "stood to the covenant," where hypocritical in the transaction; being induced to concur, to please the king, or to avoid his displeasure, and the reproach of singularity; or by some transient impression upon their minds. Yet Josiah did well in requiring them thus to engage, as far as they could be prevailed on without compulsion. A great deal of outward wickedness would be prevented; many individuals would receive essential benefit; and in every way the name, worship, and law of God were honoured: while they who acted hypocritically, and violated their engagements by apostasy, were accountable to God for their conduct. (Notes, Deut. xxix. 10-15. Neh. x. 1.) Indeed, no effectual means can be used of doing extensive good, which will not eventually prove an occasion of deeper guilt and condemnation to many. (Notes, John xv. 22-23. 2 Cor. ii. 14-17.)

V. 4. "The priests of the second order" seem to have been the heads of the several courses, which served in rotation, under the person next in succession to the high priesthood, who acted upon emergencies as deputy to the high priest. These were the chief priests mentioned so often in the New Testament. (Notes, 1 Chr. xxiv. 1-19. Ezra ii. 36-39. Marg. Ref.)—Josiah, in his former well-meant attempts for reformation, had probably removed the idols, and abolished the worship of them in Jerusalem: but perhaps, he had supposed, that the vessels, and other valuables, might be reserved for the use of the temple. Being, however, now more fully instructed in the law of God, he destroyed all these by fire: and in his progress through the land, he carried the ashes to Beth-el, the beginning of idolatry to Israel, as established by public authority: in order to render both the place, and these ashes, contemptible or abominable to the people. (Notes, 1 Kings xii. 26-33. xiii. 1-10.)

5 And he ^{put down} the idolatrous priests, whom the kings of Judah had ordained to burn incense in the high places, in the cities of Judah, and in the places round about Jerusalem; them also that burned incense unto Baal, to the sun, and to the moon, and to the ^{planets}, and to ^{all} the host of heaven.

6 And he brought out the grove from the house of the LORD, without Jerusalem, unto the brook Kidron, and burned it at the brook Kidron, and stamped it small to powder, and cast the powder thereof upon the graves of the children of the people.

7 And he brake down the houses of the sodomites, that were by the house of the LORD, where the women wove hangings for the grove.

8 And he brought all the priests out of the cities of Judah, and defiled the high places where the priests had burned incense, from Geba to Beer-sheba, and brake down the high places of the gates that were in the entering in of the gate of Joshua the governor of the city, which were on a man's left hand at the gate of the city.

9 Nevertheless, the priests of the high places came not up to the altar of the LORD in Jerusalem, but they did eat of the unleavened bread among their brethren.

10 And he defiled Topheth, which is in the valley of the children of Hinnom, that no man might make his son or his daughter to pass through the fire to Molech.

11 And he took away the horses that the kings of Judah had given to the sun, at the entering in of the house of the LORD, by the chamber of Nathan-melech the chamberlain, which was in the suburbs, and burned the chariots of the sun with fire.

12 And the altars that were on the top of the upper chamber of Ahaz, which the kings of Judah had made, and the altars which Manasseh had made in the two courts of the house of the LORD, did the king beat down, and brake them down from thence, and cast the dust of them into the brook Kidron.

ruption, which Solomon the king of Israel had builded for Ashtoreth the abomination of the Zidonians, and for Chemosh the abomination of the Moabites, and for Milcom the abomination of the children of Ammon, did the king defile.

14 And he brake in pieces the images, and cut down the groves; and filled their places with the bones of men.

15 ¶ Moreover, the altar that was at Beth-el, and the high place which Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin, had made, both that altar and the high place he brake down, and burned the high place, and stamped it small to powder, and burned the grove.

16 And as Josiah turned himself, he spied the sepulchres that were there in the mount, and sent, and took the bones out of the sepulchres, and burned them upon the altar, and polluted it, according to the word of the LORD, which the man of God proclaimed, who proclaimed these words.

17 Then he said, What title is that that I see? And the men of the city told him, It is the sepulchre of the man of God which came from Judah, and proclaimed these things that thou hast done against the altar of Beth-el.

18 And he said, Let him alone; let no man move his bones. So they let his bones alone, with the bones of the prophet that came out of Samaria.

19 And all the houses also of the high places that were in the cities of Samaria; which the kings of Israel had made, to provoke the LORD to anger, Josiah took away, and did to them according to all the acts that he had done in Beth-el.

20 And he slew all the priests of the high places that were there upon the altars, and burned men's bones upon them, and returned to Jerusalem.

21 ¶ And the king commanded all the people, saying, Keep the passover unto the LORD your God, as it is written in the book of this covenant.

22 Surely there was not holden such a passover from the days of the judges that judged Israel, nor in all the days of the kings of Israel, nor of the kings of Judah;

V. 5. Chemarim, the name of these priests, (Margin), is supposed to be derived from the black garments which they wore, and by which they were distinguished from the priests of JEHOVAH, who wore garments of white linen. (Notes, Ez. xxviii. 40, 41. Hos. x. 5, 6. Zeph. i. 4.)

V. 6. The graves, &c. The graves of the worshippers of these idols are meant: (Marg. Ref.) this was another expedient, to render them and the idolaters alike vile and abominable to the spectators.

V. 7. (Note, xxi. 7.) Hangings, &c. It is supposed that these hangings were intended for tents, in which the devotees of the demons perpetrated the most detestable species of lewdness, as a part of their religion, and as near as possible to the house of the Lord itself! This was even worse than making that holy place a den of thieves. (Notes, Ez. viii. 7—14. Matt. xxi. 12, 13. P. O. 12—16.)

V. 8. It is probable, that these high places were defiled, by casting the bones, or dead bodies, of men into them. Thus the people in general would be preserved from going thither, when they had so expressly been declared abominable; though presumptuous persons should rebuild them.—Josiah shewed his impartiality, when he destroyed those high places at the gates of the city, which seem to have been erected under the patronage of a considerable person, entitled "the governor of the city."

V. 9. It does not appear that these priests had been guilty of idolatry, but of irregularly and illegally worshipping JEHOVAH in the high places, instead of at the temple. To deter others from this inveterate practice, they were excluded from their sacred functions; but not put to death, or deprived of their maintenance, though it is uncertain what portions were allotted them. (Notes, Ez. xlv. 10—16.)

V. 10. Topheth, &c. This place derived its name from a word, which signifies a drum: because they used to drown the cries of the children, who there passed through the fire, or were burned in it, by the sound of drums. (Notes, Is. xxx. 33. Jer. vii. 32, 33.)

V. 11. The worshippers of the sun represented that luminary, by a man seated in a chariot drawn by swift and furious horses; and therefore they dedicated to him horses and chariots. The kings of Judah had imitated this custom, and kept the horses of the sun at the entrance of the temple: and a person, who, as it seems, was very honourably provided for, was employed to take care of them.

V. 12, 13. Manasseh, after his repentance, had removed the altars from the courts of the Lord: but it is probable that Amon had replaced, or rebuilt them, and they retained the name of their original deviser. (Notes, 2 Chr. xxxiii. 15—17. 21—24.) The high places which Solomon had built, had doubtless been in part at least demolished: but the idolatrous kings had rebuilt or repaired them, and dedicated them to the same idols, and called them by Solomon's name; perhaps glorying that they copied so illustrious a prince's example. (Note, 1 Kings xi. 1—8. Marg. Ref.) The sacred writer seems to call the hill on which these high places were erected, and which is supposed to have been the mount of Olives, "the mount of corruption," because of the abominations there committed.

V. 15—20. Josiah had evidently some authority in the country which the ten tribes had occupied; (2 Chr. xxxiv. 6;) but it is not certain, whether this was by grant from the king of Assyria, or by the willing subjection of the inhabitants: the former, however, appears the more probable. (Note, 29, 30.) On this occasion, he exactly accomplished the prediction of the man of God concerning him, delivered about three hundred and sixty years before: and though he may be supposed to have designed that accomplishment; yet so wicked a man as his father could have had no such intentions, in giving his son the name of Josiah. (Notes, 1 Kings xiii. 2. 23—32.)—It seems that many Israelites had collected together in several parts of the land; and especially, that the idolatrous priests had resorted to Beth-el, to renew their old idolatry. These Josiah put to death, perhaps with others from the land of Judah who were notoriously guilty. By burning men's bones upon their altars, he endeavoured to render their idolatry detestable to all the inhabitants; that they might be induced to join themselves to the Jews in the worship of God at Jerusalem: for nothing was so polluting by the ceremonial law, as a dead human body, or any part of one. (Marg. Ref.)—It has been justly observed, that if Josiah had entertained the same notions of the sanctity of relics, which have so long prevailed among professed Christians; he would have bestowed at least as much pains in honouring the bones of the old prophet from Judah, as he did in disgracing those of the idolatrous priests. But he thought it enough to let the bones of the man of God lie quietly in his grave.

V. 21—23. Having made all necessary preparation, Josiah proceeded to lead the attention of the people to their solemn feasts: and this first passover was 23 But in the eighteenth year of king Josiah, wherein this passover was holden to the LORD in Jerusalem.

24 ¶ Moreover, the workers with familiar spirits, and the wizards, and the images, and the idols, and all the abominations that were spied in the land of Judah and in Jerusalem, did Josiah put away, that he might perform the words of the law, which were written in the book that Hilkiah the priest found in the house of the LORD.

25 And like unto him was there no king before him, that turned to the LORD with all his heart, and with all his soul, and with all his might, according to all the law of Moses; neither after him arose there any like him.

26 ¶ Notwithstanding, the LORD turned not from the fierceness of his great wrath, wherewith his anger was kindled against Judah, because of all the provocations that Manasseh had provoked him withal.

27 And the LORD said, "I will remove Judah also out of my sight, as I have removed Israel, and will cast off this city Jerusalem which I have chosen, and the house of which I said, My name shall be there.

28 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Josiah, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah.

29 ¶ In his days Pharaoh-nechoh king of Egypt went up against the king of Assyria to the river Euphrates: and king Josiah went against him: and he slew him at Megiddo when he had seen him.

30 And his servants carried him in a chariot dead from Megiddo, and brought him to Jerusalem, and buried him in his own sepulchre. And the people of the land took Jehohaz the son of Josiah, and anointed him, and made him king in his father's stead.

31 ¶ Jehohaz was twenty and three years old when he began to reign; and he reigned three months in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Hamutal, the daughter of Jeremiah of Libnah.

32 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, according to all that his fathers had done.

33 And Pharaoh-nechoh put him in bands at Riblah, in the land of Hamath, that he might not reign in Jerusalem; and put the land to a tribute of an hundred talents of silver, and a talent of gold.

34 And Pharaoh-nechoh made Eliakim the son of Josiah king, in the room of Josiah his father, and turned his name to Jehoiakim, and took Jehohaz away: and he came to Egypt, and died there.

35 ¶ And Jehoiakim gave the silver and the gold to Pharaoh; but he taxed the land to give the money according to the commandment of Pharaoh: he exacted the silver and the gold of the people of the land, of every one according to his taxation, to give it unto Pharaoh-nechoh.

36 ¶ Jehoiakim was twenty and five years old when he began to reign; and he reigned eleven years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Zebudah, the daughter of Pedaiah of Rumah.

celebrated with extraordinary zeal and exactness, and by immense multitudes. (Note, 2 Chr. xxx. xxxv.)

V. 24. The whole narrative marks the care with which this pious prince had studied the book of the law, after it was found; the diligent investigation which he made to detect and destroy every thing forbidden in it; and the exactness, as well as earnestness, with which his reformation was conducted. Had the princes and people been as sincere and zealous as their king, the happiest effects would have followed. (Notes, Jer. ii. 6—11. Zeph. i. 5—8.)

V. 25. Hezekiah excelled all the kings of Judah for entire confidence in God; and Josiah surpassed all others in zeal for reformation, and in an unblemished life, being attentive to obey the precepts, and promote the glory of God, with his whole heart and soul. (Note, xviii. 5, 6.)

V. 26, 27. Josiah lived above thirteen years after this great reformation, and to the end retained the people in the external worship of God; (2 Chr. xxxiv. 33:) but, in general, they relapsed secretly into many of their former idolatries and iniquities; and, as a collective body, they were not greatly amended in the sight of a heart-searching God.—They had heartily concurred in the idolatries and crimes of Manasseh, but they had not imitated his repentance: on the other hand, they had hypocritically joined in Josiah's reformation, and were ripe, upon his removal, to join the apostasy of his sons. (Note, 25.) Manasseh's wickedness, therefore, was accounted national, and filled up their measure of iniquity; whereas Josiah's piety was personal, and the hypocrisy and apostasy of the people aggravated their guilt, and hastened their ruin. No wonder that the righteousness of Josiah, and of the small remnant of pious persons among them, would not prevent the punishment of an impenitent nation; for even the Saviour's obedience unto death will not profit one finally impenitent sinner. But though the Lord did not turn from the fierceness of his great wrath, so as to spare Jerusalem from desolation, and the Jews from captivity, yet this event proved a kind of crisis to their disease, and while the wicked perished in vast numbers, the remnant was purified; and Josiah's reformation, probably, had a happy effect, in raising up many persons to join this small remnant, which proved the precious seed of their future church and nation.

V. 29, 30. Nabopolassar, king of Babylon, assisted by the Medes, is supposed, before this time, to have conquered the Assyrians, and destroyed Nineveh. Thus he became king of Assyria, also: and some learned men are of opinion, that after Manasseh was freed from captivity, the kings of Judah reigned over the country formerly possessed by the ten tribes, as tributaries and allies to the kings of Babylon. (Note, 2 Chr. xxxiii. 12, 13.)—Josiah might therefore consider himself as under engagements to the king of Assyria, as well as unwilling that the contending parties should march their armies through his country: he however, lost his life in the attempt. Megiddo was situated in the northern part of the land of Israel; (Judg. i. 27:) but at this time it seems to have been under Josiah's government. Perhaps Josiah disguised himself, that the king of Egypt might not know him; but he, having discovered him, singled him out for slaughter. When he had received his mortal wound, he was carried out of the battle, and he died by the way to Jerusalem. (Note, 2 Chr. xxxv. 20—24.)—It has commonly been observed, that our young king Edward VI. greatly resembled Josiah. He gave, indeed, singular evidence of wisdom and piety far beyond his years; but he was taken away at the age when Josiah first began to seek the Lord; and we can only conjecture what he would have been and done, if he had been spared to reach the age at which Josiah was slain.—The people of the land placed the second son of Josiah on the throne in preference to his elder brother; probably, because he was deemed to be of a more active and martial temper. And to confirm their irregular proceedings, they anointed him, as if he had been immediately appointed by God; (Note, 1 Kings i. 39:) but, alas! the season of the Lord's graciously giving them pious kings to reign over them was elapsed, and all Josiah's sons proved wicked, impolitic, and unsuccessful.

V. 33. Jehohaz had assumed the regal authority without Pharaoh's consent, and, perhaps, attempted to continue the war against him; but, by some means, Pharaoh took him prisoner, deposed him, and sent him bound into Egypt, where he ended his days; (Notes, Jer. xxii. 10—12. Ez. xix. 2—9:) and the land was put under tribute, in token of its subjection to the king of Egypt. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 34. "Jehoiakim" means the same as "Eliakim;" except that the latter is compounded with the word translated God, the former with a part of the name JEHOVAH. Pharaoh seems not to have wished Jehoiakim to renounce his religion; but chose to distinguish him as the ruler of that people who professed to worship JEHOVAH.—Hitherto the kingdom of Judah had descended in a direct line from father to son: and this is the first instance of one brother succeeding another. (Preface, 1 Kings.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—14. Nothing ought to discourage our endeavours to promote a revival of true religion. If declining churches and nations cannot be rescued from impending judgments, a few individuals may be snatched as "brands from the burning;" and if ministers, in their several stations, fail of general or abiding usefulness, and have continually the prospect of being removed; many a one may, in the mean time, receive important benefit, and prove the seed of a future revival, even in that very place.—As sinners cannot be preserved from eternal destruction, without repentance, so degenerate nations cannot be rescued from public calamities, without general reformation. To effect this, it is the interest of princes to promote the knowledge of God in their dominions: and it is no degradation of their dignity, personally to take an active part in such attempts, which will induce numbers of every order in the community to concur.—All external obligations to the service of God may be entered into with a hypocritical, or self-righteous spirit: yet this should not make us object to such engagements ourselves, or averse to propose them; but only make us cautious in what manner we do it, and careful to inculcate the same caution upon others. It is safe to bind ourselves solemnly to walk after the Lord, and to keep his commandments, because these are previous indispensable duties; (Note, Num. xxx. 2;) and some are thus rendered more earnest in attending to them: but the word of God must be the rule and standard in every thing, not only as to the duty itself, but also as to the motive and manner of doing it.—In those nations which profess to worship God, and which are favoured with the light of revelation, we need only to investigate with diligence, and compare the result of our observations with the word of truth, to discover such enormous and multiplied abominations as could never have been conceived

CHAP. XXIV.

Jehoiakim submits to Nebuchadnezzar, but afterwards rebels, 1. God hastens the fulfilment of his predictions against Judah, 2-4. Jehoiakim dies, and is succeeded by Jehoiachin, 5, 6. The king of Babylon prevails against the king of Egypt, 7. Jehoiachin reigns wickedly, 8, 9. Jerusalem is taken; and the king, (with his family and treasures, and the sacred vessels, and chief persons of Judah,) is carried captive to Babylon, 10-16. Zedekiah is made king, reigns wickedly, and rebels against the king of Babylon, 17-20.

IN his days Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came up, and Jehoiakim became his servant three years: then he turned and rebelled against him.

upon a distant and superficial view, or a judgment formed by other rules. Even in worshipping congregations, an exact scrutiny would commonly bring to light such evils, as before were never suspected: but the most humiliating discoveries will be made, by an exact enquiry into our own hearts and conduct. That man, who previously deemed his behaviour unexceptionable, and his heart good, if he can be engaged in diligent self-examination and watchfulness, daily beholding himself in the mirror of God's word, and for a long time comparing with it his thoughts, intentions, dispositions, words, and actions; will experience increasing convictions of the deceitfulness and desperate wickedness of his heart, and of the exceeding sinfulness of his whole life. And if he set about amendment, in dependence on the mercy and grace of God in Jesus Christ, and according to the rule of the Bible, he will, as he proceeds, find still more and more to be done; and to the end of his life perceive that he is very far off from the perfect righteousness of the holy law. Nor are any persons disposed to object to this unfavourable statement, but such as are either unacquainted with the rule, or strangers to a serious examination of their conduct by it. (Notes, Jer. xvii. 9, 10. Ec. viii. P.O. Notes, Rom. vii. 7-12. Jam. i. 22-25.)—Imperfection is stamped upon all human goodness, and the greatest reformations hitherto seen on earth, have left many things unreformed.—The scriptural history may well excite the hatred and disgust of the proud admirers of the human heart and understanding: as it presents to our view a very mortifying picture of the blindness of man's mind, as well as of the perverseness of his will, and the depravity of his affections. But, suppose the appeal made to other histories, or to universal observation and experience:—if the records of Greece and Rome were presented to our view, as a detail of facts, without the varnish of declamation and panegyric; if the conduct of these celebrated nations, in public and private life, throughout their term of notoriety, were impartially compared with the just and holy law of God, would not their idolatries and immoralities be found to exceed even those of Israel? (Note, Rom. i. 28-32.) Would they not picture human nature as blind and depraved as the Bible does? And do not all the encomiums bestowed on them, arise from man's disposition to "call good evil, and evil good, to put darkness for light, and light for darkness?" (Note, Is. v. 20.) Pride, ambition, rapacity, cruelty, and revenge, have even been canonized by poets and historians; and idolatry, impiety, brutal excess, and unnatural lusts, have been called by soft names, and excused, if not vindicated, by these elegant and ingenious ancients. Otherwise the conclusion is as irrefragable from the study of profane history, as from the records of God's word, that "the imagination of man's heart is only evil from his youth: and that all the real godliness, or goodness, which hath ever been found on earth, hath been derived from the new-creating Spirit of Jesus Christ."—Persons of eminency, of whatever kind, have need to be very careful what they sanction; for numbers, in distant ages and nations, may be emboldened to transgress, by acceding to their sentiments, or by imitating their examples: and the reflection of doing extensive mischief for generations to come, would, in that case, be a painful prerogative of superior talents, rank, or reputation.—In using all our influence decidedly to suppress abuses, and to oppose iniquity, we should shew all allowable tenderness to the persons of men; yet man must not pretend to more mercy than his Maker, by sparing those whom he orders to be punished.—In reducing our conduct, or that of others, to the standard of Scripture in evident and important matters, no allowance must be made for customary, reputable, ancient, or fashionable abuses: difficulties also must be encountered, hardships endured, self-denial exercised, and opposition, and every worldly interest, disregarded: no man must be known after the flesh; nor any attention paid to persuasions, complaints, remonstrances, or reproaches; nor even to prejudices, except in matters of subordinate consequence. Therefore courage, constancy, and patience are requisite for such attempts; and these, when genuine, can only spring from grace and faith, and be given in answer to prayer, without which every undertaking of this kind will be fruitless.—Not only should gross abominations be precluded, but every temptation or occasion of sin should be removed, whatever be the secular loss or expense, if we would effectually glorify God, and do good: and every method should be adopted to fill men's minds with abhorrence of iniquity, and to shew plausible abuses in a contemptible and detestable light: especially where godly people are liable to be seduced into pernicious compliances.

V. 15-37. The predictions of Scripture may be so long ere they are accomplished, that the expectation of the event may seem to expire; but they will all be punctually fulfilled in their season: and it must give singular encouragement to the pious, when they find themselves evidently employed in bringing about that accomplishment.—Ungodly persons may, even after death, be more respected for their connexion with the servants of God; but the Judge of all will not regard such distinctions.—When gross iniquities are renounced, and a credible profession of faith, repentance, and devotedness to God are made, men may be deemed prepared for the most solemn ordinances of his worship; though no human care or penetration can exclude formal hypocrites; such attendance on the worship of God is externally honourable to him, and useful to numbers: and, as he will know how at last to separate betwixt the tares and the wheat, we must leave them to grow together till the harvest. The scrutinizing eye of the zealous servant of God will continually find many abuses to be rectified; and we must still press forward, both in personal and public reformation. They who attempt this with their whole heart, in humility and simplicity, may hope to be useful to others, and shall certainly be accepted themselves; and as there are degrees of excellence among true believers, so they will receive a proportionable recompense. But when the sins of a collective body are come to a crisis, no human endeavours can avert the wrath of God: and when eminent and useful persons are prematurely taken away, it forebodes public calamities. (Note, Is. lvii. 1, 2.) The best of men may be misled into unadvised meddling with matters not properly belonging to them; but if we are habitually living by faith, and walking with God, even should we be taken away in consequence of any indiscretion, it will not prevent our dying in peace, and being received to glory.—Piety is personal, the effect of special grace: the children even of the most pious parents inherit original depravity; nor can education, instruction, or example, prevent its effects, without regeneration: though abundant encouragement is given to the diligent use of the appointed means of grace, in respect of our children. (Notes, Gen. xviii. 17-19. Prop. xxii. 6.)—When they who have stood in the gap are removed, judgments often follow like an inundation; and a little time and slender abilities will often suffice to undo all the external good which pious men, of excellent capacities, have been labouring, with unremitting endeavours for a course of years, to effect. (Notes, Ec. ii. 18-23. ix. 13-18.) Blessed be God, that good work, which he begins by his regenerating Spirit, cannot be disannulled; but, notwithstanding all changes and temptations, shall be performed unto the day of "Jesus Christ."

3 Surely at the commandment of the LORD came this upon Judah, to remove them out of his sight, for the sins of Manasseh, according to all that he did; 4 And also for the innocent blood that he shed: for he filled Jerusalem with innocent blood, which the LORD would not pardon.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIV. V. 1. Pharaoh-nechoh, after Josiah's death, obtained victory over the king of Babylon, and for some time retained Judea and Syria in subjection. But not long after, Nabopolassar seems to have associated his son Nebuchadnezzar with him in the kingdom, that, by him, the war with the Egyptians might be conducted with greater vigour: for when Daniel had been three years under tuition at Babylon, and had afterwards been introduced to Nebuchadnezzar, he interpreted the dream of that prince in the second year of his reign; yet Daniel had been carried captive by Nebuchadnezzar the king. (Note, Dan. ii. 1.) Two distinct dates respecting the beginning of his reign must be admitted; and it appears that he was made king two or three years before his father died.—Nebuchadnezzar having obtained decisive advantages against the Egyptians, attacked Jehoiakim, as an ally of Nechoh, and, having taken him prisoner, he "put him in chains to carry him to Babylon;" but, upon his submission, he released him, and carried away some of the gold and silver vessels of the temple, and some of the most considerable persons of the land; among the latter were Daniel and his companions. (Notes, Dan. i. 1-7.) This is the first epoch of the seventy years of the Babylonish captivity. Nebuchadnezzar left Babylon in the third year of Jehoiakim, and he reduced that prince in his fourth year. After this, Jehoiakim served the king of Babylon three years, and in his eighth year he rebelled against him, about three years before his death. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 2. It may be supposed that these nations were subject to the king of Babylon, and were encouraged by him to attack the revolted Jews, while he was otherwise employed. But the Lord's secret disposal of their hearts to these attempts, alone is noticed. It is probable that Jehoiakim was harassed by them during the remainder of his days; and perhaps he was at last slain in some sally against them, when they approached Jerusalem; and so left unburied, or otherwise very disgracefully treated. But some think, that, after the transactions here recorded, Nebuchadnezzar carried him to Babylon, and at length put him to death, and treated his dead body most ignominiously. (Note, Jer. xxii. 13-19.)

V. 3, 4. Manasseh's idolatry became a national sin, as publicly enforced by persecution, which filled Jerusalem with the innocent blood of those who refused compliance. The chief men of Judah were involved in this guilt, and had neither repented nor been brought to justice for it: thus, accumulated and atrocious murders remained unpunished, as a load of guilt upon the land; (Notes, Num. xxxv. 31-34. Deut. xxi. 1-9;) and both the princes and people were in general more disposed to imitate Manasseh's idolatries and persecutions, than his repentance. Therefore, though the Lord had pardoned the personal wickedness of penitent Manasseh, he would not pardon the unrepented national guilt, of which he had been the occasion, and, in some sense, the author. (Note, xxiii. 26, 27.)

V. 6. As Jehoiakim was "buried with the burial of an ass;" the expression "slept with his fathers," can only mean that he died, without determining what became either of his soul or body. (Marg. Ref.)

CHAP. XXV.

Jerusalem is besieged and taken, Zedekiah flees, and is made prisoner; his sons are slain, his eyes are put out, and he is carried in chains to Babylon, 1—7. The temple, palaces, and city are burned, the walls are broken down, and the remnant of the people led captive, except a small number of the poor, 8—12. The residue of the sacred vessels and treasures are spoiled, 13—17. The nobles are slain at Riblah, 18—21. Gedaliah, who is left governor, being treacherously slain, the rest flee into Egypt, 22—26. After many years, Evil-merodach shews great kindness to Jehoiachin, 27—30.

AND it came to pass, "in the ninth year of his reign, in the tenth month, in the tenth day of the month, that "Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came, he, and all his host, against Jerusalem, and "pitched against it; and they built forts against it round about.

V. 7. The king of Egypt having been driven back into his own land, and confined there, the kings of Judah were left entirely at the mercy of Nebuchadnezzar; so that policy, as well as their most solemn engagements, demanded their peaceable submission, and their resignation to the correcting hand of God in that dispensation: (Notes, Ez. xvii. 1—21.)

V. 8—16. Jehoiachin, or Jeconiah, seems to have mounted the throne on the death of his father, without waiting for the king of Babylon's consent; but it was like going on board a sinking ship. He had just time enough to manifest his evil disposition, and was then attacked by the king of Babylon; and either by surrender, or upon some deceitful engagement, he went forth to him, and was carried captive to Babylon. After all the depredations to which the temple had been exposed, some of the vessels that Solomon had made, remained in the treasures of the temple: but all, except what were in immediate use, seem to have been seized, cut in pieces, and sent to Babylon. And those, afterwards mentioned, might be such as had been before this carried away, or such as were found at the complete destruction of the temple and city. (xxv. 14, 15. Ezra i. 7—11. Jer. xxxviii. 3. 6. Dan. v. 1—4.) This event took place in the eighth year of Nebuchadnezzar's reign, (12.) and forms a second epoch to be regarded in computing the duration of the captivity. (Notes, 2 Chr. xxxvi. 21. Ezra i. 1—4. Dan. i. 1, 2.)—The chief and the most useful of the people were carried to Babylon, that the land might be reduced to absolute dependence on Nebuchadnezzar. Seven thousand soldiers, one thousand craftsmen and smiths, and two thousand persons of superior rank, may make up the sum total ten thousand. Some learned men, however, suppose, that there were ten thousand carried captive from Jerusalem alone, besides a thousand craftsmen and smiths; and also seven thousand from the rest of the land.—Jeremiah speaks of three thousand and twenty-three, who seem to have been carried away the year before, out of the open country. (Note, Jer. lii. 24—30.) Among the rest, Ezekiel seems to have been at this time made a captive. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 17. Jehoiachin was succeeded by his uncle, the youngest son of Josiah.—"Mattaniah," signifies the gift of Jehovah; "Zedekiah," the righteousness of Jehovah: and the king of Babylon, by giving him this name, meant either to intend an appeal to the justice of God against him, if he violated his engagements; or to refer to the judgments, which he had heard were denounced against Jerusalem by a righteous God.

V. 20. "God was so highly displeased with this wicked people, that he permitted Zedekiah to break his faith with Nebuchadnezzar, and to rebel against him, forgetting for what cause he had changed his name." (Bp. Patrick.) (Notes, xvii. 4. 2 Sam. xvii. 7—14. xxiv. 1, 2. 2 Chr. xxv. 14—16. Is. xix. 11—15. Ez. xvii. 3—21. xxi. 25—27.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When the Lord leaves men to the blindness of their own minds, and to the lusts of their own hearts, some are infatuated to adopt and obstinately persist in the most destructive measures; and others are hurried on by ambition, avarice, or resentment, to execute upon them the vengeance which had been predicted.—Multiplied murders, sanctioned by authority, and persevered in with impunity, form a species of national wickedness which the Lord will not pardon; especially when false religion is established by law, and persecuting statutes are enacted or revived, and executed against his true worshippers: and when this is not merely the act of a few oppressors, but the people in general "love to have it so." Yet, even this may be endured by the long-suffering of the Lord for many generations, till the whole accumulated load falls upon a devoted people with direful destruction.—Blessed be God, there is no degree or kind of personal guilt which he will not pardon to the true penitent; for it is "impossible to renew unto repentance" such as have committed "the sin unto death." (Notes, Heb. vi. 4—6. 1 John v. 14—18.) But it is very distressing for those who have obtained forgiveness of their own transgressions, to reflect that they have been the guilty occasions to others, by their examples, influence, or persuasions, of those sins which, being continued in, the Lord will not pardon; and of which they have no power to bring them to repent. The good Lord preserve us from sin and temptation, and, above all, from being tempters to others! And may this reflection stir up young persons to seek and serve God without delay, lest they should do that mischief, which, if they themselves should live to repent, they will never be able to undo.—When God arises to judgment, all resistance will be ineffectual; and the folly as well as the wickedness, of every worldly dependence, will be manifest: but his justice will never appear in its full glory till that day, when "he will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts." (Note, 1 Cor. iv. 2—5.) In the mean time, we are incompetent judges of the Divine procedure, and ought to wait with silent patience.—Wicked men soon discover the temper of their hearts, and give evidence of what they would do if they were spared: therefore the Lord often cuts them off, to prevent further mischief; and thus hinders them from "treasuring up wrath against the day of wrath." But when their power is taken away, and their lives are spared, though in poverty and misery, it may be an infinite mercy to their souls: (Notes, Jer. xxiv. 5—7. xxv. 27—30.)

V. 10—20. The gradual approach of divine judgments affords sinners space for repentance, and believers leisure to prepare for properly meeting the calamity; but it only evinces the desperate obduracy and obstinacy of those who are not deterred from their sins by all which they witness or experience.—God delighteth in his ordinances, so long as they prove means of grace to those who are favoured with them, but he abhors them when they degenerate into a lifeless form; and that which to the carnal eye appears most glorious in religious worship, is often, in his account, a vile abomination.—Wicked men become curses to each other; and the nearer their intimacy or relation, the greater will be the anguish of those that sin and perish together.—External pre-eminence, in times of public calamity, often gives the precedence in suffering; but riches, dignity, authority, and superior abilities, will assuredly increase the sinner's condemnation; for, to whom much is given, of him will the more be required. Let us then neither envy nor covet such precarious advantages, but be warned to improve every talent entrusted to us. Let us, in these awful events, contemplate the truth of the Scripture, and "flee from the wrath to come;" embrace and plead the precious promises of God; and, by patient continuance in well-doing, wait for the Saviour's mercy unto eternal life!

NOTES.

CHAP. XXV. V. 1—5. Jerusalem was so fortified by nature and art, that, notwithstanding the enfeebled state of the inhabitants, and Nebuchadnezzar's great power, and military skill, it could not be taken till the besieged were incapacitated by famine to make any further resistance. (Note, xix. 8. Lam. iv. 12.) In the Prophecy and Lamentations of Jeremiah, we shall have an opportunity of more fully considering the circumstances of this catastrophe, and, indeed,

2 And the city was besieged unto the eleventh year of king Zedekiah.

3 And on the ninth day of the fourth month the famine prevailed in the city, and there was no bread for the people of the land.

4 ¶ And the city was broken up, and all the men of war fled by night, by the way of the gate, between two walls, which is by the king's garden: (now the Chaldees were against the city round about;) and the king went the way toward the plain.

5 And the army of the Chaldees pursued after the king, and overtook him in the plains of Jericho: and all his army were scattered from him.

6 So they took the king, and brought him up to the king of Babylon to Riblah; and they gave judgment upon him.

7 And they slew the sons of Zedekiah before his eyes, and put out the eyes of Zedekiah, and bound him with fetters of brass, and carried him to Babylon.

8 ¶ And in the fifth month, on the seventh day of the month, which is the nineteenth year of king Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, came Nebuzar-adan captain of the guard, a servant of the king of Babylon, unto Jerusalem:

9 And he burnt the house of the LORD, and the king's house, and all the houses of Jerusalem, and every great man's house, burnt he with fire.

10 And all the army of the Chaldees, that were with the captain of the guard, brake down the walls of Jerusalem round about.

11 Now the rest of the people that were left in the city, and the fugitives that fell away to the king of Babylon, with the remnant of the multitude, did Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard carry away.

12 But the captain of the guard left of the poor of the land, to be vine-dressers and husbandmen.

13 ¶ And the pillars of brass that were in the house of the LORD, and the bases, and the brazen sea that was in the house of the LORD, did the Chaldees break in pieces, and carried the brass of them to Babylon.

14 And the pots, and the shovels, and the snuffers, and the spoons, and all the vessels of brass, wherewith they ministered, took they away.

15 And the fire-pans, and the bowls, and such things as were of gold, in gold, and of silver, in silver, the captain of the guard took away.

16 The two pillars, one sea, and the bases, which Solomon had made for the house of the LORD; the brass of all these vessels was without weight.

17 The height of the one pillar was eighteen cubits, and the chapter upon it was brass; and the height of the chapter three cubits; and the wreathen work, and pomegranates upon the chapter round about, all of brass: and like unto these had the second pillar with wreathen work.

18 ¶ And the captain of the guard took Seraiah the chief priest, and Zephaniah the second priest, and the three keepers of the door.

19 And out of the city he took an officer that was set over the men of war, and five men of them that were in the king's presence, which were found in the city, and the principal scribe of the host, which mustered the people of the land, and threescore men of the people of the land that were found in the city:

20 And Nebuzar-adan captain of the guard took these, and brought them to the king of Babylon to Riblah.

21 And the king of Babylon smote them, and slew them at Riblah in the land of Hamath. So Judah was carried away out of their land.

22 And as for the people that remained in the land of Judah, whom Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon had left, even over them he made Gedaliah, the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan, ruler.

23 And when all the captains of the armies, they and their men, heard that the king of Babylon had made Gedaliah governor, there came to Gedaliah to Mizpah, even Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and Johanan the son of Careah, and Seraiah the son of Tanhumeth the Netophathite, and Jaazaniah the son of a Maachathite, they and their men.

24 And Gedaliah sware to them, and to their men, and said unto them, Fear not to be the servants of the Chaldees: dwell in the land, and serve the king of Babylon, and it shall be well with you.

25 But it came to pass in the seventh month, that Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, the son of Elishama, of the seed royal, came, and ten men with him, and smote Gedaliah, that he died, and the Jews and the Chaldees that were with him at Mizpah.

26 And all the people, both small and great, and the captains of the armies, arose, and came to Egypt: for they were afraid of the Chaldees.

the whole of this compendious history: it suffices in this place to observe, that the obstinacy, impiety, and misery of the besieged were alike great, and almost unparalleled. (Notes, Jer. xxxvii. xxxviii. xxxix. 1-4.)—The king, and his remaining forces, endeavoured to escape by some private gate, which the enemy had not observed, or did not guard; but his attendants were dispersed, and he was taken prisoner. (Notes, Lam. iv. 20. Ez. xii. 1-16.)

V. 6, 7. Nebuchadnezzar, having placed Zedekiah on the throne, and made him engage to be faithful to him, tried and condemned him as a traitor, in the presence of his ministers and counsellors. (Notes, 2 Chr. xxxvi. 13. Jer. xxxix. 5. Ez. xvii. 17-21. xxi. 25-29:) and, having slain his sons in his sight, as the last spectacle which he should ever behold, and which might ever after haunt his affrighted imagination, he put out his eyes, and sent him in chains to Babylon. (Note, Jer. xxxix. 5. xxxix. 2-5. xxxviii. 1-6. Ez. xii. 8-16.) Here he ended his life, probably not long after: no more is recorded concerning him.—Zedekiah left daughters at Jerusalem, who went down with Johanan to Egypt, and doubtless died there. (Jer. xli. 16. xliii. 6. Marg. Ref.)

V. 8-10. Nebuzar-adan seems to have arrived at Jerusalem on the seventh day of the month, but he began to execute his commission on the tenth. (Jer. lii. 12.)—The king of Babylon, enraged at the long and obstinate defence which the Jews had made, determined that this city should be no more inhabited, to cause him or his successors such trouble and expense in future. He therefore gave orders to level the city with the ground, without sparing even the temple, either for its sanctity, antiquity, or magnificence! Thus he performed the words both of the later prophets, and likewise the predictions of Moses. This is computed to have been four hundred and twenty-four years, from the time when Solomon laid the foundations of the temple. (Marg. Ref.) Josephus informs us, that the second temple was destroyed by the Romans, on the same day of the same month,

V. 12. (Note, 22-26.)

V. 16. Without weight. The quantity of brass was so great, that its weight was not ascertained; (Notes, 1 Kings vii. 13-49.)—It is not known what became of the ark at this time; but it was not afterwards found. (Notes, Ezra i. 7-11. Hag. ii. 6-9.)

V. 19-21. Seven men are mentioned by Jeremiah; (Note, Jer. lii. 24-27;) but perhaps five were of superior rank to the others; or were more distinguished as the favourites and counsellors of Zedekiah. All these persons were put to death as accessories to his rebellion.

V. 22-26. (Notes, Jer. xxxix. —xliii.) Nebuchadnezzar intended to preserve some inhabitants in the land; but it was the Lord's purpose that it should be desolated. (Notes, Jer. xxv. 4-11. xxix. 4-10.)—Ishmael, being of the royal family, could not endure to see any shadow of authority possessed by another, while he was excluded; and therefore he murdered Gedaliah, who seems to have been a wise and good man. His father Ahikam had been Jeremiah's protector; and the prophet had by choice joined his company. (Notes Jer. xxvi. 24. xl. 6.)—After this event, the Jews, rejecting the word of the Lord by Jeremiah, fled into Egypt, for fear of the resentment of the king of Babylon; and there they either miserably perished, or were lost among the natives, and thus God performed his purpose and predictions of desolating the country, contrary to the intentions of the instruments which he had hitherto employed.—The small numbers, mentioned in all the accounts of these events, lead the mind to a most melancholy reflection on the multitudes who must have perished, and been driven into other lands, by the distresses of the Jews, previous to this catastrophe. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 27-30. It is recorded, that Nebuchadnezzar, after his recovery from the miraculous insanity with which he had been visited, committed his son to prison for mal-administration during that period, (Note, Dan. iv. 34-37;)

27 ¶ And "it came to pass in the seven and thirtieth year of the captivity of Jehoiachin king of Judah, in the twelfth month, on the seven and twentieth day of the month, that Evil-merodach "king of Babylon, in the year that he began to reign, did "lift up the head of Jehoiachin king of Judah out of prison; and that there he contracted an acquaintance with Jehoiachin. God had foretold, that the captives at Babylon would be more favoured, than those who remained at Jerusalem: and thus Jehoiachin was at length more favoured than Zedekiah. (Notes, Jer. xxiv.)—Many captive or tributary kings abode at Babylon, but Jehoiachin was treated with greater kindness and respect than any of them, either out of personal affection, or from regard to the ancient race of the kings of Judah. (Note Jer. lii. 31.)—As Evil-merodach reigned but two years, it is probable Jehoiachin did not live long after this. (Note, Ezra i. 1—4.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—21. If repeated warnings and afflictions leave the sinner's heart more obdurate, it is an evidence that his ruin is at hand. (Notes, Prov. xxix. 1.)—Those advantages, which inspire confidence in the ways of wickedness, will eventually aggravate the possessor's misery: for no power can resist, no craftiness can elude, those whom God appoints to be the executioners of his vengeance.—If rebellion against earthly princes deserve such severe penalties, as by common consent, have, in all ages and nations, been inflicted upon those who were guilty of that crime; who can estimate what, or how much, punishment is due to rebellion against our Creator, Benefactor, and Sovereign!—Precious as our eyes are to us, they may possibly be reserved to witness such scenes, as may make us wish that they had been previously closed, in darkness or in death. But surely no sight can be so distressing as the misery of our children, when occasioned by our own misconduct.—God overrules, and imperceptibly guides, the resentment of men, to execute his righteous purposes for his own glory. In the days of his indignation, he utterly disregards populous cities, magnificent palaces, and fertile countries: nay, he permits his avowed enemies to destroy his sanctuaries, to prevent the administration of his ordinances, and even to extinguish the very light of his gospel, in those places, where these inestimable advantages have long been despised, neglected, or perverted. But he will still preserve his true religion, though perhaps among the poor and despised alone.—As the Lord "spared not the angels, that sinned;" as he hath doomed the whole race of fallen men to the grave, and all unbelievers to hell; and as "he spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all;" we need not wonder at any desolation or miseries which, for sin, he may see good to bring upon guilty nations and churches.

V. 22—30. The secret working of Providence disappoints the politic or humane purposes, of such as purpose to spare those whom God intends to destroy: and, while some are left to their vile passions, and others to their groundless fears and infatuated devices, "his counsel shall stand, and he will do all his pleasure."—No state of misery on earth can be called absolutely hopeless or comfortless. In hell alone this blackness of darkness is to be found for ever. During our most dismal and tedious nights of adversity, we may hope for the cheerful dawning of prosperous days; especially, if our afflictions lead us to repentance: for God hath all hearts in his hands, and, as he sees good, can incline them to kindness. The believer in this world is, as it were, imprisoned with sins, temptations, and tribulations, sometimes for many a tedious year: but death, as the servant of Jesus Christ, comes for his enlargement. Then, the prison-door is opened, his fetters are loosed, his prison-garments changed for the robes of salvation and glory; his head is lifted up, and his throne advanced above the chief of the kings of the earth; and he shall be eternally feasted upon the fulness of joy, which is to be found in the presence and favour of the Almighty. Indeed, even here, the Saviour brings to the trembling, distressed, and enslaved sinner, who comes and trusts in him, a blessed release from condemnation and bondage: he bestows on him liberty, change of raiment, royal immunities, and heavenly provisions, day by day; and these are intended as earnest and foretastes of those "pleasures, which are at his right hand for evermore." In short, sin alone can hurt us, and Jesus alone can do good to sinners. May God help us to believe; and to wait, in patient hope, for the blessed season, when, being made more than conquerors by his grace, we shall "sit down with the Saviour upon his throne, even as he hath overcome, and hath sat down with the Father upon his throne!"

THE FIRST BOOK OF THE CHRONICLES.

It is generally agreed that the books of the Chronicles were compiled by Ezra, after the Babylonish captivity; and that they consist of extracts from the public records of the Jews, and the writings of preceding prophets. Some passages appear to have been inserted in the very words of the original record, which was penned before the captivity; and a few names seem to have been added to the genealogies, after the death of Ezra. (1 Chr. iii. 19—24.) The original name is, The words of days, which signifies, Journals or Annals; and it is not improperly rendered Chronicles or Records of the times. Anciently, the whole formed but one book in the Hebrew Bible: but the Septuagint divides it into two, and calls them The Books of things which had been left out: but this is less proper than the original name; for there are many repetitions of facts before recorded, as well as further historical information. These repetitions, however, must not be deemed superfluous; for most of them in some degree, and some of them exceedingly, elucidate the preceding history: and the few that seem not wanted in this respect, are suited to connect the whole into one narration, without referring to other books: which would be peculiarly useful, when copies of the whole Scriptures were both scarce and expensive.—In the genealogies, there are several literal or verbal variations from those found in other parts of Scripture: but it is evident, that many persons had more than one name, and were called by one or the other indiscriminately; and the spelling and pronunciation, in most languages, change considerably in a course of years. Some variations in the numerals have already been noted; and we are sometimes constrained to allow, that, probably, a trivial error of the transcriber has taken place: but there is no variation, which in the least interferes with our faith or practice, or weakens the external or internal evidence of the divine inspiration of the Scripture in general, or of these books in particular.—It was evidently a principal design of the sacred writer, in these records, to bring into one view, and comprise in a narrow compass, whatever immediately related to the nation of Israel, to each of the twelve tribes, and to the family of David, with reference to the settlement in the land after the captivity; and to ascertain the descent of the promised Messiah: and in both these respects, the genealogies would be very useful. Until Christ came, all the genealogies of that nation were preserved correct and authentic: but since that period, they have none which can be depended on. The types were then fulfilled in the great Antitype; the kingdom and priesthood were permanently united in his person; and the nation soon forfeited their peculiar temporal advantages, by rejecting their King: and so their genealogies were no further needful, and were left to be involved in oblivion or uncertainty.—Many things might be very plain and useful to the ancient Jews, which appear obscure and uninteresting to us. Should it be allowed, that a small part of the Scripture was profitable to the church in some ages and places, but not at all in others, it would be no impeachment of the Divine wisdom and goodness: and if we cannot understand, or get any benefit from, certain portions, it is more reasonable to blame our own dulness, than, so much as in thought, to censure them as useless.—The first book commences with genealogies from Adam, till long after the captivity; many of which are collected from other parts of Scripture. The advancement of David to the throne upon Saul's death, is next related: and a much fuller account is given of his internal government of the kingdom; especially, in the regulation concerning the priests and Levites, in the service of the sanctuary; the preparation that he made for the building of the temple; and the exhortations to Solomon his successor, and to the elders of Israel, with which he closed his days, than in the preceding histories. And the sacred writer seems to have dwelt on these subjects, the more fully, in order to stir up a holy emulation in his contemporaries, in restoring the worship at the temple to its ancient order and purity. So that in this book, "the man after God's own heart" shines much brighter, than in the second book of Samuel, and the beginning of the first of Kings.—The genealogies, given by St. Matthew and St. Luke, may be supposed to refer in many respects to those in this book. And when it is said that Zacharias was "of the course of Abia," the reference is still more indisputable. (xxiv. 10. Luke i. 5.)—The prophecies contained in it coincide indeed with those in the second of Samuel and in the Psalms; and therefore cannot be adduced as full proofs of its divine inspiration: but the sentiments which pervade it are perfectly scriptural; and we are sure it formed a part of the Jewish Scriptures, when our Saviour and his apostles appealed to them, as "the oracles of God."

44 And when Bela was dead, Jobab the son of Zerah of *Bozrah reigned in his stead.

45 And when Jobab was dead, Husham of the land of the Temanites reigned in his stead.

54 Duke Magdiel, duke Iram. *These are the dukes of Edom.

NOTES.

CHAP. I. V. 1-4. This chapter consists wholly of extracts, and abridgments of genealogies, from the book of Genesis: though several names are spelt differently, and some are changed. (Marg. Ref.)—The original of Israel, and indeed of the whole human race, is in these verses derived from the first man, whom God created; and this rational account may be considered as an intended refutation of all the fabulous, obscure, and absurd pretensions, advanced in this respect, by many pagan nations. (Notes, Gen. i. 1. 26-28. ii. 4. 7. v. 2.) 'No book in the world shews the original propagation of mankind, but only the holy Scriptures. They who were ignorant of them, having nothing of true antiquity, devised senseless fables of their descent, they knew not how, nor from whom. It was the peculiar glory of the Jewish nation, that they alone were able to derive their pedigree from the first man that God created; of which no other nation could boast, or make a shadow of pretence.' (Bp. Patrick.)

V. 5-23. (Notes, Gen. ix. 24-29. x.) This short review, of the peopling of the earth by the sons of Noah, might be intended to intimate, that we are all of one blood and nature, though of different families.

V. 24-27. (Notes, Gen. xi. 10-32. xvii. 5. Marg. Ref.)

V. 28-33. (Notes, Gen. xvi. 12. xvii. 18-21. xxi. 20, 21. xxi. 1-6. 13-18.)

V. 34-37. (Notes, Gen. xxv. 20-34. xxxvi. 1-19.)—Timna, and Amalek. (36.) Timna was concubine, to Eliphaz, and mother of Amalek, (Gen. xxxvi. 12.) The words here, therefore, seem to mean, of Timna, Amalek. (39.)

V. 38-42. (Notes, Gen. xxxvi. 20. 24.)

V. 43-54. (Notes, Gen. xxxvi. 43.) When the sacred historian had given the genealogy of Abraham, the father of the faithful, he briefly mentions

Abraham's descendants by Ishmael, by Keturah, and by Esau, with some coincident matters: but he speedily leaves these subjects, to confine himself to the chosen people of God, and the line of the Saviour; in comparison with whom, the nations most renowned for arts or arms, seem entirely disregarded.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

As we are descended from that "one man, by whom sin and death entered into the world;" so we all resemble and imitate him: and this should remind us now vile and frail we are; and excite us to repent, to value the Saviour, to despair of happiness in this miserable world, to seek those things which are above, and habitually to prepare to meet death, who is, to all unbelievers, "the king of terrors." For, as an invincible conqueror, he has already transmitted the bodies of innumerable millions to the grave, and their souls to the tribunal of God and to the eternal world; and is even now ready to deal with us in like manner. But whilst we are spared, we should regard every human being, as a brother, a fellow-sinner, and a fellow-sufferer, without respect to climate, complexion, party, character, or even personal injuries; and, with expanded benevolence and compassion, we should aim to alleviate misery, to increase comfort, to promote peace, and to be instrumental to the salvation of men, by our example, prayers, and the improvement of our several talents.—Short is our passage through time into eternity: we are no sooner born, than we begin to die; and all earthly distinctions will speedily be reduced to a level, as the rough weed, the green blade, and the gaudy flower fall before the indiscriminating scythe! May we then be distinguished as the Lord's people, who are his portion, and whom he delighteth to honour and bless.—The inconceivable multitudes of the human race, which have peopled, or shall people, the earth, through successive generations, will ere long assemble before the judgment-seat of Christ, and be divided as easily, and as certainly, "as the shepherd divideth the sheep from the goats:" then the wicked "shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal." May we then, so "look for these things, as to give diligence that we may be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless!"

19 And when Azubah was dead, Caleb took unto him *Ephrath, which bare him Hur.

20 And Hur begat Uri, and Uri begat *Bezaleel.

21 ¶ And afterward Hezron went in to the daughter of *Machir, the father of Gilead, whom he *married when he was threescore years old, and she bare him Segub.

22 And Segub begat *Jair, who had three and twenty cities in the land of Gilead.

23 And he took *Geshur, and Aram, with the towns thereof, even threescore cities: all these belonged to the sons of Machir the father of Gilead.

24 And after that Hezron was dead in *Caleb-ephratah, then Abiah, Hezron's wife, bare him *Ashur, the father of *Tekoa.

25 ¶ And the sons of *Jerahmeel, the first-born of Hezron, were Ram, the first-born, and Bunah, and Oren, and Ozem, and Ahijah.

26 Jerahmeel had also another wife, whose name was Atarah, she was the mother of Onam.

27 And the sons of *Ram, the first-born of Jerahmeel, were Maaz, and Jamin, and Eker.

28 And the sons of *Onam were Shammai, and Jada. And the sons of Shammai; Nadab, and Abishur.

29 And the name of the wife of Abishur was Abihail, and she bare him Ahban, and Molid.

30 And the sons of *Nadab; Seled, and Appaim: but Seled died without children.

31 And the sons of Appaim; Ishi. And the sons of Ishi; Sheshan. And *the children of Sheshan; Ahlai.

32 And the sons of Jada, the brother of Shammai; Jethur, and Jonathan: and Jethur died without children.

33 And the sons of Jonathan; Peleth, and Zaza. These were the sons of Jerahmeel.

34 ¶ Now Sheshan had no sons, but daughters: and Sheshan had a servant, an Egyptian, whose name was Jarha.

for that tribe (like him who was to spring from it,) was in all respects to have the pre-eminence. (Note, Gen. xlix. 8-10.)—Shelah. (3.) (Note, iv. 21.)

V. 5, 6. (Marg. Ref.) It is uncertain, whether Ethan, Heman, Calcol, and Dara, the sons of Mahol, of whom we read, were remote and eminent descendants of Zerah; or whether different persons, bearing nearly the same names, are there intended. (1 Kings iv. 31.)

V. 7. Achan, who sinned in the accursed thing, is here called Achar, or the troubler; with reference to Joshua's words to him. (Notes, Josh. vii.)—The genealogies of Judah are very copious: because David, the progenitor of the Messiah, was of that tribe; and the whole nation of the Jews is composed of such as either descended from Judah, or incorporated with those who did. (Note, 2 Kings xvi. 6.)

V. 8. "Sons" here signifies descendants. These might be numerous, though but one son is mentioned.

V. 11, 12. (Notes, Ruth iv.)

V. 15. Jesse had eight sons; but it is probable, that one died before David came to the throne. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 17. Jether is generally supposed to have been an Ishmaelite by birth, but an Israelite by religion. (Note, 2 Sam. xvii. 25.)

V. 18-20. This Caleb, or Chelubai, (9.) was not the same with Caleb the son of Jephunneh, whose posterity is afterwards mentioned; (iv. 15.) He must have lived some time before Israel left Egypt; as Bezaleel, who was the principal person employed in constructing the tabernacle, was his great-grandson; the son of Uri, the son of Hur, the son of Caleb. (Marg. Ref. Note, Ex. xxxi. 1-5.)

V. 21. "The father of Gilead" means, the prince of Gilead, or the father of a large portion of the inhabitants. The term occurs frequently in this sense, throughout the subsequent genealogies; as the reader will readily perceive by consulting the marginal references. (Notes, 42-53.)

V. 22. Jair was descended by his father from Judah, and properly belonged to that tribe: but Hezron, his grandfather, married a wife of the tribe of Manasseh; and Jair, as descended from her, united himself to that tribe, and at length inherited among them. (Note, Num. xxxii. 41.)

V. 23. Jair seems to have taken Geshur, Aram, and some other places, from those who bore possessed them.

V. 24-33. Ashur was the posthumous son of Hezron, by Abiah, whom he 35 And Sheshan gave his daughter to Jarha his servant to wife, and she bare him Attai.

36 And Attai begat Nathan, and Nathan begat Zabad,

37 And Zabad begat Ephlal, and Ephlal begat Obed,

38 And Obed begat Jehu, and Jehu begat Azariah,

39 And Azariah begat Helez, and Helez begat Eleasah,

40 And Eleasah begat Sisamai, and Sisamai begat Shallum, 41 And Shallum begat Jekamiah, and Jekamiah begat Elishama.

42 ¶ Now the sons of Caleb, the brother of Jerahmeel, were, Mesha his first-born, which was the father of Ziph: and the sons of Mareshah, the father of Hebron.

43 And the sons of Hebron; Korah, and Tappuah, and Rekem, and Shema.

44 And Shema begat Raham, the father of Jorkoam; and Rekem begat Shammai.

45 And the son of Shammai was Maon: and Maon was the father of Beth-zur.

46 And Ephah, Caleb's concubine, bare Haran, and Moza, and Gazez: and Haran begat Gazez.

47 And the sons of Jahdai; Regem, and Jotham, and Gesham, and Pelet, and Ephah, and Shaaph.

48 Maachah, Caleb's concubine, bare Sheber, and Tirhanah.

49 She bare also Shaaph the father of Madmannah, Sheva the father of Macbenah, and the father of Gibeaz: and the daughter of Caleb was Achsa.

50 ¶ These were the sons of Caleb the son of Hur, the first-born of Ephrath: Shobal the father of Kirjath-jearim, 51 Salma the father of Beth-lehem, Hareph the father of Beth-gader.

52 And Shobal the father of Kirjath-jearim had sons: Haroeh, and half of the Manahethites.

53 And the families of Kirjath-jearim; the Ithrites, and the Puhites, and the Shumathites, and the Mishraites: of them came the Zareathites, and the Eshtaulites.

¶ Or, the city of Nahash. t Josh. xv. 17. Judg. i. 13. iii. 9—11. || Or, Hathath and Meonathai who begat.

V. 16. As the sons of Jeconiah are enumerated in the next verses, and as Zedekiah, a son of Jeconiah, is not elsewhere mentioned, it is thought by learned men, that his “son” here means his successor.

V. 17, 18. Many commentators take it for granted, that Salathiel, or Shealtiel, actually descended from Nathan, and was only the adoptive son of Jeconiah; that Solomon's line was extinct; and that Joseph, the husband of Mary, sprang from Nathan, as well as she. They ground this sentiment on these reasons: Jeremiah is supposed to have pronounced Jeconiah childless; but perhaps a satisfactory solution of that difficulty may be adduced. (Notes, Jer. xxii. 28—30.) St. Luke mentions Zerobabel, the son of Salathiel, in the genealogy of Mary: but it is scarcely the shadow of an argument to say, because a father and son are of the same names in one genealogy, as they are in another, therefore they were the same persons, when no other part of the genealogy supports, or can possibly accord with, the conclusion. Salathiel, the father of Zerobabel, mentioned by St. Luke, was “the son of Rhesa, the son of Joanna, the son of Judah;” this Salathiel was the “son of Assir, the son of Jeconiah.”—“Rhesa, (Luke iii. 27.) is not found among the eight children, that are here reckoned up.” (Br. Patrick.) Matthew says, Jeconiah begat Salathiel; and it will be harsh to interpret this of mere adoption, or of less than being his progenitor; and here are several other sons, or descendants, of Jeconiah mentioned, who cannot all have been adopted. Upon the whole, it is highly probable, that the line from Solomon to Joseph was uninterrupted; and that the two families met in Jesus, the real son of Mary, and the supposed and legal son of Joseph. (Notes, Matt. i. 2—17. Luke iii. 23—38.)

V. 19—24. Perhaps Pedaiah was Salathiel's son, Jeconiah's grandson, and Zerubbabel's father: but, being of small note, his name is omitted in the other genealogies, which is a common case. Nothing is known except the names of the persons afterwards mentioned; but several of them must have lived a long time after the captivity, perhaps later than the days of Ezra. St. Matthew evidently deduces the line of Joseph from a different branch of the same stock. (Matt. i. 13—16.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In the large families of wise, eminent, and pious men, many persons prove too insignificant to attract our notice, and others so vicious as to excite our grief and indignation. They therefore, who have no children, may hence learn submission to the will of God: for if, by that appointment, they are destitute of some comforts, they are also exempted from a variety of anxieties and trials. And they, to whom God hath given children, may learn to bring up their offspring for him to the best of their power, recommending them to his care and blessing; nor should they indulge the hope of much comfort from them, any more than seek great things for them, in this vain and vexatious world. Yet, upon the whole, the attentive and accurate observer will perceive that the posterity of the righteous enjoy advantages, sometimes for many generations, in consequence of the piety of their progenitors: so that this is the best way of laying up an inheritance for our beloved offspring.—Nothing more distinguishes the real believer from the slave of sin, than the manner in which each of them behaves towards a faithful reprover: the former, upon reflection, will love and revere him as his best friend; the latter will habitually hate him as his enemy; (2 Sam. xii. 1—7. 13. 1 Kings xxi. 20. xxii. 8. Ps. cxli. 5.) But all our gratitude to the instruments of our mercies should be ultimately directed to the glory of God: and all the prosperity of ourselves and our families will eventually terminate in misery, unless it centre in union with the Son of David, the King of Israel, and the Saviour of sinners.

NOTES.

CHAP. IV. V. 1. Carmi seems to mean the same person before called Chelubai, and Caleb.) (Marg. Ref. Notes, ii. 18—20. 42.)

V. 2—4. The Zorathites were the inhabitants of Zorah: but they in general descended from Shobal, or were subject to him. “The father of Etam,” seems to imply, that the persons spoken of were the sons of one, who was lord of Etam, and progenitor of its principal inhabitants.—Hur appears to have been the grandfather of Salma, who before was called the father of Beth-lehem. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 5—8. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 9, 10. Nothing is recorded concerning the parentage or family of this remarkable person; but, as he was eminent for wealth, valour, success, wisdom, or piety, it is probable, that the Jews did not want information concerning him. It must be supposed, that he lived soon after Israel took possession of Canaan; and when they were greatly straitened by the remains of the ancient inhabitants. His mother, having suffered much, in her pregnancy or travail, called him “Jabez,” or, Sorrowful, (Margin;) but her sorrow was emphatically turned into joy, if she lived to see how eminent and excellent a man he proved. His achievements are not recorded; but his prayers are, for our instruction and imitation. He was a genuine son of Jacob, who wrestled, and, having prevailed with God, refused to depart without a blessing, and on that account was surnamed Israel. (Notes, Gen. xxxii. 24—30.) From a full heart, Jabez earnestly intreated the God of Israel to “bless him indeed!” and neither to send him away without a blessing, nor merely to bless him, like Esau, with temporal blessings. He seems to have been constrained to fight against the Canaanites: but he conducted the war with faith and prayer; and he intreated the Lord to be with him, and both to enlarge his coast, and to preserve him from disastrous events, which might occasion grief unto him.—In the land of Canaan ancient believers saw a type of heaven; in their wars was represented the conflict of God's people with their enemies; and every clause of his prayer may be applied to, and probably was intended for, more noble and spiritual blessings. Accordingly, the Lord heard and granted his requests, and thus he became honourable, as well as prosperous, in Israel.—The Jews think that Jabez was an eminent doctor of the law, and “the scribes that dwelt at Jabez” were his disciples; (ii. 55.)—This instructive example, in the midst of genealogies, to us so abstruse, seems like the fragrant rose surrounded by thorns; or to refreshing streams in the desert: and it appears a recompense intended for the careful student of God's word, who diligently and reverently examines the whole, comparing one part with another, without disregarding or undervaluing any.

V. 13. Kenaz is supposed to have been the son of Chelub. (11. Notes, Josh. xv. 16, 17. Judg. iii. 9—11.)

35 And Joel, and Jehu the son of Josibiah, the son of Seraiah, the son of Asiel.

36 And Elioenai, and Jaakobah, and Jeshohaiah, and Asaiah, and Adiel, and Jesimiel, and Benaiah, 37 And Ziza the son of Shiphi, the son of Allon, the son of Jedaiah, the son of Shimri, the son of Shemaiah:

38 These *mentioned by their names were princes in their families: and the house of their fathers increased greatly.

39 ¶ And they went to the entrance of *Gedor, even unto the east side of the valley, to seek pasture for their flocks.

40 And they found fat pasture and good, and "the land was wide, and quiet, and peaceable; for they of *Ham had dwelt there of old.

41 And these written by name came in the days of *Hezekiah king of Judah, and smote their tents, and the habitations that were found there, and destroyed them utterly unto this day, and dwelt in their rooms: because there was pasture there for their flocks.

42 And some of them, even of the sons of Simeon, five hundred men, went to *mount Seir, having for their captains Pelatiah, and Neriaiah, and Rephaiah, and Uzziel, the sons of Ishi.

43 And they smote "the rest of the Amalekites that were escaped, and dwelt there "unto this day.

V. 14. Craftsmen, smiths, carpenters, potters, and other artificers, may be included under this general term. (Note, 22, 23.)

V. 17, 18. Ezra seems to have been the person before called Asareel, (16,) or, as some think, his son.—She bare, (17.) That is, Bithiah bare to Mered; (18:) for these appear to have been Ezra's grandsons. Many think that Pharaoh was the name of an Israelite; yet it is not impossible; but Mered might marry a daughter of some Egyptian king.—Father of, &c. (Notes, ii. 22. 49.)

V. 20. Shimon is supposed to have been another son of Mered, by Hodiah, or Jehudijah. (18, 19.) As the name signifies a Jewess, it rather favours the opinion, that Bithiah was not a Jewess, but an Egyptian. (18.)

V. 21. The sacred historian had mentioned the descendants of Judah by Zerah, (ii. 6-8;) and having more copiously given the genealogies of his posterity by Pharez, he here mentions briefly a few of the line of Selah, the son of Judah, by the Canaanitish woman whom he married; and who was his eldest surviving son. (Notes, Gen. xxxviii. 4, 5. 11-16. 24. Neh. xi. 5, 6.)

V. 22, 23. Perhaps these families, in the time of David, or Solomon, when Moab was subjected, had dominion there; but in process of time they were so reduced, as to subsist by the meanest employments. Their honour and dignity "were ancient things;" for at the time this was written, they were brought very low.—Some think that they remained near Babylon, after the return of Judah from the captivity, "amongst plants and hedges," for the sake of doing the work of the Persian kings.—It was common in those ages, and still is in many places, for particular trades and professions to be continued in families through successive generations.

V. 24. The families of Simeon are mentioned next to those of Judah, because their inheritances adjoined to each other. (Note, Josh. xix. 1-9. Marg. Ref.)

V. 30, 31. Ziklag was at first given to Simeon: but the Philistines took it, and gave it to David; so that from his time it belonged to Judah. (Note, 1 Sam. xxvii. 5, 6. Marg. Ref.)

V. 34-38. These were eminent men among the Simeonites; and perhaps leaders in that expedition, which is next recorded.

V. 39-43. Part of the Simeonites joined the house of David; (Note, 2 Chr. xv. 9:) and, being greatly increased in the time of Hezekiah, they dispossessed some of the ancient Canaanites, who yet kept possession of a plentiful and peaceful country, fit for the feeding of cattle.—Perhaps this tract belonged to the Simeonites in the division of the land, and at length they got possession of

it. Some, however, think, that a country towards Arabia, without the borders of the promised land, is intended. It seems that the remains of the Amalekites, after the general destruction of them made by Saul and David, had settled near to the Edomites, in mount Seir: but this remnant was extirpated by a small company of Simeonites.—Some think, that the kings of Babylon permitted this part of Simeon to remain unmolested in their possessions, through the captivity, even to the time of Ezra: but perhaps Ezra extracted the words "unto this day," from the ancient records, without altering them.—The habitations, (41,) or the Meunim, or Maonites. (Judg. x. 12. 2 Chr. xxvi. 7.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Children should consider how much their parents, especially their mothers, suffered for them, before they became capable of reflection; and they should endeavour by every means to requite them, as much as possible, by their kindness, and by aiming to be a comfort to them, in their whole conduct. But it is basely ungrateful. (though, alas! very common,) willingly to cause them still more exquisite and durable anguish, by ill behaviour.—Those events, which at first occasion most sorrow, often terminate in the greatest comfort: we should not therefore yield to despondency, but "hope to the end," and expect to extract good from every apparent evil.—But it is natural for us to record our sorrows rather than our mercies; though we may reasonably wonder that the latter are so many, and the former so few.—The honour, which cometh from God is introduced by the gifts of wisdom, faith, and piety; and when these are bestowed, men will at length be honourable, whether they be renowned and prosperous, or not.—We go about our proper work in a right manner, when we use the means for success with all assiduity, and seek a blessing on them by fervent prayer.—A consequence of all earthly good things cannot bless us indeed: "the true felicity, which our hearts should eagerly desire, consists in the favour, image, and presence of God; and we should pray for this, as resolved not to depart without it. The pardon of sin, the gift of righteousness, and the first-fruits of the Spirit, form the beginning of this happiness: but the world, Satan, and indwelling sin, crowd and straiten us on every side, and keep us from the possession of our inheritance. We should then beg of Israel's God to enlarge our coast, that we may attain to greater holiness, liberty, comfort, and usefulness; and acquire a more decisive victory over our enemies. And if his "hand be with us," if his power be exerted in our cause, we shall be protected, upheld, and enabled to withstand, and to gain ground

15 Ahi the son of Abdiel, the son of Gun, chief of the house of their fathers.

16 And they dwelt in Gilead in Bashan, and in her towns, and in all the suburbs of ^bSharon, upon their ^cborders.

17 All these were ^dreckoned by genealogies in the days of ^eJotham king of Judah, and in the days of ^fJeroboam king of Israel.

18 ¶ The sons of Reuben, and the Gadites, and half the tribe of Manasseh, of ^gvaliant men, men able to bear buckler and sword, and to shoot with bow, and skilful in war, were ^hfour and forty thousand seven hundred and threescore, that went out to the war.

19 And they ⁱmade war with the Hagarites, with Jetur, and ^jNephish, and Nodab.

20 And ^kthey were helped against them, and the Hagarites were delivered into their hand, and all that were with them: for ^lthey cried to God in the battle, and he was intreated of them; ^mbecause they put their trust in him.

21 And they ⁿtook away their cattle; of their camels fifty thousand, and of sheep two hundred and fifty thousand, and of asses two thousand, and of ^omen an hundred thousand.

22 For there fell down many slain, because ^pthe war was of God. And they dwelt in their steads ^quntil the captivity.

23 ¶ And the children of the half-tribe of Manasseh dwelt in the land: they increased from Bashan, unto ^rBaal-hermon and Senir, and unto mount ^sHermon.

24 And these were the heads of the house of their fathers, even Ephraim, and Ishi, and Eliel, and Azriel, and Jeremiah, and Hodaviah, and Jahdiel, mighty men of valour, ^tfamous men, and heads of the house of their fathers.

25 ¶ And they transgressed against the God of against, the confederated forces of the world, the flesh, and the devil. We may very properly, with resignation, pray to be kept from the evil of suffering, which is grievous to nature; but the evil of sinning most affrights and disquiets the spiritually minded: this extorts their bitterest groans and complaints; against this they most earnestly pray, "Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil." And, being kept from the burden of a guilty conscience, and the anguish of having dishonoured and offended the God of their salvation, they can the better bear up under other trials, as supported by that "peace of God which passeth all understanding." Blessed be the Lord, he is ever ready to grant, and to exceed, our prayers for promised blessings: and we are our own enemies, if we do not ask and expect great things from him, through the Saviour's name.—In this checkered world, indeed, there is nothing durable or substantial: but possessing the hope of unchangeable felicity, we may cheerfully acquiesce in the Lord's allotment of our worldly settlements and occupations. Nor is it desirable to advance our children much above our own rank; for they, who at one time have dominion, may at another become dependent on the worst of men for a penurious maintenance: whereas honest labour, in some regular and useful calling, best preserves that mediocrity which is most comfortable, and most advantageous to our spiritual concerns. Let us then adhere to the kingdom of "the Son of David:" for this "Prince of Peace" will supply the temporal wants of his people with every thing truly desirable, and make them happy for ever; while his curse will pursue all his enemies to their utter destruction.

NOTES.

CHAP. V. V. 1, 2. The double portion, which belonged to the first-born, having been forfeited by Reuben, Jacob's eldest son by Leah, was given to Joseph, his eldest son by Rachel, whose descendants had a double portion in Canaan; Jacob having adopted Ephraim and Manasseh, to be, as his own sons, heads of two distinct tribes. Notes, Gen. xlviii. 5-7. xlix. 3-12. 22-26.)—Yet, as the chief Ruler, or Prince, even the Messiah, of whom David and his royal race were progenitors and types, was to descend from Judah; the genealogy began with him, and not with either Reuben or Joseph. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 3-8. Very brief extracts are made from the registers of Reuben, and of several other tribes: because, it is probable, but few persons of these tribes, returned from the captivity to settle in Canaan: and therefore but few of them were concerned in the genealogies, compared with the numbers of Judah, Benjamin, and Levi, of whom the Jews after that event principally consisted. It may be supposed, that Ezra's contemporaries would see the reason, why the persons selected should be named, and not others; though we can assign none.—This chapter contains all that relates to the two tribes and a half, which settled to the east of Jordan. (Notes, Num. xxxii. Josh. xxii.)

V. 9. The inheritance of Reuben extended to the borders of that desert, which reached even to the Euphrates.

V. 10. (Note, 18-22.)

V. 11-17. (Marg. Ref.) Part of the genealogies of Gad, whence these extracts were taken, seems to have been made during the time that Jeroboam the second reigned over Israel, and the rest when Jotham reigned in Judah. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 18-22. The Hagarites were the descendants of Hagar, or the Ishmaelites properly so called; and, being a nation of plunderers, they could not fail to give their neighbours just cause of making war upon them; (Note, Gen. xvi. 12.) But, indeed, "the war was of God," (22,) undertaken in his fear, and in dependence on him, and was approved and succeeded by him: so that the victors, and their descendants, dwelt in the country thus acquired, till they were carried captive by the Assyrians. If this was the same war, which was before mentioned, (10;) the two tribes and half-tribe beyond Jordan might be left, during a part of Saul's reign, to defend themselves: but some think that these tribes were numbered by genealogies, in the days of Jeroboam and Jotham, in order to make war against the Hagarites. They, however, acted in concert and with vigour, and with faith and prayer, against these formidable enemies. But especially it is noted, that they trusted in God, and called upon him in the battle; and their success accorded to their faith.—The multitude of the prisoners may give an idea of the superiority in numbers of the enemy, and of the slaughter which was made.—The Ishmaelites have always been remarkable for the numbers of camels, which they take with them in their expeditions.—When we read of this conduct and success of these Israelites, we are ready to say, "Oh that there had "always" been such an heart in them!" but the conclusion of the chapter gives us a different view of their character and condition.

their fathers, and ^hwent a whoring ⁱafter the gods of the people of the land, whom God destroyed before them.

26 And the God of Israel ^kstirred up the spirit of ^lPul king of Assyria, and the spirit of ^mTilgath-pilneser, king of Assyria, and he carried them away, (even the Reubenites, and the Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manasseh,) ⁿand brought them unto Halah, and Habor, and Hara, and to the river Gozan, unto this day.

V. 25, 26. The Manassites, with the Reubenites and Gadites, forsook God, to worship idols; and the nation of Israel generally did the same: yet the two tribes and a half seem to have been more early and entirely corrupted, than the other tribes.—Their progenitors had hastily desired a settlement to the east of Jordan; and now these tribes were carried captive before the rest of Israel. (Notes, Num. xxvii.) But they were placed in the same regions by Pul and Tilgath-pilneser, to which Shalmanezar afterwards carried the other tribes. (Marg. Ref.)—Hara is supposed to be the same as Media, or part of it.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It is profitable to be frequently reminded, that sin degrades men from their excellency, stamps indelible disgrace on their characters, forfeits their advantages, and entails manifold losses on their posterity. But, the Lord punishes none above their deserts; and as he sees good, he confers unmerited favours on mankind.—They, who are related to our chief Ruler of the tribe of Judah, as his true disciples and subjects, are far more favoured than those who have a two-fold, or tenfold, portion of perishing riches. Let us seek and choose this better portion; and leave the children of this world to contend about their gilded baubles, without envying, coveting, or interfering. We need not in that case fear wanting any thing truly good for us, “for our Father knoweth what things we have need of:” when our families increase, he will increase our provision: and it is our privilege to cast our care on him, and to keep in the path of duty.—Happy is that people who live together in harmony, who readily assist each other; who strenuously oppose the common enemies of their souls; and who acknowledge God in all their ways, but are especially earnest in times of trial and temptation. Such persons will assuredly be heard and helped; their warfare is of God, their enemies will be trodden down, their victory is certain, and their triumphs will be glorious.—And let it be carefully noticed, that all genuine and warranted trust in God will be expressed by earnest prayer; and this in part distinguishes it from a presumptuous confidence, and an indolent reliance, which often subsist without application to him, or habitual prayer; and are especially maintained by lifeless forms, and inefficacious notions.—They, who rebel against the Lord, and apostatize from him, must eventually be ruined: especially, such as desert his worship and reject his salvation, for the sake of those idols which are set up either in temples, or in the hearts of the avaricious, the sensual, or the ambitious. It will little avail them, to have their names inserted in the genealogies of honourable families, or recorded as famous in the page of history, while they are rejected by God, and excluded from his kingdom.—We should consider, that those actions, which are vain, foolish, and wicked in man, may be permitted and made use of by the Lord, in justice, wisdom, and goodness. From him the renowned ravagers of the earth derive their power and courage: and they are employed as his executioners, and classed with pestilences, earthquakes, and famine; being equally dreadful and fatal to mankind. Nor should we forget, that they, whose inordinate desire of earthly objects draws them to a distance from the ordinances of God, are assuredly preparing for their own correction, or destruction.

NOTES.

CHAP. VI. V. 1-3. (Notes, Ex. vi. 14-20. Lev. x. 1, 2.) V. 4-15. These verses contain the line of Eleazar, Aaron's eldest surviving son after the death of Nadab and Abihu, to the Babylonish captivity: but all the persons mentioned were not high priests, for Ithamar's posterity enjoyed that dignity for some time. (Notes, xxiv. 4. 1 Sam. ii. 30. 35, 36. 1 Kings ii. 26, 27. 35.)—“He that executed the priest's office in the temple that Solomon built,” (an intimation that the writer lived when the second temple was built or building;) is supposed to have been Azariah, who vigorously opposed Uzziel's presumptuous attempt to burn incense. (Note, 2 Chr. xxvi. 16-23.) His father Johanan is thought by some to have been the same with Jehoiahi, the firm friend to religion and the family of David, during Athaliah's usurpation. (Notes, 2 Kings xi. xii. 2 Chr. xxiii. xxiv.) Otherwise Jehoiahi is not mentioned.—Urijah, who basely obeyed idolatrous Ahaz, is not named in this catalogue, and perhaps several others are omitted. (Marg. Ref.)—It is wonderful, that so little is recorded of the high priests, when the office is represented in the law, and by St. Paul in his epistle to the Hebrews, as of a peculiar sanctity and importance.

V. 16-30. The principal persons, who presided over the three families of Levi, till the time of David, seem to be mentioned in these verses.—The marginal references contain the variation in the names given to the same persons, in different parts of sacred history, (as far as it can be ascertained;) and nearly the whole, that is at present known concerning them, may be learned by carefully consulting them.—Samuel was not a priest, but descended from Izhar, Aaron's uncle: yet, as a prophet, he seems to have sacrificed personally, and not by the ministration of the priests, as some have conjectured. (Notes, 1 Sam. vii. 9. ix. 12-14. xvi. 1-5.)

V. 31, 32. After the tabernacle had been made stationary, and the Levites had greatly multiplied; David, at length, formed arrangements for their regular ministering by rotation: and especially a large number of them were 32 And they ministered, before the dwelling-place of the tabernacle of the congregation, with singing, until Solomon had built the house of the Lord in Jerusalem: and then they waited on their office according to their order.

33 And these are they that waited, with their children. Of the sons of the Kohathites: *Heman a singer, the son of *Joel, the son of *Shemuel, 34 The son of Elkanah, the son of Jeroham, the son of *Eliel, the son of *Toah,

35 The son of *Zuph, the son of Elkanah, the son of Mahath, the son of Amasai,

36 The son of Elkanah, the son of *Joel, the son of Azariah, the son of Zephaniah,

37 The son of Tahath, the son of Assir, the son of *Ebiasaph, the son of *Korah, 38 The son of *Izhar, the son of Kohath, the son of Levi, the son of Israel.

39 And his brother Asaph, (who stood on his right hand,) even *Asaph, the son of Berachiah, the son of Shimea,

40 The son of Michael, the son of Baasiah, the son of Malchiah, 41 The son of *Ethni, the son of Zerah, the son of *Adaiah,

42 The son of *Ethan, the son of Zimmah, the son of Shimei, 43 The son of *Jahath, the son of *Gershom, the son of Levi.

44 And their brethren, the sons of Merari, stood on the left hand. *Ethan the son of *Kishi, the son Abdi, the son of Malluch,

45 The son of Hashabiah, the son of Amaziah, the son of Hilkiath,

46 The son of Amzi, the son of Bani, the son of Shamer, 47 The son of Mahli, the son of Mushi, the son of *Merari, the son of Levi.

48 Their brethren also the Levites were appointed unto all manner of service of the tabernacle of the house of God.

49 ¶ But *Aaron and his sons offered upon the altar of the burnt-offering, and on the altar of incense, and were appointed for all the work of the place most holy, and to make an atonement for Israel, according to all that *Moses the servant of God had commanded.

50 And these are the sons of Aaron; *Eleazar his son, *Phinehas his son, Abishua his son,

51 Bukki his son, Uzzi his son, Zerahiah his son,

52 Meraioth his son, Amariah his son, Ahitub his son, 53 *Zadok his son, Ahimaaz his son.

54 ¶ Now these are their dwelling places, throughout their castles in their coasts, of the sons of Aaron, of the families of the Kohathites: for their's was the lot.

55 And they gave them *Hebron in the land of Judah, and the suburbs thereof round about it.

56 But the fields of the city, and the villages thereof, they gave to Caleb the son of Jephunneh.

57 And to the sons of Aaron they gave the cities of Judah, namely, Hebron, the city of refuge, and *Libnah with her suburbs, and *Jattir, and Eshtemoa, with their suburbs,

58 And *Hilen with her suburbs, *Debir with her suburbs,

59 And *Ashan with her suburbs, and *Bethshemesh with her suburbs:

60 And out of the tribe of Benjamin; *Geba with her suburbs, and *Alemeth with her suburbs, and *Anathoth with her suburbs. All their cities throughout their families were thirteen cities.

61 And unto the sons of Kohath, which were left of the family of that tribe, were cities given out of the half-tribe, namely, out of the half-tribe of Manasseh, by lot, ten cities.

62 And to the sons of *Gershom throughout their families, out of the tribe of Issachar, and out of the tribe of Asher, and out of the tribe of Naphtali, and out of the tribe of Manasseh in Bashan, thirteen cities.

63 Unto the sons of *Merari were given by lot, throughout their families, out of the tribe of Reuben, and out of the tribe of Gad, and out of the tribe of Zebulun, twelve cities.

64 And the children of Israel gave to the Levites these cities, with their suburbs.

65 And they gave by lot out of the tribe of the children of Judah, and out of the tribe of the children of Simeon, and out of the tribe of the children of Benjamin, these cities which are called by their names.

66 And the residue of the families of the sons of Kohath, had cities of their coasts, out of the tribe of Ephraim.

67 And they gave unto them, of the cities of refuge, *Shechem in mount Ephraim with her suburbs; they gave also *Gezer with her suburbs,

68 And *Jokmeam with her suburbs, and *Bethhoron with her suburbs,

69 And *Ajalon with her suburbs, and *Gath-ramon with her suburbs:

70 And out of the half-tribe of Manasseh; *Aner with her suburbs, and *Bileam with her suburbs, for the family of the remnant of the sons of Kohath.

71 Unto the sons of Gershom were given, out of the family of the half-tribe of Manasseh, *Golan in Bashan with her suburbs, and *Ashtaroth with her suburbs:

72 And out of the tribe of Issachar; *Kedesh with her suburbs, *Daberath with her suburbs,

73 And Ramoth with her suburbs, and Anem with her suburbs:

employed as singers and musicians, in celebrating the praises of God. (Notes, ix. 33. xvi. 4-6. 37-43. xxv.) This was settled before the building of the temple, but it was continued afterwards. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 33-38. Heman was grandson to Samuel, or Shemuel, the prophet and judge of Israel; and probably he was advanced to this office, in honour of his illustrious ancestor. The genealogies of Heman, and Asaph, and Ethan, are carried back to Levi: whence we may infer that their station, as preceptors, was considered as both important and honourable.

V. 39. As Asaph was of the same tribe with Heman, he is called his brother, though descended from a different family of that tribe. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 48. 'It is observable, that in all genealogies of the Levites, there is not a word said of the sons of Moses and their posterity: he having no ambition to prefer them to any office, either in church or state!' (Bp. Patrick.) (Note, Num. xxvii. 18.)

V. 49-53. (Note, 4-15.)

V. 54-66. 'These things seem to be mentioned so often, and with such exactness, that it might appear what care was taken by God, for the maintenance of his ministers, of all sorts; and for the instruction of his people, among whom he dispersed the Levites, who were peculiarly devoted to this service.' (Bp. Patrick.) (Josh. xx. xxi.)—Juttah and Gibeon are here omitted. Perhaps they lay in ruins when the book was written: so that only eleven cities from Judah and Benjamin are enumerated; though thirteen were allotted to the priests in the days of Joshua. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 67-81. Either some of these cities, or their names, had been changed

CHAP. VII.

The sons of Issachar, 1-5; of Benjamin, 6-12; of Naphtali, 13; and of Manasseh, 14-19. The sons of Ephraim, of whom some were slain by the men of Gath, 20-22. His sons by Beriah, 23-27. Their habitations, 28, 29. The sons of Asher, 30-40.

NOW ^athe sons of Issachar were, Tola, and Puah, Jashub, and Shimrom, four.

2 And the sons of Tola; Uzzi, and Rephaiah, and Jeriel, and Jahmai, and Jibsam, and Shemuel, heads of their father's house, to wit, of Tola: they were valiant men of might in their generations; ^bwhose number was in the days of David two and twenty thousand and six hundred.

3 And the sons of Uzzi; Izrahiah: and the sons of Izrahiah; Michael, and Obadiah, and Joel, Ishiah, five: all of them chief men.

4 And ^awith them, by their generations, after the house of their fathers, were bands of soldiers for war, six and thirty thousand men: for they had many wives and sons.

5 And their brethren, among all the families of Issachar, were valiant men of might, reckoned in all, by their genealogies, fourscore and seven thousand.

6 ¶ The sons ^aof Benjamin; Bela, and Becher, and ^aJediael, three.

since the time of Joshua: but, as Mr. Henry observes, Salop and Shrewsbury, Sarum and Salisbury, are as different names for the same places, as any in these catalogues; yet they, who live in their vicinity, are no ways confused by them. —Some cities also are here mentioned, as having belonged to Ephraim, which in Joshua are spoken of as cities of Dan: but various changes in such matters would occur in a course of ages.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In the judgment of God, none of the human race are more honourable or valuable, than they who consistently minister in holy things. And though many, nominally bearing this sacred character, render themselves insignificant by their indolence, contemptible by their covetousness, or odious by their profligacy, or bring the Divine vengeance upon themselves by offering strange fire before the Lord; (Note, Lev. x. 1, 2:) yet, instead of that order being despised on these accounts, they, who are singularly humble, diligent, disinterested, zealous, and valiant for the truth, ought to be treated with the greater respect; and of this, God himself has condescended to set the example in his holy word. —None of the Lord's people, and especially of his ministers, should be unemployed: they who, through want of ability or change of circumstances, are precluded from one method of glorifying God, should set themselves to devise another. And if they deem nothing, which may conduce to the advancement of true religion, too laborious, mean, disgusting, or discouraging; if they be disposed to be "instant in season, and out of season;" to instruct, or encourage, one, ten, or ten thousand, in public, or in private, in a cottage, an hospital, a prison, or a palace; in safe and easy, or in difficult and perilous circumstances; if they consider nothing too little to be attended to, and nothing too arduous to be attempted; and if they do all in sincerity, humility, and simplicity of spirit, they cannot long be unoccupied or useless. But, nothing can be a more pleasant and honourable work, than to excite or assist the devotions of the pious, and to lead them to abound in thanksgivings and praises to the Lord. —If a rich inheritance, or the important station of a magistrate or civil governor, could with propriety be quitted for such a service, the enlightened understanding must perceive it to be an honourable and advantageous exchange; for this is the delightful employment of those above, who are arrived at their eternal rest. —They, who have shewn themselves peculiarly disinterested in the cause of God and his people, should be peculiarly considered by their brethren, and their families respected for their sakes. But, though Christians and ministers may be very useful to the church, while "they wait in their offices," none but our great High Priest can make atonement for sin, or be accepted, save through his atonement. —While ministers are bound to wait on their ministering, according to the work of their place: the people are equally bound, in their several stations, to strengthen their hands, and to contribute without grudging to their comfortable maintenance: and in every good work, equality and unanimity will render the burden light, and conduce to the comfort of all concerned, as also to render their endeavours more generally useful.

NOTES.

CHAP. VII. V. 1, 2. (Note, xii. 32.) When David numbered Israel, this was the number of men, among the descendants of Tola, the son of Issachar, fit for war. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 3. Izrahiah, and his four sons, are here spoken of, as five sons of Uzzi.

V. 7—11. These seem not strictly speaking to have been the sons of Bela and Becher, but renowned persons among their descendants, or such as were progenitors of those who returned from Babylon. (Notes, viii. 1. Gen. xli. 12. 2.)

V. 12. Aher. Aher signifies another, and it has been conjectured, that these were Danites, 'the sons of another tribe;' especially as Hushim is named as the only son of Dan. (Gen. xli. 23.) And they suppose, that the name of Dan was not mentioned, because his descendants first established idolatry. But Zebulun also is here omitted; perhaps because none of either of these tribes returned at first from Babylon. —Though the Benjamites had been almost destroyed, in the first days of the judges, they soon became numerous and powerful. (Notes, Judg. xix.—xxi.)

V. 14, 15. Ashriel was Manasseh's eldest son by his wife, who is not named: but a Syrian concubine was the mother of Machir, from whom the whole of that numerous tribe seems to have descended: for Ashriel as the son of Manasseh, is not mentioned elsewhere; and Zelophehad "the second" was a descendant of Machir, two generations having intervened between them: for he was the son of Hephher, the son of Gilead, the son of Machir: (Num. xxvi. 29—33.—Notes, Num. xxvii. 1—11. xxxvi. 1—12. Josh. xvii. 1—5.) Machir married a descendant of Benjamin.

V. 18. Hammoleketh seems to have been the sister of Gilead: though some think she was the sister of Bedan.

19 And the sons of Shemidah were, Ahian, and Shechem, and Likhi, and Aniam.

20 ¶ And the sons of Ephraim; Shuthelah, and Bered his son, and Tahath his son, and Eladah his son, and Tahath his son.

21 And Zabad his son, and Shuthelah his son, and Ezer, and Elead, whom the men of Gath that were born in that land slew, because they came down to take away their cattle.

22 And Ephraim their father mourned many days, and his brethren came to comfort him.

23 ¶ And when he went in to his wife, she conceived, and bare a son, and he called his name Beriah, because it went evil with his house.

24 (And his daughter was Sherah, who built Beth-horon the nether, and the upper, and Uzzen-sherah.)

25 And Rephah was his son, also Resheph, and Telah his son, and Tahan his son,

26 Laadan his son, Ammihud his son, Elishama his son, 27 Non his son, Jehoshua his son.

CHAP. VIII.

The sons and chief men of Benjamin, 1-32. The family of Saul and his descendants by Jonathan, 33-40.

NOW Benjamin begat Bela his first-born, Ashbel the second, and Aharah the third,

2 Nohah the fourth, and Rapha the fifth.

3 And the sons of Bela were, Addar, and Gera, and Abihud,

4 And Abishua, and Naaman, and Ahoah,

5 And Gera, and Shephuphan, and Hiram.

6 And these are the sons of Ehud: these are the heads of the fathers of the inhabitants of Geba, and they removed them to Manahath:

7 And Naaman, and Ahiah, and Gera, he removed them, and begat Uzza, and Ahihud.

8 And Shaharaim begat children in the country of Moab, after he had sent them away; Hushim and Baara were his wives.

9 And he begat of Hodesh his wife, Jobab, and Zibia, and Mesha, and Malcham, 10 And Jeuz, and Shachia, and Mirma. These were his sons, heads of the fathers.

11 And of Hushim he begat Ahitub, and Elpaal.

12 The sons of Elpaal; Eber, and Misham, and Shamed, who built Ono, and Lod, with the towns thereof:

13 Beriah also, and Shema, who were heads of the fathers of the inhabitants of Aijalon, who drove away the inhabitants of Gath.

14 And Ahio, Shashak, and Jeremoth,

15 And Zebadiah, and Arad, and Ader,

16 And Michael, and Ispah, and Joha, the sons of Beriah;

17 And Zebadiah, and Meshullam, and Hezeki, and Heber, 18 Ishmerai also, and Jeziah, and Jobab, the sons of Elpaal;

19 And Jakim, and Zichri, and Zabdi,

20 And Elienai, and Zilthai, and Eliel,

21 And Adaiah, and Beraiah, and Shimrath, the sons of Shimhi;

22 And Ishpan, and Heber, and Eliel,

23 And Abdon, and Zichri, and Hanan,

24 And Hananiah, and Elam, and Antothijah:

25 And Iphedeiah, and Penuel, the sons of Shashak:

V. 21, 22. Ezer and Elead seem to have been the sons, or grandsons, of Ephraim, and not his more remote descendants; for it is evident that he was living when they were slain. Some think, that they supposed the time was arrived for the nation to inherit Canaan; and so made an unsuccessful invasion of it. But it is more likely, that some inhabitants of Gath, who had been natives of Egypt, made an incursion into Goshen, to commit depredations on the cattle of Israel, and slew those who defended them. Thus Ephraim, that was intended to be a very numerous and prosperous tribe, was at first diminished.

V. 24. Some female descendant of Ephraim had affluence, influence, and liberality, to rebuild three cities for her brethren. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 25-29. (Marg. Ref.) "Rephah was his son," (25,) "that is, the son of Beriah."—"Jehoshua," (27,) "for whose sake his pedigree seems to be thus largely deduced," (Bp. Patrick.)

V. 30-40. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Events frequently occur entirely beyond our expectations, and contrary to probabilities; the dispensations of Providence seem to run counter to the promises, in order that their performance may be more observed and admired; and often a good cause is run down, while the wicked triumph in the success of their villany: but the day of judgment will clear up, and rectify, all such apparent obliquities in the Divine administration.—They, who live long, often become like the decaying tree, which stands till all its branches are withered, or broken off one after another. But, though the premature death of our children must necessarily be afflictive, and it behoves us all mutually to comfort each other; yet, we should not mourn as men without hope; for the Lord is able to make up all our losses. Considering our state on earth, we may properly call all our children Beriah, (marg.) for "man is born to trouble, as the sparks fly upwards." But the supports, consolations, and prospects, which the gospel brings to believers, are sufficient to counterbalance every evil, and to render both life and death tolerable, if not joyful.—If men venture their lives to preserve their cattle; surely we should be willing to renounce, venture, and suffer any thing, for the sake of Jesus Christ and his precious salvation.

NOTES.

CHAP. VIII. V. 1-5. (Note, vii. 7-11.) The tribe of Benjamin adhered to Judah, in the division of the kingdom, and returned with the Jews from Babylon: and, as the history is about to open with the translation of the kingdom from Saul, of that tribe, to David of Judah; we have here a more copious account given of it than of several other tribes. But, either some of the sons of Benjamin had several names, or those called his sons were his more remote descendants. Gera, called his son, in Genesis, is here mentioned as his grandson by Bela; (Note, Gen. xli. 21:) but the whole subsequent genealogy remains obscure. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 6-10. Ehud the son of Gera, was the judge of Israel who slew Eglon king of Moab: (Notes, Judg. iii. 15-30:) perhaps, in consequence, he acquired dominion over the Moabites, and some of his descendants lived among them. These having many children, removed several of them, and settled them in different places during their own lives.

V. 11-28. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 29—40. There are no genealogies remaining of any of the kings of Israel, after the division of the kingdom. But, we have here not only a genealogy of Saul, but also an account of his descendants by Jonathan, and Merib-baal, or Mephibosheth, and his son Micah, for several generations. Perhaps David took care to record what passed in his days, and his descendants recorded what came after, in honour of Jonathan, David's covenanted generous friend. (Notes, ix.
35—44. 2 Sam. ix. xvi. 1—4. xix. 24—30. Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The Lord delighteth to exalt those who have been abased; and to honour those who adhere to him, and to the King whom he hath placed upon his holy hill of Zion, to his chosen people, and to his instituted worship. Numbers of renowned names are now buried in oblivion; but as God honours some of those, who have been faithful and useful in their generation, by recording their names in the sacred Scriptures; so he writes the names of all his people in the book of life. May this be our privilege, however unnoticed in the partial histories of mankind!—Alas! what will it avail those, who perish in an unequal contest with the Almighty, to have been admired as men of valour and activity by their fellow-creatures? Let us seek to make our peace with God; and for his sake, and after his example, to forgive our enemies, and shew a decent respect to their memories: and still more to express affection and gratitude, to those who have been kind and useful to us, not neglecting the credit and interests of their posterity.

NOTES.

CHAP. IX. V. 1. This verse seems to be the sacred writer's account of the book, or books, from which he had transcribed the preceding genealogies.
Both Israel and Judah had been thus reckoned, or registered; and he had made extracts from the books of the two kingdoms, which had been written before the captivity. (Note, Neh. vii. 5, 6.) The ten tribes had been carried into regions at a considerable distance from Babylon: but they were, at the time when this was written, in general, subject to the kings of Babylon.

(2 Kings xvii. 6. xviii. 11. xix. 12, 13. Am. v. 25—27.)

V. 2. The persons that first, after the captivity, regained possession of their cities and lands, contained among them, not only Jews properly so called, but many Israelites from the other tribes; and also a number of priests, Levites, and Nethinims. (Notes, Neh. xi. 1—3.) The Nethinims were the remainder of the Gibeonites, with others perhaps joined with them, who were given as servants to the priests and Levites. The word signifies given, or, dedicated persons. (Notes, Josh. ix. 27. 1 Kings ix. 20—22. Ezra ii. 55—58.)

V. 3—9. From the subsequent names of the priests and Levites, it is probable, that the sacred writer is speaking of the transactions recorded by Nehemiah; (Note, Neh. xi. 4—6;) yet the names here mentioned so differ, from those in the parallel passage, that it can hardly be supposed the same persons are always meant.—But, in these matters there are difficulties, which are perhaps incapable of a satisfactory solution at this distance of time, though the whole might be plain to those, for whose use it was principally intended.

V. 11. "The ruler of the house of God" does not signify the high priest, but "the second priest," who officiated for him when incapacitated; or one of the chief priests, who superintended the affairs of the temple in all ordinary cases. (Marg. Ref. Note, Neh. xi. 11, 12.)

V. 12—18. Several names may be omitted, in the genealogies of these persons, and others introduced, which are elsewhere omitted: but the names are so far the same, as to shew that the transactions recorded by Nehemiah are intended. (Notes, Neh. xi. 10—19. xii. 1—11.)

V. 19—21. It has been conjectured that the Jews, upon their return from Babylon, prepared a tabernacle for the worship of the Lord, before they had courage, or ability, to rebuild the temple. But the inspired historian evidently

*Ebiasaph, the son of Korah, and his brethren, of the house of his father, the Korahites, were over the work of the service, keepers of the gates of the tabernacle: and their fathers, being over the host of the LORD, were keepers of the entry.

20 And Phinehas the son of Eleazar was the ruler over them in time past, and the LORD was with him.

21 And Zechariah the son of Meshelemiah was porter of the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

22 All these which were chosen to be porters in the gates, were two hundred and twelve. These were reckoned by their genealogy in their villages, whom David and Samuel the seer did ordain in their set office.

23 So they and their children had the oversight of the gates of the house of the LORD, namely, the house of the tabernacle, by wards.

24 In four quarters were the porters, toward the east, west, north, and south.

25 And their brethren, which were in their villages, were to come after seven days from time to time with them.

26 For these Levites, the four chief porters, were in their set office, and were over the chambers and treasuries of the house of God.

27 And they lodged round about the house of God, because the charge was upon them, and the opening thereof every morning pertained to them.

28 And certain of them had the charge of the ministering vessels, that they should bring them in and out by tale.

29 Some of them also were appointed to oversee the vessels, and all the instruments of the sanctuary, and the fine flour, and the wine, and the oil, and the frankincense, and the spices.

30 And some of the sons of the priests made the ointment of the spices.

31 And Mattithiah, one of the Levites, who was the firstborn of Shallum the Korahite, had the set office over the things that were made in the pans.

32 And other of their brethren, of the sons of the Kohathites, were over the shew-bread, to prepare it every sabbath.

33 And these are the singers, chief of the fathers of the Levites, who remaining in the chambers were free: for they were employed in that work day and night.

34 These chief fathers of the Levites were chief throughout their generations; these dwelt at Jerusalem.

35 ¶ And in Gibeon dwelt the father of Gibeon, Jehiel, whose wife's name was Maachah:

36 And his firstborn son Abdon, then Zur, and Kish, and Baal, and Ner, and Nadab, 37 And Gedor, and Ahio, and Zechariah, and Mikloth.

38 And Mikloth begat Shimeam: and they also dwelt with their brethren at Jerusalem, over against their brethren.

39 And Ner begat Kish, and Kish begat Saul, and Saul begat Jonathan, and Malchi-shua, and Abinadab, and Esh-baal.

40 And the son of Jonathan was Merib-baal: and Merib-baal begat Micah.

41 And the sons of Micah were, Pithon, and Melech, and Tahrea, and Ahaz.

42 And Ahaz begat Jarah, and Jarah begat Alemeth, and Aznaveth, and Zimri; and Zimri begat Moza, 43 And Moza begat Binea; and Rephaiah his son, Eleasah his son, Azel his son.

44 And Azel had six sons, whose names are these, Azrikam, Bocheru, and Ishmael, and Shearah, and Obadiah, and Hanan: these were the sons of Azel.

spoke of the times of Nehemiah; and the temple had been finished many years before.—The word tabernacle may, therefore, refer to the sanctuary erected by Moses, which the temple, built after the captivity, more resembled, than it did Solomon's magnificent edifice. Indeed, the sanctuary at first was only a tent, or tabernacle, when Phinehas superintended it, in times past; yet, "the LORD was with him." (Note, Num. iii. 32. iv. 27, 28. xxxi. 4—6.)—This seems to have been mentioned, as an instruction and encouragement, to the priests and Levites, in the times of Ezra and Nehemiah: for there can be no reasonable doubt but that Phinehas the grandson of Aaron was intended.—Among numerous instances in which the Word of the LORD is used, by the Jewish paraphrasts, personally for JEHOVAH, the following may be adduced: 'In the Targum, The Word of the LORD was his Helper.—If he who was with Phinehas was JEHOVAH the true God, and this Word was with Phinehas; then the Word, in the opinion of this paraphrast, was JEHOVAH the true God.' (Bp. Patrick.)

V. 22. Samuel seems to have made some regulations respecting the attendance of the Levites, before those which David afterwards established: indeed, some think, that David received those instructions from Samuel, according to which he regulated the courses of the priests and Levites. (Marg. Ref.)—When the Jews returned from Babylon, they ordered these matters with respect to those appointments.

V. 23. The expression here used, "the house of the tabernacle," is considered by many as confirming the opinion before mentioned, that a tabernacle was erected, after the captivity, till the temple was finished. (Note, 19—21.) No doubt, can, I suppose, be made as to the fact: but, if the sacred historian wrote of Nehemiah's time, whatever allusion he might make to that fact; it is certain, that the temple was then finished. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 27—29. The gold and silver vessels, and other treasures appropriated to the service of God, were deposited in the treasuries of the sanctuary; and the Levites lodged around it, as the appointed guard of them, as well as to be ready for their work. (xxvi. 20—28. Note, Ezra viii. 24—27.)

V. 30. The Levites kept guard over the deposit of spices and frankincense, as well as over the other treasures; but the priests compounded the holy oil and incense. (Notes, Ex. xxx. 22—38.) It seems that Bezaleel, of Judah, made them in the time of Moses. (Ex. xxxvii. 1. 29.)

V. 31—33. (Marg. Ref.) Singers. (33.) A number of the Levites were employed, by rotation, in singing praises to the LORD; and they seem to have continued the service, night and day; and, consequently, were exempted from other employments, and also from paying tribute. (Marg. Ref. Note, Ezra vii. 24—26. Ps. cxxxiv.)—Moses commanded nothing concerning singers or musicians; and he forbade any to add to his words: but this could only mean uninspired persons; for no doubt God, by his prophets, might add, diminish, or alter, as he saw good.

V. 35—44. (Note, viii. 29—40.) This repetition seems to have been intended merely as an introduction to the ensuing history.—Ner, &c. (39.) (Marg. Ref.) Perhaps Abiel, the father of Kish, was also called Ner.—Ner, the father of Abner, or Abiner, (my father Ner,) was Saul's uncle, not his grandfather.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In remembering the miseries of man, we should be careful not to lose sight of his transgressions, that the justice of God in them may be noticed.—When sinners repent, and forsake their sins, they are in a fair way of being extricated from their trouble; and the affairs of church and state are likely to be well ordered, when men, of all ranks and orders in the community, concur in endeavours for that purpose.—Whatever politicians may suppose, no description of men are more essential to the real welfare of the state, than conscientious ministers of religion; and that service requires very able men, of clear heads, and steadfast minds. God will raise up such persons in those nations which he peculiarly favours, and qualify some for rulers in his church, and others for subordinate services: and it is well, when every one knows, and diligently attends to, his proper work, without envying or contemning any of his brethren. To be "a door-keeper in the house of the LORD," is an honourable employment: and if He be with us, it will both be comfortable to us, and profitable to others; but without this, our services will be formal, and our souls miserable.—If employed in the service of the sanctuary, we have a charge to keep, as well as a work to do; and those who "watch for men's souls, as they that must give account," are entrusted with that which is far more valuable, than the richest treasures of silver and gold. They should therefore reside upon the spot as much as possible, in order to be near and ready for their work, at every hour, as occasion may require. To prepare bread for the sanctuary, in their stated public preaching, may, perhaps, be only expected from them every sabbath: but some parts of their work must be needful every day; and they should generally be exempted from other cares and employments, that they may give themselves wholly to the word of God and prayer. Blessed be his name! if believers, we shall for ever, (not in rotation, but altogether;) without interruption or cessation, praise him night and day in his temple above.

Saul's defeat and death, 1-7. The Philistines abuse his dead body, 8-10. The men of Jabesh-gilead rescue it, with the bodies of his sons, 11, 12. Saul's sin; for which he died, and the kingdom was transferred to David, 13, 14.

NOW *the Philistines fought against Israel; and the men of Israel fled from before the Philistines, and fell down *slain in *mount Gilboa.

2 And the Philistines followed hard after Saul, and after his sons; and the Philistines slew *Jonathan, and *Abinadab, and Malchi-shua, *the sons of Saul.

3 And the battle *went sore against Saul, and the *archers *hit him, and *he was wounded of the archers.

4 Then said Saul to his armour-bearer, "Draw thy sword, and thrust me through therewith; lest these *uncircumcised come and *abuse me. But his armour-bearer would not; for *he was sore afraid. So *Saul took a sword, and fell upon it.

5 And when his armour-bearer saw that Saul was dead, he fell likewise on the sword, and died.

6 So *Saul died, and his three sons, and all his house died together.

7 And when all the men of Israel, that *were in the valley, saw that they fled, and that Saul and his sons were dead, *then they forsook their cities, and fled: and the Philistines came and dwelt in them.

8 ¶ And it came to pass on the morrow, when the Philistines came *to strip the slain, that they found Saul and his sons fallen in mount Gilboa.

9 And when they had stripped him, they *took his head, and his armour, and sent into the land of the Philistines round about, to carry *tidings unto their idols, and to the people.

10 And they put his armour in the house of *their gods, and fastened his head *in the temple of Dagon.

11 ¶ And when *all Jabesh-gilead heard all that the Philistines had done to Saul, 12 They arose, all the valiant men, and took away the body of Saul, and the bodies of his sons, and brought them to Jabesh, and buried their bones under *the oak in Jabesh, and *fasted seven days.

13 ¶ So Saul died for his transgression, which he *committed against the LORD, *even against the word of the LORD, which he kept not, and also *for asking counsel of one that had *a familiar spirit, to enquire of it;

14 And *enquired not of the LORD: therefore *he slew him, and *turned the kingdom unto David the son of *Jesse.

THEN *all Israel gathered themselves to David unto *Hebron, saying, "Behold, we are thy bone and thy flesh.

2 And moreover *in time past, even when Saul was king, thou *wast he *that leddest out and broughtest in Israel: and the LORD thy God said unto thee, "Thou shalt *feed my people Israel, and thou shalt be *ruler over my people Israel.

3 Therefore came all the *elders of Israel to the king to Hebron; and *David made a covenant with them in Hebron *before the LORD; and they *anointed David king over Israel, according *to the word of the LORD *by Samuel.

4 ¶ And *David and all Israel went to Jerusalem, which is *Jebus; where the Jebusites were, *the inhabitants of the land.

5 And the inhabitants of Jebus said to David, "Thou shalt not come hither. Nevertheless David took *the castle of Zion, which is *the city of David.

6 And David said, "Whosoever smiteth the Jebusites first shall be *chief and captain. *So Joab the son of Zeruiah went first up, and was chief.

7 And *David dwelt in the castle; therefore they called *it, The city of David.

8 And he built the city round about, even from *Millo round about: and Joab *repaired the rest of the city.

9 So David *waxed greater and greater: *for the LORD of hosts was with him.

10 ¶ These also are *the chief of the mighty men whom David had, who *strengthened themselves with him in his kingdom, and with all Israel, *to make him king, *according to the word of the LORD concerning Israel.

11 And this is the number of the mighty men whom David had; *Jashobeam *an Hachmonite, the chief of the captains; he lifted up his spear against three hundred slain by him at one time.

12 And after him was *Eleazar the son of Dodo the *Ahoite, who was one of *the three mighties.

13 He was with David at *Pas-dammim, and there the Philistines were gathered together to battle, where was a parcel of ground full of barley; and the people fled from before the Philistines.

NOTES.

CHAP. X. V. 1-12. (Notes, &c. 1 Sam. xxxi. Marg. Ref.)
V. 13, 14. This history is repeated as an introduction to that of the kingdom of David. The Lord is said to have slain Saul, because he sentenced him to death, and gave Satan leave to tempt him to be his own executioner.—Is it possible, more strongly to mark the excessive criminality of consulting witches, conjurers, fortune-tellers, or sorcerers of any kind, real or pretended, than by representing Saul's conduct in this respect, as one principal reason of his rejection and awful end? (Notes, 1 Sam. xxviii. 3-10. Marg. Ref.)—He enquired not, 'he did not continue to enquire of him. He was remiss and negligent, saying, If God will not hear me, I will go and consult a familiar spirit.' (Lanien, a Jew, in Bp. Patrick.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The Lord punishes only sinners; and none of them can escape, who do not humbly cast themselves upon his mercy: but when transgressors enquire of God, and earnestly seek deliverance in his appointed way, they will certainly prevail; and if they be involved in domestic or national calamities in this world, they will be saved from the wrath to come.—Alas! many "reject his counsel, and will none of his reproof," till he leaves them to "eat of the fruit of their own ways, and to be filled with their own devices;" and numbers who profess to seek the Lord, are so superficial in doing it, so soon weary of it, and so ready to listen to Satan's temptations, that God accounts it no enquiry at all. May we "seek the LORD, whilst he is to be found," and till we have obtained pardon, peace, and sanctifying grace, are enabled to renounce all fellowship with the works and prince of darkness! And may the good Lord deliver us from unbelief, impatience, and despair, and teach us to trust in him, to obey and submit to his will; and to render due honour and kindness to all, whatever their behaviour may have been! Thus waiting on him, we shall obtain a kingdom that cannot be moved, being beyond the reach of the incessant changes and revolutions of sublunary things.

NOTES.

CHAP. XI. V. 1-3. (Notes, 2 Sam. v. 1-3.) It is here added, "according to the word of the LORD to Samuel." (Notes, 1 Sam. xiii. 13-15. xvi. 7-13.)

V. 4-8. (Notes, 2 Sam. v. 6-9.) Joab, &c. (6.) It is evident that Joab was, before this, high in authority under David; but he was, as a reward of his courage and conduct on this occasion, established commander in chief over the whole army.

V. 9. (2 Sam. v. 10.) David's increasing greatness, with the cause of it, is here emphatically stated.

V. 10-47. (Notes, 2 Sam. xxi. 15-22. xxiii. 8-39.) The marginal references and readings shew the principal differences between this part of the chapter, and the passages referred to. Several names are added to the catalogue of worthies, which, it is probable, were something less famous than those mentioned in the second book of Samuel.

parcel, and delivered it, and slew the Philistines; and the LORD saved them by a great deliverance.

15 ¶ Now three of the thirty captains went down to the rock to David, into the cave of Adullam; and the host of the Philistines encamped in the valley of Rephaim.

16 And David was then in the hold, and the Philistines' garrison was then at Beth-lehem.

17 And David longed, and said, Oh that one would give me drink of the water of the well of Beth-lehem, that is at the gate!

18 And the three brake through the host of the Philistines, and drew water out of the well of Beth-lehem, that was by the gate, and took it, and brought it to David: but David would not drink of it, but poured it out to the LORD,

19 And said, My God forbid it me, that I should do this thing: shall I drink the blood of these men that have put their lives in jeopardy? for with the jeopardy of their lives they brought it: therefore he would not drink it. These things did these three mightiest.

20 ¶ And Abishai the brother of Joab, he was chief of the three: for lifting up his spear against three hundred, he slew them, and had a name among the three.

21 Of the three, he was more honourable than the two; for he was their captain: howbeit, he attained not to the first three.

22 Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, the son of a valiant man of Kabzeel, who had done many acts; he slew two lion-like men of Moab: also he went down and slew a lion in a pit in a snowy day.

23 And he slew an Egyptian, a man of great stature, five cubits high; and in the Egyptian's hand was a spear like a weaver's beam; and he went down to him with a staff, and plucked the spear out of the Egyptian's hand, and slew him with his own spear.

24 These things did Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and had a name among the three mighties.

25 Behold, he was honourable among the thirty, but attained not to the first three: and David set him over his guard.

26 ¶ Also the valiant men of the armies were Asahel the brother of Joab, Elhanan the son of Dodo of Bethlehem,

28 Ira the son of Ikkesh the Tekoite, Abiezer the Antothite,

NOTES.

CHAP. XII. V. 1, 2. The sacred writer here goes back in the history, to the times which preceded the death of Saul, and records some particulars not mentioned in the books of Samuel, respecting David's advancement to the throne. Several considerable persons resorted to him at Ziklag, (Marg. Ref.) and either joined his small troop, or assured him of assistance when it became necessary.—Some of these were Benjamites, who were either induced through a firm belief of the word of God by Samuel respecting him, or by indignation at the base treatment which David met with from Saul, to the disgrace of their tribe; or because they perceived that the Lord was departed from Saul, and was with David of a truth. The hand of God was, however, very conspicuous, in raising him up friends from this tribe, whence he might have expected the most determined opposition.—Use both, &c. (Notes, Judg. iii. 15. xx. 16.)

V. 4. Perhaps Saul had conferred some honourable distinction on thirty of his most valiant captains; (as David afterwards did on the same number of

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When the time arrives for the performance of God's word, those persons who before were most averse to the things predicted, will concur to accomplish them.—Kings are not advanced for their own aggrandizement or self-indulgence; but that they should, with activity and vigour, provide for the defence and welfare of the nations over which they reign.—The desire of applause and pre-eminence seems to be the highest motive, of which carnal men are capable: but they who are born from above, are actuated by purer and nobler principles. Yet, in seeking the glory of God and the good of man, by endeavouring to advance the kingdom of Jesus the Lord's anointed; they most effectually secure their honour and exaltation.—The kingdom and glory of Christ will surely wax greater and greater, the Lord of hosts being with him, till all his enemies are put under his feet, and all his friends placed with him upon his throne. Thus, the way to be truly great is to be really useful; and to give the use and glory of all our talents and services to the Lord: and if we be, at length, preserved from the destruction of the wicked, we shall perceive that the Lord hath saved us with a great deliverance. May he teach us to repress all our earthly desires, to govern our appetites, to acknowledge candidly our mistakes, and completely to rectify them, when discovered; and to be gentle and tender to others, and only severe against our own sins. Attached to the

17 And David went out to meet them, and answered and said unto them, ^{If ye be come peaceably unto help me, mine heart shall be knit unto you: but if ye be come to betray me to mine enemies, seeing there is no wrong in mine hands, the God of our fathers look thereon, and rebuke it.}

18 Then the Spirit come upon Amasai, who was chief of the captains, and he said, ^{Thine are we, David, and on thy side, thou son of Jesse: peace, peace be unto thee, and peace be to thine helpers; for thy God helpeth thee.} Then David received them, and made them captains of the band.

19 And there fell some of Manasseh to David, ^{when he came with the Philistines against Saul to battle; but they helped them not: for the lords of the Philistines, upon advisement, sent him away, saying, He will fall to his master Saul to the jeopardy of our heads.}

20 As he went to Ziklag, there fell to him of Manasseh, Adnah, and Jozabad, and Jediael, and Michael, and Jozabad, and Elihu, and Zilthai, captains of the thousands that were of Manasseh.

21 And they helped David against the band of the rovers: for they were all mighty men of valour, and were captains in the host.

22 For at that time, day by day, there came to David to help him, until it was a great host, like the host of God.

23 ¶ And these are the numbers of the bands that were ready armed to the war, and came to David to Hebron, to turn the kingdom of Saul to him, according to the word of the LORD.

24 The children of Judah, that bare shield and spear, were six thousand and eight hundred, ready armed to the war.

25 Of the children of Simeon, mighty men of valour for the war, seven thousand and one hundred.

26 Of the children of Levi four thousand and six hundred.

27 And Jehoiada was the leader of the Aaronites, and with him were three thousand and seven hundred.

28 And Zadok, a young man mighty of valour, and of his father's house twenty and two captains.

29 And of the children of Benjamin, the kindred of Saul, three thousand: for hitherto the greatest part of them had kept the ward of the house of Saul.

30 And of the children of Ephraim, twenty thousand and eight hundred, mighty men of valour, famous throughout the house of their fathers.

31 And of the half-tribe of Manasseh eighteen thousand, which were expressed by name, to come and make David king.

32 And of the children of Issachar, which were men that had understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do; the heads of them were two hundred, and all their brethren were at their commandment.

33 Of Zebulun, such as went forth to battle, expert in war, with all instruments of war, fifty thousand, which could keep rank: they were not of double heart.

34 And of Naphtali a thousand captains, and with them, with shield and spear, thirty and seven thousand.

35 And of the Danites, expert in war, twenty and eight thousand and six hundred.

36 And of Ashur, such as went forth to battle, expert in war, forty thousand.

37 And on the other side of Jordan, of the Reubenites, and the Gadites, and of the half-tribe of Manasseh, with all manner of instruments of war for the battle, an hundred and twenty thousand.

38 All these men of war that could keep rank, came with a perfect heart to Hebron, to make David king over all Israel: and all the rest also of Israel were of one heart to make David king.

his: and Ismaiah was placed over this illustrious company. For Ahiezer (3) seems to have been the chief of those who came to David at this time.—I suppose, there were thirty Benjamites came over to David at one time, and this was their leader.' (Bp. Patrick.)

V. 8. Into the hold, &c. Either to Ziklag, or to some of those natural fortresses in which David secured himself, before he went into the land of the Philistines. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 14. Either these persons had the command, some over a hundred men, and others over a thousand, before they came to David; or he preferred them afterwards, in consideration of their services; or the passage may be understood according to the marginal reading.

V. 15. The lot of Gad was to the east of Jordan: and it is probable, that these men crossed the river towards the west, or into the land of Canaan, properly so called. (Notes, Num. xxxii.) It seems, also, that some great emergency required their immediate interposition; but it is not stated what enemies they opposed.—Perhaps, during some part of Saul's reign, the Philistines, and other tribes, made incursions into the land of Israel; and these resolute Gadites hastened to assist their brethren. Or, perhaps, they were coming to join David, in his extreme danger; and, being opposed by Saul's adherents, they put them to flight, and pursued them in every direction. (8.)

V. 16—18. David had experienced much treachery even from those of his own tribe, and was therefore put on his guard: but he very frankly avowed his suspicions, and appealed to the consciences of those concerned. If they came peaceably to assist him, he would cordially unite with them; and the time would come, when he should be able to recompense them; but, as he was conscious he had not injured either Saul or his country, he reminded them, that if they came to betray him, the God of their fathers would surely avenge his cause upon them. Then Amasai, their leader, animated by a special impulse of the Spirit of God, answered him in the name of all the rest. He declared, that they were entirely attached to his person and interest; and cordially desired the prosperity of him, and all who helped him; not only as his cause was just, but as they were persuaded that it was the cause of God, and would prevail; and they desired to share the conflicts and the successes of David and his friends.—It is not certain whether Amasai was, or was not, the same with Amasa, elsewhere mentioned. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 19. (Notes, 1 Sam. xxix. 2—6.)

V. 20, 21. These captains of Manasseh seem to have met David, as he was returning from the army of the Philistines to Ziklag. It is probable that they did not bring their companies with them; yet they both assured him of future assistance, and very seasonably helped him against the Amalekites, who had spoiled Ziklag. (Notes, 1 Sam. xxx.)

V. 22. Such numbers resorted to David, after Saul's defeat and death, and they were so loyally attached to David, so united with each other, and so powerfully illustrious and valiant, that they resembled "the host of God," that is, his legions of angels. Some consider it merely as a Hebraism for a very great army.

V. 23—40. Some learned men understood this passage, or at least a part of it, as relating to the time when David was made king over Judah, on his first coming to Hebron; but it seems entirely to refer to his being made king over all Israel, after the death of Ish-bosheth. (Notes, 2 Sam. ii. 1—4. v. 1—3.)— 39 And there they were with David three days, ^eeating and drinking: for their brethren had prepared for them.

40 Moreover, they that were nigh them, even unto Issachar, and Zebulun, and Naphtali, brought ^fbread on asses, and on camels, and on mules, and on oxen; and meat, ^gmeal, ^hcakes of figs, and bunches of raisins, and wine, and oil, and oxen, and sheep abundantly, for ⁱthere was joy in Israel.

CHAP. XIII.

David, with great solemnity, fetches the ark from Kirjath-jearim, 1—8. Uzza is smitten, David is disconcerted, and the ark is left at the house of Obed-edom, 9—14.

AND David ^aconsulted with the captains of thousands and hundreds, and with every leader.

2 And David said unto all the congregation of Israel, ^bIf it seem good unto you, and that it be of the LORD our God, let us ^csend abroad unto our brethren every where, that are ^dleft in all the land of Israel, and with them also to ^ethe priests and Levites which are in ^ftheir cities and suburbs, that they may gather themselves unto us:

3 And let us ^gbring again ^hthe ark of our God to us; for ⁱwe enquired not at it in the days of Saul.

4 And the congregation said that they would do so; for ^athe thing was right in the eyes of all the people.

5 So ^bDavid gathered all Israel together, from ^cShihor of Egypt even unto the entering of ^dHemath, to bring the ark of God from ^eKirjath-jearim.

At that time vast numbers came to David from each of the tribes of Israel; but in different proportions, according to the degree of the cordiality and zeal of each tribe. It is probable, that so small a number of Judah was present, in order that David's own tribe, over which he had now reigned seven years, might not appear to impose a king on their brethren. There was a considerable number of Levites assembled, but not at all in proportion to the multitude of the priests, the descendants of Aaron, who appeared on this occasion under a leader, perhaps appointed by the high priest; whilst Zadok, who was afterwards highpriest, being now a young man, headed a company of chief men, perhaps of the line of Eleazar. So greatly had that family increased, notwithstanding the slaughter which Saul had not long before made of them! (Notes, 1 Sam. xx. 6—19.)—The Benjamites in general had favoured the house of Saul, and numbers of them still waited for an opportunity of reviving the claim of that family, in some of its branches: for so the latter part of the twenty-ninth verse may be interpreted.—The leaders of Issachar were intelligent men, who understood the signs of the times; and perceived that it was both the duty and political interest of Israel to advance David to the throne; and, having great authority in their tribe, they induced them to an unanimous concurrence in this measure; though they do not seem to have brought them to Hebron. Besides the numbers, who doubtless on various accounts were kept away, though cordially attached to David, there were three hundred and fifty thousand armed men, all heartily devoted to his service; who placed him upon the throne of Israel, with every expression of joy and affection.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—18. Earthly princes in general honour peculiarly such persons as have faithfully adhered to them in seasons of difficulty and danger; and, in like manner, Jesus Christ will confer peculiar honour upon those who embrace and adhere to his gospel in times of persecution and distress; who deny themselves, renounce their worldly interests, break through difficulties, and bear the cross for his sake, and after his example.—Courage, strength, agility, ingenuity, or superior mental endowments, are valuable to the possessors, and to the community, only when, being considered as talents committed to them by the great Lord of all, they are conscientiously improved in promoting the glory of God, and the welfare of mankind; for, when misused or neglected, they prove occasions of increasing condemnation.—Long experience of the deceitfulness of mankind will teach caution to every reflecting person; but we should be afraid of growing unreasonably suspicious: and if we have a clear conscience, and use moderate precautions, we may trust in God to defend us from the effects of secret treachery, as well as of open violence; while we should readily forgive former injuries, and unite with those who profess a disposition to be at peace with us, and to help us. But, when we cannot but suspect men's intentions in courting our friendship, it is best, in some cases, frankly to remonstrate with them as in the sight of God. This may sometimes intimidate the insincere, and give the upright an opportunity of clearing up their characters; whilst suspicions, harboured in secret, or only whispered among friends, are often injurious to the suspected person, and always troublesome to ourselves. Integrity and affection will frequently, when the case requires it, dictate such frank, unserved, and energetic language, as to afford full satisfaction; and then cordial union in promoting one common cause, succeeds jealousies, distance, and the debility of distrust.—Peace or victory, prosperity and felicity, are ensured to those whom God helpeth, and to all who concur with them. If, under the influence of his Spirit, we, on that account, desire to have our lot among them, and declare on their side, and if we uprightly embrace the cause of Christ, his heart will be knit unto us, and he will receive and advance us.

V. 19—40. The cause of our King appears to a carnal eye weak and obscure, and his subjects have been hitherto comparatively few; but his kingdom and glory will, ere long, rapidly advance, and his host become, like “the host of God,” innumerable and invincible.—The advancement of wise and good men to authority, is justly considered as a cause of great and general joy; and joy naturally enlarges the heart in cheerful liberality. Thus the Saviour's exaltation to the throne of glory, filled the hearts of his people with gladness: nay, the sinner's willing submission to him, ushers in a day of joy and gladness, in which his brethren share, and to which they contribute. But, what a joyful time will that be, “when all kings shall fall down before him, all nations shall serve him!” Every individual in the innumerable throng will participate and add to the joy of all the rest; and nothing short of the perfect purity and harmony of heaven, can give us a higher idea of true happiness. Meanwhile, happy are they “who have understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do;” who wisely perceive it to be their duty and interest to submit to, and trust in Jesus Christ, the Son of David: who renounce all inconsistent connexions, pursuits, and employments, for his sake; and unreservedly employ all their influence and ability to promote his cause, from love to him and to their brethren; whose love also abounds in knowledge and in all judgment, so that their beneficent endeavours are directed by heavenly wisdom, through an acquaintance with the word of God, and a maturity of experience and observation; and they consequently know how to attempt every thing in that manner, and at those seasons, which are suited to give it the greatest effect. This is to unite “the wisdom of the serpent with the harmlessness of the dove;” and if any man lack this wisdom, let him ask it of God, who giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him.”

NOTES.

CHAP. XIII. 1—4. It is probable, that David consulted with his principal friends and officers, about bringing back the ark, immediately after he had got possession of mount Zion, and had fixed his residence there; yet it appears from comparing the different parts of the narrative, that he did not accomplish the design till some time after, being retarded by the incursions of the Philistines, and by other hinderances. (Notes, 2 Sam. v. vi.)—He did not judge it expedient to act merely by authority in so important a concern; but by consulting his friends, he ensured their ready concurrence, and that of their several connexions, and also of the priests and Levites.—During Saul's reign, or the latter part of it at least, the ark had been neglected; and even David had enquired of God by the high priest at a distance from it; (Notes, 1 Sam. xxiii. 2—6. 9—13. xxx. 7. 2 Sam. ii. 1—3.) while Saul concerned himself very little in any way about religion. Thus the regular way of enquiring the will of God by the high priest, with the breastplate of judgment, before the ark in the sanctuary, had been long neglected.

V. 5—14. (Notes, 2 Sam. vi. 1—11. Marg. Ref.)

CHAP. XIV.

Hiram sends timber and buildurs to build David a house, 1. He prospers in his kingdom, takes more wives, and has several children, 2, 3. The names of his sons, 4-7. He gains two signal victories over the Philistines, 8-17.

NOW Hiram king of Tyre sent messengers to David, and timber of cedars, with masons and carpenters, to build him an house.

2 ¶ And David perceived that the LORD had confirmed him king over Israel, for his kingdom was lifted up on high, because of his people Israel.

3 ¶ And David took more wives at Jerusalem: and David begat more sons and daughters.

4 Now these are the names of his children which he had in Jerusalem, Shammua, and Shobab, Nathan, and Solomon,

5 And Ithar, and Elishua, and Elpalet,

6 And Nogah, and Nepheg, and Japhia,

7 And Elishama, and Beeliada, and Eliphalet,

8 ¶ And when the Philistines heard that David was anointed king over all Israel, all the Philistines went up to seek David. And David heard of it, and went out against them.

9 And the Philistines came and spread themselves in the valley of Rephaim.

10 And David enquired of God, saying, Shall I go up against the Philistines? and wilt thou deliver them into mine hand? And the LORD said unto him, Go up; for I will deliver them into thine hand.

11 So they came up to Baal-perazim; and David smote them there. Then David said, God hath broken in upon mine enemies by mine hand like the breaking forth of waters: therefore they called the name of that place Baal-perazim.

12 And when they had left their gods there, David gave a commandment, and they were burned with fire.

13 And the Philistines yet again spread themselves abroad in the valley.

14 Therefore David enquired again of God; and God said unto him, Go not up after them: turn away from them, and come upon them over against the mulberry-trees.

15 And it shall be, when thou shalt hear a sound of going in the tops of the mulberry-trees, that thou shalt go out to battle: for God is gone forth before thee to smite the host of the Philistines.

CHAP. XV.

David prepares a place for the ark, and gives orders to the priests and Levites about bringing it from the house of Obad-edom, 1-24. He and all the chiefs of Israel attend its removal, with sacrifices and songs of praise, 25-28. Michal despises David for dancing before the ark, 29.

AND David made him houses in the city of David, and prepared a place for the ark of God, and pitched for it a tent.

2 Then David said, None ought to carry the ark of God but the Levites: for them hath the LORD chosen to carry the ark of God, and to minister unto him for ever.

3 And David gathered all Israel together to Jerusalem, to bring up the ark of the LORD unto his place, which he had prepared for it.

4 And David assembled the children of Aaron, and the Levites:

5 Of the sons of Kohath; Uriel the chief, and his brethren an hundred and twenty.

6 Of the sons of Merari; Asaiah the chief, and his brethren two hundred and twenty:

7 Of the sons of Gershom; Joel the chief, and his brethren an hundred and thirty:

8 Of the sons of Elizaphan; Shemaiah the chief, and his brethren two hundred:

9 Of the sons of Hebron; Eliel the chief, and his brethren fourscore:

10 Of the sons of Uzziel; Amminadab the chief, and his brethren an hundred and twelve.

11 And David called for Zadok and Abiathar the priests, and for the Levites, for Uriel, Asaiah, and Joel, Shemaiah, and Eliel, and Amminadab,

12 And said unto them, Ye are the chief of the fathers of the Levites: sanctify yourselves, both ye and your brethren, that ye may bring up the ark of to them in the second book of Samuel; and before David attempted to bring the ark to mount Zion.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The Lord hath so arranged matters in his providence, that all have reciprocally need of each other's assistance: Thus men learn to feel their own insufficiency, and to unite in society for the common benefit. But, all our advantages are from God, by whatever means or instruments they are derived to us; and we should recollect, that we possess them for the good of others, and especially for the benefit of his people.—To repress that disposition to carnal security and self-indulgence, which gathers strength by prosperity, we must expect successive conflicts and troubles. But, if we enquire of the Lord in all our difficulties, and trust in him simply; if we use the appointed means with diligence, and obey his orders without reserve; if we break every league with sin, give no quarter to our lusts, and neither spare our own idols, nor covet those of others; and if we be disposed to give all the glory to the Lord; we shall not only be conquerors, but, every conflict will increase our felicity, and add lustre to our eternal triumphs. Yet, all the praise and honour will ultimately be ascribed to the Saviour: his kingdom is confirmed, and made very high, for the benefit of all his believing people: may his fame go forth into all lands; and may all nations fear his indignation, trust his mercy, submit to his authority, and unite in glorifying his name!

NOTES.

CHAP. XV. V. 1. As David had many wives and children, he had occasion to build several houses for them. (iii. 1-9. 2 Sam. xiii. 7. 20. 23. xiv. 24.)—Some think that the tabernacle made by Moses was become ruinous from time and neglect. About four hundred and fifty years had passed since it was erected. (Notes, xvi. 37-43. 1 Kings vi. 1. viii. 4.)

V. 2, 3. (Marg. Ref. Note, 2 Sam. vi. 12, 13.)

V. 4-11. The priests and Levites had been before sent to, (xiii. 2;) but, it is probable, that only a few of them attended: at least, at this time greater numbers were collected, and they were arranged with more exact regularity, (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-7. When we set out in life, or obtain any temporal advancement, we should first enquire, how we may honour God and do good, and enjoy the Divine blessing in our several situations, and in the use of our possessions! Princes especially ought to devise the most useful measures they can to promote true religion by their example and authority, that they may have the Lord nigh unto them in all they undertake. This can only be done by consulting with others, and engaging them to concur in measures of acknowledged utility, and evidently consistent with the word of God; and by reminding, encouraging, and charging ministers to attend to their important duties in their several situations, that good examples and good instructions may abound throughout the land. When such things, being mildly proposed, seem good to the leading men, we may hope that they are from the Lord, and expect that many other persons, being called upon, will voluntarily assist; and that thus the gospel will excite general attention, without any of the antichristian weapons of compulsion.—In rectifying abuses, it is generally best to shun personal reflections and severe accusations: they appear malevolent, and excite opposition. Suffice it to shew, that things needful have been neglected, and that it is proper for us to attend to them; and, in public transgressions, humility will teach a man to consider himself as, in some measure, guilty, and more readily to condemn himself than others.—Even good men, in doing their duty, are liable to mistakes, and to act in an improper spirit; and rebukes, though merited and needed, often excite murmurs, discouragements, and hard thoughts of God. May we, then, with redoubled diligence, seek to become acquainted with the whole word of God, and to make it “the lantern of our paths;” may we walk humbly and circumspectly, avoid rashness and presumption, rejoice in our privileges with trembling, be patient under Divine rebukes, persevere in well-doing without discouragement, and seek the forgiveness and acceptance of every service, from the mercy of God in Christ Jesus! Thus will the gospel, which is to many “the savour of death,” become to us “the savour of life,” and the source of all blessings in time and to eternity.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIV. V. 1-16. (Notes, iii. 1-9. 2 Sam. v. 11-25.) The events recorded in this chapter are supposed to have taken place in the order assigned the LORD God of Israel unto the place that I have prepared for it.

13 For because "ye did it not at the first, "the LORD our God made a breach upon us, "for that we sought him not after the due order.

14 So the priests and the Levites "sanctified themselves, to bring up the ark of the LORD God of Israel.

15 And the children of the Levites "bare the ark of God upon their shoulders with the staves thereon, as Moses commanded, according to the word of the LORD.

16 And "David spake to the "chief of the Levites to appoint their brethren to be "the singers with instruments of music, psalteries, and harps, and cymbals, sounding, by "lifting up the voice with joy.

17 So the Levites appointed "Heman the son of Joel; and of his brethren, "Asaph the son of Berechiah; and of the sons of Merari their brethren, "Ethan the son of Kushaiah;

18 And with them their brethren of "the second degree, "Zechariah, Ben, and "Jaaziel, and Shemiramoth, and Jehiel, and Unni, Eliab, and Benaiah, and Maaseiah, and Mattithiah, and Elipheleh, and Mikneiah, and Obed-edom, and Jeiel, the porters.

19 So the singers, Heman, Asaph, and Ethan, were appointed to sound with "cymbals of brass;

20 And Zechariah, and "Aziel, and Shemiramoth, and Jehiel, and Unni, and Eliab, and Maaseiah, and Benaiah, with psalteries on "Alamoth;

21 And "Mattithiah; and Elipheleh, and Mikneiah, and Obed-edom, and Jeiel, and Azariah, with "harps on the "Sheminith to excel.

22 And Chenaniah, chief of the Levites, was "for "song: "he instructed about the song, because he was skilful.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The most zealous and useful reformers have, in all ages, been left to make mistakes, which very inferior persons could easily discern; and especially, before their judgments were matured by experience and observation. Satan avails himself of these errors, to prejudice the minds of men against their whole character and work: and the artifice readily succeeds with those, who are in quest of some specious pretence, for despising and opposing the humbling truths, and the holy service, of God. But, we should hence infer, that nothing perfect can be expected from mere men; and we should neither be offended at the miscarriages blended with laudable and useful endeavours; nor yet vindicate or adopt every sentiment and practice, which have been sanctioned by respectable and eminent men: but, we should compare all, as well as we can, with the word of God; and by that criterion distinguish between the precious and the vile. Wise and good men, however, will profit by rebukes; having discovered, they will honestly confess, their mistakes, and acknowledge that they "did not seek the LORD after the due order;" and, upon recollection, they will both justify him in his sharpest corrections, and proceed with their work with greater circumspection. It indeed seems one of the greatest attainments of human nature, to search out, confess, rectify, and profit by, our own mistakes and miscarriages.—The Lord's choice of us, in every sense, implies our being chosen to services, as well as privileges: and plain and serious admonitions, from those who lead the way by a good example, and whose rank and character give weight and authority to their words, will often excite the remiss to diligence, and the ignorant and heedless to learn and attend to their duty. But, alas! pre-eminence is generally privileged with supineness and indulgence: and too often, examples of avarice, pride, and licentiousness, become infamously conspicuous, through the rank of those who set them; diffusing their baleful influence, like a destructive pestilence, among the subordinate members of the community. We have all, however, our proper place, work, and talent; every servant should know well his own business, and punctually execute it; and this cannot be done without attention to the Scriptures, and preparation of heart by the sanctification of the Spirit, vouchsafed in answer to our prayers.—Every thing we engage in, must be undertaken in dependence on the mercy and grace of God through the sacrifice of the Redeemer: and, as "it is of the LORD's mercy, that we are not consumed;" so, if we go successfully and comfortably through any service, we must remember that He hath helped us, and give him the glory; for without him we can do nothing. When God accepts our persons and our works, makes our hearts joyful in himself, and renders our services beneficial to his church; we may indeed expect, but need not regard, the scoffs and reproaches of unbelievers: and we must learn to bear them with patience, and to persevere in our compassionate prayers for those, who are thus enemies to their own souls by opposing the cause of God, which we are honoured to promote.

V. 12—14. It appears from David's language to the priests and Levites, that they had before neglected to "sanctify themselves," by carefully avoiding, or seeking to be cleansed from, all ceremonial pollutions; by abstraction from outward satisfactions; and by repentance, faith, prayer, and meditation. (Notes, Ex. xix. 10—15. 2 Chr. xxix. 5. xxx. 15.)—The ark had been long stationary, and they had, through negligence, forgotten how it ought to be removed; so that the king himself first discovered the error which had been committed, and pointed it out to them: and though he joined himself with them, as "not having sought the LORD after the due order," (xii. 9—11. (Notes, 2 Sam. vi. 3—11. 2 Chr. xxx. 18—20;)) yet it is plain that a large proportion of the blame belonged to the priests and Levites, especially to the chief persons among them. (Note, Mal. ii. 4—9.) It seems, however, that they were at this time made sensible of their guilt and danger; and very seriously and reverentially prepared for the solemn service.

V. 15. The Levites of the family of Kohath were appointed to carry the ark, and the priests were of that family; so that, on some occasions the priests, and on others the ordinary Levites descended from Kohath, performed this service. (Notes, Josh. iii. 3, 4. 1 Kings viii. 3.)

V. 16. David, as a prophet, was appointed to order the several particulars concerning the solemn worship at the sanctuary, especially in respect of psalmody and music: and he seems first to have begun this arrangement when he removed the ark, though he afterwards more entirely completed it. (Marg. Ref. Notes, xvi. 4—6. 37—43. xxv. 2 Chr. xxix. 26—28.)

V. 17—19. (Note, vi. 33. Marg. Ref.)—Ben, and Jaaziel. (18.) The Septuagint read this, "The son of Jahaziel."

V. 20, 21. Alamoth and Sheminith are musical terms, which either signify treble and bass, or some particular tunes, or the construction of the instruments to which the compositions were adapted. (Notes, Ps. vi. title, xlv. title.)

V. 22. Chenaniah seems to have been the precentor, and the principal instructor of all the company in singing: though Heman, Asaph, and Ethan had the chief authority over the singers and musicians of the families of Levites. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 23, 24. Perhaps Berechiah and Elkanah were stationed on mount Zion, to open the doors of the tent, when the ark approached to it; and when the singers called on them for admission. (Note, Ps. xxiv. 7—10.) And Obed-edom and Jehiah were afterwards appointed stately to guard the door of the tent, that none might enter, but according to the law.—The blowing of the trumpets was exclusively the office of the priests.

V. 26. The Levites offered these sacrifices on their own account, besides those which David offered. (2 Sam. vi. 13.) Thus they acknowledged the unmerited goodness of God, in enabling them with safety to perform the service allotted them; probably being conscious, that Uzziah had been smitten, as much through their fault as for his own.—Some think that they rested seven times, and offered a bullock and a ram each time. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 27—29. (Notes, 2 Sam. vi. 12—22.)

2 And when David had made an end of offering the burnt-offerings, and the peace-offerings, he blessed the people in the name of the LORD.

3 And he dealt to every one of Israel, both man and woman, to every one a loaf of bread, and a good piece of flesh, and a flagon of wine.

4 And he appointed certain of the Levites to minister before the ark of the LORD, and to record, and to thank and praise the LORD God of Israel;

5 Asaph the chief, and next to him Zechariah, Jeiel, and Shemiramoth, and Jehiel, and Mattithiah, and Eliab, and Benaiah, and Obed-edom: and Jeiel with psalteries and with harps; but Asaph made a sound with cymbals.

6 Benaiah also and Jahaziel the priests, with trumpets continually before the ark of the covenant of God.

7 Then on that day David delivered first this psalm to thank the LORD, into the hand of Asaph and his brethren.

8 Give thanks unto the LORD, call upon his name, make known his deeds among the people.

9 Sing unto him, sing psalms unto him, talk ye of all his wondrous works.

10 Glory ye in his holy name: let the heart of them rejoice that seek the LORD.

11 Seek the LORD and his strength, seek his face continually.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVI. V. 1-3. (Notes, 2 Sam. vi. 17-19.)

V. 4-6. These Levites were appointed "to record," or to put the people in remembrance of the wonderful works of God for Israel, as well as to thank him and praise his name. (Note, Is. lxii. 6, 7.) Doubtless, David acted as a prophet in regulating this part of divine worship; and his example will not justify uninspired men, in introducing human inventions into the worship of God, and imposing them by their own authority; for when Hezekiah made similar arrangements, he only enforced what David had appointed. (2 Chr. xxix. 26-28.)—The use of instrumental music in the worship of God was evidently prior to the ceremonial law; and therefore could form no part of it, or be abrogated with it: and though it is not required in the New Testament, yet it seems no way inconsistent with it, provided it be suited to the solemnity and seriousness of our religious rejoicing, and so regulated as really to assist the exercise of devout affections. The sad abuse of making, what is called, sacred music, a matter of mere carnal diversion, with some other subordinate evils of the same kind, form the strongest arguments against it. (Note, Ex. xv. 1.)—The trumpets alone were appointed in the law, and had a typical meaning. (Note, Num. x. 2-10, P. O.)

V. 7. The psalm, which was sung on this solemn occasion, is composed of extracts from several psalms. (Marg. Ref.)—Probably David had these by him, with many others, for his own private use; and he composed from them a song of praise and thanksgiving, to record the mercies of the Lord, suited to the solemnity. But afterwards he gave the other psalms also, one after another, into the hands of the chief singers, for the benefit of the people who attended the worship performed before the ark.

V. 8, 9. In these verses the inspired and enraptured psalmist excited the people, and taught them to animate each other, in blessing the God of Israel for all his mercies, and in celebrating his glorious perfections, which are worthy to be known, admired, and extolled; and which render him the meet object of the universal and entire love, worship, confidence, and obedience of all rational creatures. He also exhorted them to meditate, and converse frequently, on the wonderful works of JEHOVAH, and to proclaim them before others; to call on him in all their wants and dangers; and by every means to adore and praise him. (Notes, Ps. xvi. 1-3, ev. 1, 2. Is. xii. 4-6.)

V. 10. To "glory in God," is to value our relation to him, as our honour and privilege, far above all other distinctions; to make that alone the ground of our confidence and exultation: to account ourselves in this, more happy, more honoured, and more favoured, than any other people. To "glory in his holy name," is to rejoice and exult in his immutable wisdom, justice, truth, and love. (Notes, Is. xlv. 23-25. Jer. i. 23, 24. 1 Cor. i. 26-31. Phil. iii. 1-7.) And even they, who are only beginning to seek the Lord, may rejoice that he is upon a mercy-seat, ready to receive their submissions, to hear their prayers, to forgive their sins, to supply their wants, and to save their souls. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 11. "Seeking the Lord" implies an earnest and diligent endeavour to obtain the knowledge and favour of God, according to the revelation made of him in his word; the renewal of the soul to holiness by his grace, the safety to be enjoyed under his omnipotent protection, and the comfort and support of his Spirit under all trials and temptations, till his strength hath perfected the work of his mercy, in the full salvation of both body and soul; when present glimpses of his glory, and experience of his love, shall be perfected, by behold-

12 Remember his marvellous works that he hath done, his wonders, and the judgments of his mouth; 13 O ye seed of Israel, his servant, ye children of Jacob, his chosen ones.

14 He is the LORD our God; his judgments are in all the earth.

15 Be ye mindful always of his covenant; the word which he commanded to a thousand generations;

16 Even of the covenant which he made with Abraham, and of his oath unto Isaac;

17 And hath confirmed the same to Jacob for a law, and to Israel for an everlasting covenant,

18 Saying, Unto thee will I give the land of Canaan, the lot of your inheritance;

19 When ye were but few, even a few, and strangers in it.

20 And when they went from nation to nation, and from one kingdom to another people;

21 He suffered no man to do them wrong; yea, he reproveth kings for their sakes, 22 Saying, Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm.

23 Sing unto the LORD, all the earth; shew forth, from day to day, his salvation.

24 Declare his glory among the heathen; his marvellous works among all nations.

25 For great is the LORD, and greatly to be praised: he also is to be feared above all gods.

ing the full display of that glory, and enjoying the full effects of that love, in heaven for ever. (Notes, Ps. xiv. 2, 3. xxvii. 8, 9. Is. lv. 6, 7. Matt. vi. 33, 34, vii. 7-11.)—The gracious aid and protection of JEHOVAH were ensured to Israel, when they sought him as dwelling between the cherubim above the ark; therefore the ark itself is called "his strength;" and this implies, that we must "seek the LORD," through Christ, and according to the gospel. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 12, 13. "The judgments of his mouth," may either mean the righteous laws and statutes given to Israel, or the just vengeance which God denounced and executed on his enemies, in Egypt, in the wilderness, and in Canaan. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 14. Israel, as the peculiar people of JEHOVAH, were bound to worship and obey him; and ought to glory and rejoice in him. Indeed, his word and his works, both of mercy and vengeance, which had become known and renowned among the nations far and wide, suggested powerful motives, both of warning and encouragement, to his professed servants. He also governs the whole earth in justice and in judgment: and is continually executing, in his providence, deserved punishment upon offending nations and individuals. His judgments were known in all the earth, in most striking manner, when Christianity was established in the world; while the nation of the Jews, and the idolatrous Gentiles, who opposed the cause of Christ, were exposed to the most terrible and durable calamities.

V. 15-19. (Note, Ps. cv. 8.) The covenant of JEHOVAH with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, engaged to their posterity the inheritance of Canaan. This was absolute, as a law which required prompt obedience. Their descendants must inherit the land; but, which of their generations, or for how long a time that should be, depended on other circumstances, which were declared by the Sinai covenant. (Notes, Gen. xvii. 1-12. Ex. xix. 5. 6-8. Jer. xxxi. 31-34. Gal. iii. 15-18. Heb. vi. 16-18. viii. 7-13.)—A thousand generations is a large definite number taken for an indefinite one; and this language was suited to lead the thoughts of pious Israelites, to the eternal inheritance typified by Canaan. The oath, by which the Lord condescended to ratify this engagement, shewed the immutability of his counsel, and represented the covenant of grace, as irreversibly confirmed with every true believer.—David called upon the people to remember this covenant; that, considering from how small beginnings, through how many and formidable difficulties, and after how many delays, the Lord's engagement had been fulfilled; they might be animated to praise him, encouraged to trust him, and induced to cleave to and obey him.

V. 20-22. The patriarchs were the Lord's anointed, as they were believers, prophets, types, and ancestors of Christ; in respect of the Lord's choice of them, his grace bestowed on them, and their spiritual consecration to his service; though they were not externally anointed with oil, that we read of. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 1 John ii. 20-29.)

V. 23, 24. Having taken a suitable passage from one psalm, to stir up the congregation to celebrate the praises of God, for his special mercies to Israel; David introduces another psalm, and adds a solemn call to all the inhabitants of the earth to join in his praises, as the only living and true God, the Creator and Judge of the world, and the God of salvation; and from day to day to make known his glory and salvation still more widely. (Notes, Ps. xvi. 1-3. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 25, 26. The power and majesty, the authority and eternity, the omniscience, omnipresence, and unchangeableness of God, are his greatness: as his justice,

26 For ^call the gods of the people are idols: but ^dthe LORD made the heavens.

27 ^eGlory and honour are in his presence; ^fstrength and gladness are in his ^eplace.

28 ^hGive unto the LORD, ⁱye kindreds of the people, give unto the LORD ^jglory and strength.

29 Give unto the LORD ^kthe glory due unto his name: ^lbring an offering, and ^mcome before him: worship the LORD in ⁿthe beauty of holiness.

30 Fear ^obefore him, all the earth: the world also shall be ^pstable, that it be not moved.

31 Let ^athe heavens be glad, and ¹let the earth rejoice: and let men say among the nations, ^aThe LORD reigneth.

32 Let the sea roar, and the fulness thereof: let the fields rejoice, and all that is therein.

33 Then shall ²the trees of the wood sing out at the presence of the LORD, ³because he cometh to judge the earth.

34 O ²give thanks unto the LORD; for he is good; for his mercy endureth for ever.

35 And say ye, "Save us, O God of our salvation, and gather us together, and deliver us from the heathen, ^bthat we may give thanks to thy holy name, and ^cglory in thy praise.

wisdom, truth, goodness, and mercy, form his holiness. In both respects he is altogether glorious, and infinitely exceeds the most exalted praises, and even the comprehension of the noblest of all created intelligences. Thus he is the sole object of fear, and reverential worship, and adoring love; while all others, to whom divine worship ever was rendered, are either senseless stocks, fallen angels, or mere creatures, who cannot help their worshippers, or punish their despisers. (Notes, Ps. xli. 4, 5. Jer. x. 6—8. 11—15. Rev. xv. 1—4.)

V. 27. (Ps. xcvi. 6.) Wherever the Lord displays his presence by his works, he shews us the glory and honour of his perfections : but, in heaven, where his presence is manifested, in a manner to us inconceivable and ineffable, his glory and honour beam forth upon the blessed inhabitants, so as to transform them fully into his holy image of light, purity, and felicity, and to be reflected back in their rapturous unceasing worship and service of him. This is, in a feeble way, imitated and emulated, “in his place,” his sanctuary, his church on earth. There his power and beauty are in a measure displayed ; and the true believer, beholding in Christ Jesus the glory of the Lord, “is changed into the same image, from glory to glory, by the Spirit of the Lord ;” and thus, is both made meet for the inheritance of the saints in light, and enjoys the earnest of it. (Notes, Ps. xxvii. 4—6. 1. 2. lxiii. 1. 4—2 Cor. iii. 17, 18.)

V. 28, 29. This is an exhortation to all who then heard, and all who now hear or read it, to "ascribe to ЖЕВОВАН" the tribute of praise and adoration, which he demands as his due; to allow that all glory belongs to him, and that the power resides in him, or is derived from him; to render to him that gratitude, love, and service, which he deserves from all, as their Creator and hourly benefactor. (Notes, Ps. xxix. 1, 2. xvi. 7—9.) This cannot be withheld without the basest ingratitude.—"All the kindreds of the earth" form but one family; and ought to unite in the service of their common Father. But, all had sinned, and fallen under condemnation: yet, through the Redeemer, who was promised from the beginning, all were invited to approach the Lord with their worship and oblations at his sanctuary. This may be called, "the beauty of holiness," from the especial presence of the Lord, dwelling above the ark between the cherubim, upon the mercy-seat, as Israel's God: as typifying the human nature of Jesus Christ; and representing the believer's heart, now become "an habitation of God through the Spirit." When, however, we approach the Father, upon a mercy-seat, through the sacrifice and mediation of the Son, and under the influences of the Holy Spirit; then, and then only, do we "worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness."

V. 30. Let all men fear the power, justice, and majesty of God: let them fear his wrath, and flee for refuge to his mercy; let them reverence his authority and excellency, and learn to worship and obey him. (Notes, Gen. xxii. 10—12, 1 Kings viii. 41—43.) If this were done, it would render the moral state of the world as stable and immovable, and keep every thing in as great order and regularity, as his creating and upholding word hath established the natural state of it: and to this the gospel is suited to bring all who embrace it. (Note, Ps. lxxv. 2. 3. xcvi. 10.)

V. 31. Wise, righteous, and good kings, and equitable laws, impartially administered, make prosperous nations; and all good subjects must rejoice in such a government: but traitors and criminals tremble on that very account. The Lord, who reigneth over all, is perfect in his character, his law, and his administration: this alone would be cause of universal joy, if all men were loyal and obedient, but it speaks terror to the sinner's conscience. Yet, as the Lord reigneth in Jesus Christ upon a throne of grace; even sinners, yea, the vilest, may rejoice, when, desirous of forgiveness and reconciliation, they are 36 ^aBlessed be the LORD God of Israel for ever and ever. And all the people ^esaid, Amen, and praised the LORD.

37 ¶ So he left there, ^fbefore the ark of the covenant of the LORD, Asaph and his brethren, to minister before the ark continually, ^gas every day's work required :

38 And ^hObed-edom, with their brethren, three-score and eight; Obed-edom also the son of ⁱJeduthun, and Hosah, to be porters:

39 And ^kZadok the priest, and his brethren the priests, ^lbefore the tabernacle of the LORD ^min the high place that was at Gibeon,

40 To ^{offer} burnt-offerings unto the LORD upon the altar of the burnt-offering continually, *morning and evening; and to do according to all that is written in the law of the LORD, which he commanded [Israel]:

41 And with them °Heman and Jeduthun, and the rest that were chosen, who were °expressed by name, °to give thanks to the LORD, because his mercy endureth for ever ;

42 And with them Heman and Jeduthun with trumpets and cymbals, for those that should make a sound, and with musical instruments of God. And the sons of Jeduthun were porters.

43 And 'all the people departed, every man to his house: and David returned "to bless his house.

made humbly willing to become his subjects: so that, men of all nations on earth are called on to join the gladness of the blessed inhabitants of heaven; and in exulting joy to proclaim, that "the LORD God omnipotent reigneth." (Notes. Ps. xcvi. 1. 2. xcix. 1. 2.)

V. 32, 33. All the parts of nature are here poetically addressed, by the royal prophet, to join the universal song of joy and praise; in their several ways, to welcome ГЕHOBAH as the Sovereign of the universe; and to wait the great decisive day, when he will come, as the Saviour of his people, to judge the world in righteousness. (Notes, Ps. xcvi. 11—13. xcvi. 7—9. Is. lv. 12, 13.) Perhaps, all the different ranks and descriptions of the human species, who have feared the Lord, and hoped in his mercy, and who will then unanimously rejoice in the consummation of their felicity, are here intended under figurative expressions. The first coming of Christ likewise, with the calling of the gentiles, and the surprising and most happy change effected by the gospel, in the moral and religious state of the world, as preparatory to his second coming, seems also to have been predicted.—Indeed, nothing but the plenteous goodness of God, the perpetuity and eternity of his mercy in Christ Jesus, can encourage a sinner to desire his appearing as a Judge! all therefore, but believers, must tremble at the thoughts of that solemn season, and will be driven to desperation when it shall arrive.

V. 34—36. (Notes, Ps. cxxxvii. 1. Jer. xxxiii. 11.) Many Israelites, even when David came to the throne, might be dispersed in other nations, by the frequent wars waged with their neighbours. And he prayed that they might be gathered from their dispersions, to join in this joyful worship. (Notes, Ps. xiv. 7. cvi. 47, 48.) Perhaps, the Spirit of God, who spake by the psalmist, intended the gathering of Israel from future and greater dispersions: and it may well be accommodated to the present state of that nation, and our hope of their future calling into the church, as well as to the collecting together of believers from all the nations of the earth, to bless and adore the God of Israel, in and through the Lord Jesus Christ.—We can scarcely enlarge our thoughts to conceive the effect, which these high praises of God, sung by so vast a multitude, with harmonious elevation of heart and voice, upon this joyful occasion, must have produced. It naturally leads our thoughts to the songs of the redeemed of the Lord in glory; and perhaps we are not, in this world, capable of more just and spiritual ideas of them, than are suggested by this subject, though we may be sure that they are unspeakably more sublime and refined. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 37—43. Abihzar was high priest at this time; and, it is probable, he resided at Jerusalem.—The stated worship before the ark consisted principally of psalmody and music, over which Asaph presided. But Zadok, of Eleazar's line, as next in authority under the high-priest, resided at Gibeon, where the tabernacle and the brazen altar still remained, (Note, 2 Sam. vi. 17.) and there, with the other priests, he took care that all the sacrifices prescribed by the law should be regularly offered.—Psalmody was constantly performed here also, under the direction of Heman and Jeduthun; and they had with them the sacred trumpets, which seem to have been kept by them, though used by none but the priests.—When David brought the ark from obscurity, he was directed to convey it to Jerusalem, because it was to be stationed there. As he intended immediately to build a temple for its reception, he did not remove the tabernacle of Moses thither; but prepared a temporary tent, perhaps formed in the same manner: and when he was not allowed to build the temple, he made no alteration, but attended to both separately all his days. It seems that these regulations were made and declared, before the people separated, and were continued from that very day. (Notes, xv. 4—6. 1 Kings iii. 4.)

CHAP. XVII.

David, purposing to build a temple, is encouraged by Nathan, 1, 2. The Lord afterwards, by Nathan, prohibits it; but with many encouraging promises, 3—15. David's prayer and thanksgiving, 16—27.

NOW it came to pass, as David sat in his house, that David said to Nathan the prophet, Lo, I dwell in an house of cedars, but the ark of the covenant of the LORD remaineth under curtains.

2 Then Nathan said unto David, Do all that is in thine heart: for God is with thee.

3 ¶ And it came to pass the same night, that the word of God came to Nathan, saying,

4 Go and tell David my servant, Thus saith the LORD, Thou shalt not build me an house to dwell in:

5 For I have not dwelt in an house since the day that I brought up Israel unto this day; but have gone from tent to tent, and from one tabernacle to another.

6 Wheresoever I have walked with all Israel, spake I a word to any of the judges of Israel, whom I commanded to feed my people, saying, Why have ye not built me an house of cedars?

7 Now therefore thus shalt thou say unto my servant David, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, I took thee from the sheepcote, even from following the sheep, that thou shouldest be ruler over my people Israel:

8 And I have been with thee whithersoever thou hast walked, and have cut off all thine enemies from before thee, and have made thee a name, like the name of the great men that are in the earth.

9 Also I will ordain a place for my people Israel, and will plant them, and they shall dwell in their place, and shall be moved no more; neither shall the children of wickedness waste them any more: as at the beginning,

10 And since the time that I commanded judges to be over my people Israel. Moreover I will subdue all thine enemies. Furthermore I tell thee, that the LORD will build thee an house.

11 ¶ And it shall come to pass, when thy days be expired that thou must go to be with thy fathers, that I will raise up thy seed after thee, which shall be of thy sons; and I will establish his kingdom.

12 He shall build me an house, and I will stablish his throne for ever.

13 I will be his father, and he shall be my son: and I will not take my mercy away from him, as I took it from him that was before thee:

14 But I will settle him in mine house and in my kingdom for ever: and his throne shall be established for evermore.

15 According to all these words, and according to all this vision, so did Nathan speak unto David.

his holy Spirit; his seal is affixed to them, and no man can injure them with impunity: nay, nothing can possibly harm them, but all things shall eventually work together for their good. Let us, however, be careful of prematurely concluding, that we are numbered with them; and seriously appeal to our consciences and experience, whether "the Lord of the whole earth" be that Lord, whom we desire to obey: and whether salvation by Jesus Christ from deserved wrath, from Satan, sin, and this present evil world, be our daily prayer, hope, and rejoicing. Do we perceive and adore the glory of the Divine perfections, and rejoice in celebrating his praise? And do we yield ourselves to his service: depending on his mercy and grace, and lamenting that we love him no more and serve him no better? All this, and far more, is due to him: for he is infinitely great, holy, and good; all our praises are beneath his excellency, and nothing can be compared with his uncreated majesty. Let us then devote all we have and are to him, and aim to worship him "in the beauty of holiness."

V. 30—43. The LORD our God is greatly to be feared. All the earth should stand in awe of him; for his wrath against the workers of iniquity is intolerable and eternal; but "in his favour there is life, in his presence there is fulness of joy, and at his right hand there are pleasures for evermore." He is glorious as our Creator and Judge, but more glorious as a Saviour: in that character sinners may approach and worship him, with acceptance and comfort; and men on earth, as well as the holy inhabitants of heaven, may rejoice in his universal and everlasting kingdom; because in Christ Jesus, "He is good, and his mercy for ever." Oh, that there were such a heart in us and in all men, thus to fear him and to hope in his mercy: that we might look forward with comfort and exultation to our meeting him upon his awful judgment-seat! He is continually collecting, before his throne, that chosen remnant which the Saviour hath redeemed unto God, with his blood, from all the nations of the earth: and there, being freed from sin, admitted to the beatific vision, and filled with love, and gratitude, and joy, they sing eternal praises to his name. As we successively depart this life, may our souls be gathered unto them: and may that time speedily arrive, when the scattered Jews shall at length be gathered into the church, and the fulness of the Gentiles brought in, to "give thanks to his holy name, and to glory in his praise!" Amen, and Amen.—In this life believers enjoy, from time to time, earnest and foretastes of heavenly bliss; but, when they cannot reach such fervent affections and exalted strains, they must steadily persevere in using the means of grace, as sinners "beholding the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world:" and the continual attendance of his appointed ministers, in his courts, is not only right in itself, but an encouragement to the faith and hope of his people, and a help to their praises and thanksgivings. Finally, it is well, when one duty prepares the soul for another; when public worship renders us more constant and spiritual in family worship and secret devotion; and when the effects of the whole appear in our conduct in relative life and in society.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVII. V. 1—6. (Notes, 2 Sam. vii. 1—7.) Thou shalt not, &c.—Shalt thou, &c? (4.) Tent to tent, &c. In the wilderness, the ark was taken out of the tent, when the camp of Israel marched; and was returned into it, when they rested.—It was afterwards taken from the tabernacle at Shiloh, and then stationed at Kirjath-jearim, doubtless in a tent prepared for it; thence David removed it to another tent on mount Zion. (xvi. 1—3. Notes, 1 Sam. vii. 1, 2. xvi. 1, 2. 2 Sam. vi. 10, 11, 17.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—12. The public revival of religion, and the pure worship of God, being countenanced and protected by "the powers that be," are joyful events to believers: and when their hearts are enlarged with gratitude to God, they will also be expanded in liberality towards men, and disposed to pray for them, and to do good to them, for his sake.—It is a good and pleasant thing to be thankful, and we should carefully record and frequently review the Lord's mercies to us and to his church, that we may be excited to abound in joyful praises: and ministers are especially appointed, by the Son of David our King, to animate and assist the people thus to glorify, and rejoice in, God, by preaching to them the gospel of salvation, and by every other means in their power.—The streams of mercy of which we partake should be traced back to that fountain of love whence they are derived; and, in thanking the Lord for his benefits to us, we should celebrate the glorious excellencies of his nature. This will also encourage our own faith and hope, and excite the attention of others to observe and admire his marvellous works: therefore we should be unreserved and open, in singing and speaking forth the praises of our God.—Riches, pre-eminence, wisdom, and strength, are precarious blessings, in which we must not glory and rejoice: but let him that glorieth, glory in his relation to the Lord our Salvation. To know, love, and belong to him constitutes the chief honour and happiness of man; and forms "that good part which shall never be taken from us." Whilst the assured believer boldly glories in the righteousness, mercy, truth, and power of his reconciled God, let the trembling sinner rejoice also; for he casteth out none that come, and saveth all who trust in him. But, let us all learn to seek him diligently and continually: not only that we may rejoice in his favour; but that we may be strengthened by him, to perform every service, and to triumph over all our inward and outward enemies. Indeed, we could no longer distrust either his mercy, or his power, if we duly remembered his works of old; especially the marvellous work of redemption, through Jesus Christ, which hath eclipsed all former displays of his wisdom, truth, and love. Nor are "the judgments of his mouth" less worthy of our attention, than the operations of his hands: by them we are instructed and directed; and even the denunciations of his wrath, and the execution of his righteous vengeance on sinners, "warn us to flee from the wrath to come," and to "give diligence to make our calling and election sure;" whilst his mercies are recorded, to enliven our gratitude and encourage our hope.

V. 13—29. Happy are the chosen servants of God, who "are followers of them who through faith and patience inherit the promises." He is their portion and their everlasting recompense; whilst his worship and service form the solace of their souls in this evil world. "He is ever mindful of his covenant," and he makes it a law to himself, an invariable rule of his conduct towards his people: and if we were duly mindful of it, we should derive great encouragement from his promises, and from that oath which he hath interposed for the "strong consolation of all those, who have fled for refuge to lay hold on the hope set before them:" while love and gratitude would, as an inward law in our minds, command and constrain our most devoted obedience. They, who are interested in his promise of eternal life, by faith in Jesus Christ, will be carried through all difficulties, and rendered superior in all conflicts, though in themselves they are few and poor. Here, they wander as strangers and pilgrims: but, compared with them, the most potent monarchs are accounted mean and vile, in the judgment of God. They have received the unction of

The repetitions in the word of God may be considered, as tacit reproofs of our negligence, forgetfulness, and unteachableness. Indeed, we are very backward to get familiarly acquainted with every part of the sacred volume, and very prone to forget what we have read ; so that we need to be taught again what we seem to have already learned : and for all these reasons it is very useful to have the same important truths, precepts, and examples enforced on us, in different parts of the Scriptures. If, in reading any chapter, or hearing any sermon, we learn nothing new, yet are reminded of those things of which we had lost sight, and stirred up to the exercise of faith and holy affections, and to the more diligent, fervent, and delightful practice of our several duties, very important purposes are answered. CHAP. XIX.

B.C. 1036.

David sends ambassadors to comfort the king of Ammon, who abuses and insults them, 1-5. The Ammonites and Syrians are vanquished by Joab and Abishai, 6-15. The king of Syria sends another army, which David conquers, slaying its commander, 16-18. The Syrians submit to David, 19.

NOW it came to pass after this, that ¹Nahash the king of the children of Ammon died, and his son reigned in his stead.

² And David said, ¹I will shew kindness unto Hanun the son of Nahash, because his father shewed kindness to me. And David sent messengers to comfort him concerning his father. So the servants of David came into the land of ¹the children of Ammon, to Hanun, to comfort him.

⁴ Wherefore Hanun ¹took David's servants, and ¹shaved them, and cut off their garments in the midst, hard by their buttocks, and ¹sent them away.

⁵ Then there went ¹certain, and told David how the men were served. And he sent to meet them: for the men were greatly ashamed. And the king said, Tarry ¹at Jericho until ¹your beards be grown, and ¹then return.

⁹ And the children of Ammon came out, and ¹put the battle in array before the gate of the city: and ¹the kings that were come, ¹were by themselves in the field.

It may, however, suffice to observe in this place, that persons of eminent piety will still be devising, and attempting, one service after another for the honour of God, and to promote the best interests of mankind; accounting themselves to have done nothing, while so much remains to be done, that Christ alone begins and finishes his work, and perpetually unites in his own person all those offices, which are requisite for the welfare of his church; but that mere men have, for a short space, certain portions of service allotted them, which they cannot exceed: that God accepts and rewards those good desires, which he is pleased for wise reasons to frustrate: that his favour and his image ennoble the meanest of his people, above the estate of men of high degree: that we cannot possibly desire more for ourselves, or for the church, than he hath promised: that true grace desires all this, and wants no more; and true faith, in vigorous exercise, seeks, asks, expects, and waits for it all, in the way which God hath prescribed: and that, if we serve the Lord, as a God over us, in dependence on his mercy through Jesus Christ, he will be a God to us; and they whom he blesteth, will be blessed for evermore. For this blessedness may we look, with patient submission and joyful expectation, amidst the trials of life, and in the hour of death; and may the same be continued to our children and posterity after us, through successive generations!

NOTES.

CHAP. XVIII. V. 1. (Note, 2 Sam. viii. 1.) In the parallel passage, Gath is called Meteg-ammah, or the bridle of Ammah, as built on a natural strong hold, called Ammah, and intended to bridle, or keep in subjection, the adjacent country.—The rest of this chapter has already been commented on.

V. 2-8. (Notes, 2 Sam. viii. 2-8. Marg. Ref.) ¹Establish his dominion, (3.) ¹Recover his border;—Seven thousand, (4.) ¹Seven hundred;—Brazen sea, &c. (8.) (Notes, 1 Kings vii. 13-47.)

V. 9-17. (Notes, 2 Sam. viii. 9-18. Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

They, who ¹seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, shall, in due time and manner, have all other things added unto them.—Communion with God, and his consolations, are intended to animate us to diligence in our proper work, and vigour in our spiritual warfare.—Earthly possessions are often lost by attempting to establish them: and sinners ruin themselves by encouraging and assisting one another, in rebellion against God, and opposition

¹⁰ Now ¹when Joab saw that the ¹battle was ¹set against him before and behind, he chose out of all the ¹choice of Israel, and put ¹them in array against the Syrians.

¹¹ And the rest of the people he delivered unto the hand of ¹Abishai his brother, ¹and they set ¹themselves in array against the children of Ammon.

¹² And he said, ¹If the Syrians be too strong for me, then thou shalt help me: but if the children of Ammon be too strong for thee, then I will help thee.

¹⁴ So Joab, and the people that ¹were with him, drew nigh before the Syrians unto the battle; and ¹they fled before him.

¹⁶ ¶ And when the Syrians saw that they were put to the worse before Israel, they sent messengers, and drew forth the Syrians that ¹were beyond the ¹river: and ¹Shophach the captain of the host of Hadarezer ¹went before them.

¹⁷ And it was told David; and he gathered all Israel, and passed over Jordan, and came upon them, and set ¹the battle in array against them. So when David had put the battle in array against the Syrians, they fought with him.

to his cause.—Our good fight of faith, under the Captain of our salvation, will assuredly terminate in everlasting triumph and peace.—But the happiness of Israel, through David's victories and equitable administration, very faintly shadowed forth the felicity of the redeemed in the realms above, when the last enemy shall be destroyed, and Jesus shall reign in the midst of them for ever and ever, and they shall behold, and share, the joy and glory of his kingdom. (Notes, Matt. xxv. 19-23. Rev. iii. 20-22. Heb. xii. 2.) Let us then, without delay, join ourselves to him, trusting and serving him constantly and faithfully, that at length we may be for ever with him.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIX. V. 1-5. (Notes, 2 Sam. x. 1-5.)

V. 6. Syria-maachah. Or, Aram-maachah. Maachah (or, Maachathi) lay to the east of Jordan, and had been allotted to Manasseh: but it is probable, that the Syrians had got possession of it, and that it was thence called Syria-maachah. (Deut. iii. 14. Josh. xii. 5.)

V. 7. (Note.) Thirty-two thousand soldiers, (exclusive of a thousand sent by the king of Maachah,) are mentioned in the parallel passage, (2 Sam. x. 6:) but thirty-two thousand chariots are here reckoned up. (Note, 1 Sam. xiii. 5.) Either some trivial mistake has crept into the text, in respect of the number, or kind, of these auxiliaries; or they were used in general to fight, some on foot, and others on horseback; yet on some occasions they all could drive, and fight from, chariots of war.

V. 8-15. (Note, 2 Sam. x. 8-14.) The kings, &c. (9.) The people of the allied kings are mentioned in Samuel.—Behave ourselves valiantly. (13.) Let us play the men.—The original is the same in both places.

V. 16-19. (Note, 2 Sam. x. 18, 19.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We may expect, that in this world our kindest actions will often be requited with the basest returns, and our best intentions expose us to the most injurious suspicions. Even in our most implicit obedience to our great and gracious Lord, when we most sincerely desire to do good to our fellow-creatures, we must lay our account with ingratitude, contempt, and abuse. But these things should not discourage us; for he will plead our cause, and both comfort us, and kindly recompense all that we endure for his sake: and after his example we also should endeavour to make up to those that serve us, every loss to which they are exposed in executing our orders.—In every case, the servants of God, Rabbah is taken and spoiled, and the inhabitants are treated with severity. 1-3. Three giants are slain by David's servants, in three battles against the Philistines. 4-8.

AND ^ait came to pass, that ^aafter the year was expired, at the time that kings go out to battle, Joab led forth the power of the army, and ^bwasted the country of the children of Ammon, and came and besieged ^cRabbah. But David tarried at Jerusalem. And ^dJoab smote Rabbah, and destroyed it.

David, tempted by Satan, requires Joab to number the people. 1-4. The number is returned to the king. 5, 6. God is displeased, and David owns his fault. 7, 8. The Lord, by Gad the prophet, proposes three judgments to David, who chooses three days' pestilence. 9-13. Seventy thousand are cut off; and David, seeing the destroying angel, intercedes for the people. 14-17. Directed by Gad, he buys Ornan's threshing-floor; and sacrifices: fire consumes the oblation, and the plague is stayed. 18-27. He again sacrifices there, fearing to go unto Gibeon. 28-30.

though here disgraced, will finally be honoured: but none of his enemies will bring upon themselves more sudden and terrible vengeance, than they who insult his ambassadors, when sent with a message of peace and salvation.—The only safety of us sinners consists in submitting to God, making our peace with him, and becoming his servants: thus separating from those who persist in their opposition and rebellion, we may escape their doom.—When prudence, vigilance, courage, and diligence, have been used in a good cause, and we have mutually assisted each other; we may confidently leave the event to the Lord: "Let him do what seemeth him good." But we may sometimes fear, lest being instruments of good to others, we should ourselves be found to come short of salvation, through unbelief and impenitent continuance in sin.

NOTES.

CHAP. XX. V. 1-3. Notes, 2 Sam. xii. 26-31.) The whole account of David's adultery, and the sins and sufferings consequent upon it, is here entirely omitted. (Notes, &c. 2 Sam. xi. xix.)

V. 4-7. (Note, 2 Sam. xxi. 15-22. Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

A pious and benevolent mind cannot possibly delight in mentioning the transgressions of useful and eminent men. So that if truth and candour will permit, and if no good purpose can be answered by speaking, persons of this character will choose to be silent; though they will by no means deny, excuse, or extenuate the sins of any man, when they cannot honestly conceal them. It, however, proves a malignant or an unfeeling mind, to be always searching into the miscarriages of others, especially those of superior reputation, in the lord the king, are they not all my lord's servants? why then doth my lord require this thing? ^awhy will he be a cause of trespass to Israel?

4 Nevertheless ^bthe king's word prevailed against Joab. ^cWherefore Joab departed, ^dand went throughout all Israel, and came to Jerusalem.

5 ¶ And Joab gave the sum of the number of the people unto David. And all ^ethey of Israel were ^fa thousand thousand and an hundred thousand men that drew sword: and Judah ^gwas four hundred three-score and ten thousand men that drew sword.

6 But ^hLevi and Benjamin counted he not among them: for the king's word was abominable to ⁱJoab.

7 ¶ ^j*And ^kGod was displeased with this thing; therefore ^lhe smote Israel.

8 And David said unto God, ^mI have sinned greatly, because I have done this thing: but now, I beseech thee, ⁿdo away the iniquity of thy servant; for ^oI have done very foolishly.

9 ¶ The Lord spake unto ^pGad, David's seer, saying,

10 Go and tell David, saying, Thus saith the LORD, I ^qoffer thee three things; ^rchoose thee one of them, ^sthat I may do ^tit unto thee.

11 So Gad came to David, and said unto him, Thus saith the LORD, ^uChoose thee, 12 Either ^vthree years' famine; or three months ^wto be destroyed before thy foes, while that the sword of thine enemies overtaketh ^xthee; or else three days ^ythe sword of the LORD, ^zeven the pestilence, in the land, and ^{aa}the angel of the LORD destroying throughout all the coasts of Israel. ^{ab}Now therefore advise thyself what word I shall bring again to him that sent me.

13 And David said unto Gad, ^{ac}I am in a great strait: ^{ad}let me fall now into the hand of the LORD; ^{ae}for very ^{af}great are his mercies: but ^{ag}let me not fall into the hand of man.

14 ¶ So ^{ah}the LORD sent pestilence upon Israel: and there fell of Israel ^{ai}seventy thousand men.

15 And God sent an angel ^{aj}unto Jerusalem to destroy it: and as he was destroying, the LORD beheld, and he ^{ak}repented him of the evil, and said to the angel that destroyed, ^{al}It is enough, stay now thine hand. And the angel of the LORD stood by the threshing-floor of ^{am}Ornan the Jebusite.

16 ¶ And David lifted up his eyes, and ^{an}saw the world, or the church.—The conflicts of believers, like those of David, will be successive, as long as they live here, and sometimes the sharpest are reserved till the last: and their victories will be gradual, as their enemies will still be renewing their assaults, and recovering their strength.—Though the Lord severely correct the sins of his own believing people, he will not leave them in the hands of their enemies; his assistance far more than counterbalances all the advantages, in number and strength, of those that defy his Israel; and all that trust in him shall be made more than conquerors, through him that loveth them.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXI. V. 1 (Note, 2 Sam. xxiv. 1, 2.) ^aGod, being angry with Israel, suffered Satan to move David to number them. The phrase stood up is to be observed; which was the posture of those who charged or accused any person of a crime, in a court of justice. Thus Satan is represented as "the accuser of the brethren," in the book of the Revelation; and here, to lay some sin to the charge of the Israelites, which he represented to God as a reason to punish them. For it is the way of the holy Scripture, thus to bring down these things, and accommodate them to the lowest capacities. (Bp. Patrick.) (Notes, Job i. 9-12. Zech. iii. 1-4. Rev. xii. 7-12.)

V. 2-6. (Notes, 2 Sam. xxiv. 3-9.) ^bJoab did all this against his will: and at last the work was so odious unto him, that he was quite tired with it; and therefore broke off, before he took the numbers of these two tribes. (Bp. Patrick.)

V. 7, 8. (Notes, 2 Sam. xi. 27. xii. 13. xxiv. 10.)

V. 9-17. (Notes, 2 Sam. xxiv. 11-17.)

angel of the LORD stand between the earth and the heaven, having a drawn sword in his hand stretched out over Jerusalem. Then David and the elders of Israel, who were clothed in sackcloth, fell upon their faces.

17 And David said unto God, Is it not I that commanded the people to be numbered? even I it is that have sinned and done evil indeed: but as for these sheep, what have they done? Let thine hand, I pray thee, O LORD my God, be on me, and on my father's house; but not on thy people, that they should be plagued.

18 ¶ Then the angel of the LORD commanded Gad to say to David, that David should go up, and set up an altar unto the LORD, in the threshing-floor of Ornan the Jebusite.

19 And David went up at the saying of Gad, which he spake in the name of the LORD.

20 *And Ornan turned back, and saw the angel; and his four sons with him hid themselves. Now Ornan was threshing wheat.

21 And as David came to Ornan, Ornan looked and saw David, and went out of the threshing-floor, and bowed himself to David with his face to the ground.

22 Then David said to Ornan, Grant me the place of this threshing-floor, that I may build an altar therein unto the LORD: thou shalt grant it me for the full price: that the plague may be stayed from the people.

23 And Ornan said unto David, Take it to thee, and let my lord the king do that which is good in his eyes: lo, I give thee the oxen also for burnt-offerings, and the threshing instruments for wood, and the wheat for the meat-offering: I give it all.

24 And king David said to Ornan, Nay, but I will verily buy it for the full price: for I will not take that which is thine for the LORD, nor offer burnt-offerings without cost.

25 So David gave to Ornan for the place six hundred shekels of gold by weight.

26 And David built there an altar unto the LORD, and offered burnt-offerings, and peace-offerings, and called upon the LORD; and he answered him from heaven by fire upon the altar of burnt-offering.

27 And the LORD commanded the angel; and he put up his sword again into the sheath thereof.

28 ¶ At that time when David saw that the LORD had answered him in the threshing-floor of Ornan the Jebusite, then he sacrificed there.

29 For the tabernacle of the LORD, which Moses made in the wilderness, and the altar of the burnt-offering, were at that season in the high place at Gibeon.

30 But David could not go before it to enquire of God: for he was afraid, because of the sword of the angel of the LORD.

CHAP. XXII.

David makes large preparations for the temple. 1-5. He instructs Solomon, and charges him to build it, 6-16. He commands the elders of Israel to assist him, 17-19.

THEN David said, This is the house of the LORD God, and this is the altar of the burnt-offering for Israel.

2 And David commanded to gather together the strangers that were in the land of Israel: and he set masons to hew wrought stones to build the house of God.

3 And David prepared iron in abundance for the nails for the doors of the gates, and for the joinings; and brass in abundance without weight.

4 Also cedar-trees in abundance: for the Zidonians and they of Tyre brought much cedar-wood to David.

5 And David said, Solomon my son is young and tender, and the house that is to be build for the

V. 18-25. (Notes, 2 Sam. xxiv. 18-25.)—Saw, &c. (20.) The destroying angel was rendered visible, not only to David and the elders of Israel, but to Ornan and his sons also. Indeed, it is probable, that this awful vision of the angel, with a "drawn sword in his hand, stretched out over Jerusalem," continued apparent to all the inhabitants, till David had offered the appointed sacrifices.

V. 26. The fire from heaven was an emblem of divine vindictive justice against sinners: but, this fire consuming the sacrifices, and sparing the offenders, who thus pleaded guilty and sought mercy, was the highest token of the Lord's acceptance, and a type of our salvation by the propitiatory sufferings of Christ for us. (Notes, Gen. iv. 3-5. Lev. ix. 24. 1 Kings xviii. 38, 39. 2 Chr. vii. 1-3.)

V. 28-30. David in general had been used to sacrifice at Gibeon; but on this emergency he was afraid to leave Jerusalem, lest the angel should smite the inhabitants: and having been accepted at the threshing-floor of Ornan, he continued afterwards to offer sacrifices there. (Note, xxii. 1.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Whilst we abide on earth Satan has access to us, through the remains of sin in our hearts, especially of pride: and the Lord hath wise and righteous reasons for permitting this enemy, under certain restrictions, to tempt his servants. As far as he obtains this permission, he is unwearied in his malicious efforts to deceive, to defile, or to distress us; and he can vary his devices in many plausible ways: but, he does us more harm as a seducer than as an accuser, as a subtle serpent than as a roaring lion. We are therefore called upon to be sober and vigilant, and to pray always that we "enter not into temptation:" and, as men advance in rank and reputation, authority, or usefulness, they have need to redouble the guard, and to be more watchful and instant in prayer than ever; for the enemy levels his assaults especially against those who are eminent in character, or fill up public stations, in the church or in the community; because their falls involve numbers either in sin or suffering.—It is a mercy to be speedily made sensible of our guilt, when we have been left to transgress: but no confession or humiliation can secure us from present sufferings, when we have committed such crimes as appear abominable even to ungodly men, and bring an open scandal upon our profession.—By thus yielding to temptation we bring ourselves into dreadful straits, from which we can by no means extricate ourselves: yet, even in this case, there is encouragement for us to leave our cause in the hand of the Lord, that he may do with us as he pleases; "for very great are his mercies."—Of all the painful consequences of transgression, none in this world can be more distressing to an ingenuous mind, than to see those whom a person most loves, and desires the most to do good to, suffering heavily through his sins. But even under the anguish of this trial, we must not allow ourselves to murmur, or to despond.—The Lord hath righteous reasons for his dispensations, though mysterious to us: and therefore they, who are reciprocally suffering through each other's sins, should unite together in humiliation before him, and in fervently deprecating the effects of his indignation from each other. This forms the proper business of every individual, in times of general calamity: and when public honour has thus been rendered to the righteous Author of national sufferings, his merciful interposition may be expected. He knoweth how to educe good from evil, and to overrule our sufferings, nay, even our sins, for the good of our souls, and the promotion of true religion.—The fear of impending vengeance, from the wrath of an offended God, is naturally calculated to drive men from him. But in subserviency to the gospel, and through the influence of the Spirit of God, it concurs in shewing sinners the preciousness of Christ; disposing them to forsake all for him, and afterwards enlarging the mind in grateful obedience to him, who hath saved them from so great a destruction. They who shelter their souls, as it were, under the atonement of his sacrifice, who "suffered once for sins, the just for the unjust," will be safe from danger, even in the hour of death, and in the day of judgment: and none are losers, by being willing to part with all for the sake of Christ, or to dedicate all to his service.—When the urgency of our affairs constrains us to act contrary to our judgment and inclination, we shall frequently learn afterwards, that, by so doing, we were preparing the way for some important benefit from the Lord to us or to others: and in the observance of his directions, we may confidently expect acceptance and returning comfort.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXII. V. 1. The Lord, having pointed out the place, where he would have sacrifice offered, for averting the pestilence, and having "answered by fire from heaven;" David was assured, probably by immediate inspiration, that it was his will, the temple should be built by Solomon on this very spot. It had immediately before been in the possession of a Jebusite, which was an intimation of mercy intended for the Gentiles through Jesus Christ. (xxi. 18.)—It does not appear, whether David removed the ark thither with its tent, or whether they remained in their former place.—Henceforth this became the spot, which God "chose to place his name there," and where sacrifices were regularly offered, as long as that dispensation lasted. (Notes, Deut. xii. 5-7. 2 Chr. iii. 1, 2. Ps. lxxviii. 68, 69. John iv. 19-24.)

V. 2-5. David, though denied the honour of building the temple, yet out of love to so good a work, employed himself in making every kind of preparation for it. (Notes, xxviii. 11-19. xxix. 1-9.)—The strangers, here mentioned, seem to have been the remnant of the old inhabitants, who, having submitted to David, had their lives spared, and had been reduced to bondage. (Note, 1 Kings ix. 20-22.)—David procured much cedar-wood for the temple; but LORD must be ¹exceeding magnificent, of fame and of glory throughout all countries: I will therefore now make preparation for it. So ²David prepared abundantly before his death.

6 ¶ Then he called for Solomon his son, and ¹charged him to build an house for the LORD God of Israel.

7 And David said to Solomon, My son, as for me, ^mit was in my mind to build an house ⁿunto the name of the LORD my God:

8 But the word of the LORD came to me, saying, °Thou hast shed blood abundantly, and hast made great wars: °thou shalt not build an house unto my name, because thou hast shed much blood upon the earth in my sight.

9 Behold, ^aa son shall be born to thee, who shall be a man of rest; and ⁱI will give him rest from all his enemies round about: for his name shall be ^{*}Solomon, and ⁱI will give peace and quietness unto Israel in his days.

10 'He shall build an house for my name, and ^uhe shall be my son, and I will be his father; and ^{*}I will establish the throne of his kingdom over Israel for ever.

11 Now, my son, ²the LORD be with thee; and prosper thou, and build the house of the LORD thy God, as he hath said of thee.

12 Only ^athe LORD give thee wisdom and understanding, and give thee charge concerning Israel, ^athat thou mayest keep the law of the LORD thy God.

13 Then ^bshalt thou prosper, if thou takest heed ^cto

Solomon had occasion for a great deal more. (Marg. Ref.).—According to the nature of that introductory dispensation, and for an emblem of the spiritual glory of Christ and his church, Solomon's temple was built with great magnificence: that, being renowned through all countries, strangers might be induced to visit it, and thus become acquainted with ИЕХОВАН, and his true worship. Solomon also would need every encouragement and assistance for so great a work; that he might not be retarded from entering on it in an early period of his reign.

V. 6—10. (Notes Num. xxvii. 18, 19. 2 Tim. iv. 1—8.) David was a type of Christ in his conflicts, victories, and the destruction of his obstinate enemies; but Solomon represented the Saviour triumphant, glorified, and giving peace and felicity to his willing subjects. In this latter character, “the Prince of peace” erects his spiritual temple; and it more accorded to the nature of the Christian dispensation, and to the character of Jesus, both of which were represented in this transaction, that the temple should be built by a peaceable prince, than by a successful warrior. Yet, David in his wars did the work and sought the honour of God, and was eminently serviceable to his people: and he was desirous also of building the temple. (Notes, 2 Sum. vii. 1—5. 12—16. xii. 24, 25. 1 Kings vii. 17—21. Zech. vi. 12, 13.)

V. 11, 12. David had given Solomon exhortations and instructions; but the powerful influence of divine grace alone could form him to that wisdom, piety, and zeal, which such a work required. (Notes, 1 Kings iii. 5—14. Ps. lxxii. 1, 2.)

V. 13. (Notes, xxviii. 7, 8. Josh. i. 7, 8. Marg. Ref.) Conscientious obedience to the commands of God, on scriptural principles, both secures final success, and inspires present courage and confidence.

V. 14. The gold and silver here mentioned, if computed by the ordinary weight of the talent, would amount to eight or nine hundred millions sterling: and this enormous quantity would more than have sufficed to erect an edifice as large as the temple itself apart from its courts, of solid gold and silver. Compared therefore with the size of the temple, and with the gains of Solomon, when the precious metals became common at Jerusalem; (1 Kings ix. 14. 21 ;) it is generally concluded, either that some mistake hath taken place in the numeral letters, or that a talent of inferior weight and value is meant.—David had collected this wealth for the temple in his trouble, or in his poverty. He had set out in life very poor; he had passed through a constant succession of trials and troubles: and all his prosperity was the result of the Lord's singular kindness, in making him a gainer by all the attempts of his numerous enemies.—He seems also to speak of his preparation as a small matter, whether compared with the greatness of the Lord to whom it was dedicated, or with his own obligations to him. (Note, xxix. 10—19.)

V. 15—19. (Notes, xxviii. 21. xxix. 21—25. Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1.—10. When the grace of God possesses the heart, a man's falls and mistakes will eventually be overruled to form him to such an humble and watchful frame of mind, as will exceedingly increase the simplicity, purity, and activity of his zeal in the service of God.—The most eminent servants of the Lord are apt sometimes to abate of their diligence; and alarming providences often concur with the warnings and rebukes of the Scripture, to stir them up to greater earnestness; especially when they are reminded of the approach of death, and perceive that much remains to be done, and that probably they have only a short time in which to do it.—When the Lord refuses to employ us in those kinds, and in that measure, of service to his church, which we desired and hoped to have performed; we must not on that account yield to indolence or discouragement: but we should be doing what we can in a subordinate sphere, and upon a smaller scale; and rejoice in affording any little assistance to those who are honoured with more extensive usefulness. The “spirit that is in us, indeed powerfully lusteth to envy;” but we must seek unto Him, who giveth more grace, that this evil may be mortified and subdued.—We are not likely on earth to witness those glorious times which are foretold in the Scriptures, when Satan shall no more deceive the nations, but “the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea:” yet, it is possible that we may be, as it were, collecting materials for that work. Whatever is done towards rendering the word of God more generally known, understood, and attended to, in the world, is like bringing a stone, perhaps an ingot of gold, towards erecting the edifice. Whatever tends to bring the rising generations, in succession, acquainted with the gospel of Jesus Christ in its purity and energy, is, as it were, enlisting soldiers for that decisive conflict, in which the armies of Christ shall obtain most glorious victories. These considerations should encourage us, when we are grieved that we see no more fruits of all our labours. Much good may appear after our death, which was hidden from us, “lest we should be exalted above measure:” “Let us not then be weary of well-doing; for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not.”—Above all, they who are aged, and expect shortly to be removed to a better world, should diligently instruct, encourage, charge, and caution those, who are young and inexperienced, and who are likely to succeed them in their work. The service is arduous and important, being intimately connected with the honour of God, and the salvation of souls; and, “who is sufficient for these things?” Indeed, all our sufficiency must be of God. He allots various services to his people; and that, which qualifies for one kind of usefulness, may unfit for another: we should then all acquiesce in his will; and fill up our proper place for the common benefit, as the members do in the human body. But peace is in its own nature preferable to the most successful wars; and the shedding of human blood, though sometimes necessary, should always be done with reluctance, and thought of with horror; for even when the Lord commanded it, he was pleased to speak of it, as “shed in his sight,” and as what he had no pleasure in beholding. We should, therefore, be more ambitious of the honour of giving rest and quietness to those around us, than of the conqueror’s applause. “Blessed are the peace-makers; for they shall be called the children of God.”—Among other unspeakable advantages of public peace, this is peculiarly important, that it affords the fairest opportunities of executing useful designs to promote true religion: and then, we should be active and earnest to seize the favourable opportunity, by forming or assisting every design of general utility.—But especially peace among Christians is conducive to this most desirable end; which is grievously counteracted by the animosities, divisions, and vehement controversies, which, alas! prevail and are multiplied. Did all real believers “endeavour to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace,” and to strive together for “the faith of the gospel;” such effects would follow, as seem at present to exceed our largest expectations or conceptions. The work is, however, in the hands of “the Prince of peace;” may he compose all our

David makes Solomon king. 1. The Levites are numbered, and classed for different services, 2-6. The sons of Gershon, 7-11. Of Kohath, 12-20. Of Merari, 21-23. The several offices of the Levites, 24-32.

SO when David was "old and full of days, he made Solomon his son king over Israel.

2 ¶ And he gathered together all the princes of Israel, with the priests and the Levites.

3 Now the Levites were numbered from the age of thirty years and upward: and their number by their polls, man by man, was "thirty and eight thousand.

4 Of which "twenty and four thousand were to "set forward the work of the house of the LORD; and six thousand were "officers and judges.

5 Moreover four thousand were "porters; and four thousand "praised the LORD with "the instruments which I made, said David, to praise therewith.

6 And David "divided them into "courses among the sons of Levi, namely, "Gershon, Kohath, and Merari.

7 ¶ Of the "Gershonites were, "Laadan and Shimei.

8 The sons of Laadan, the chief was "Jehiel, and Zetham, and "Joel, three.

9 The sons of Shimei; Shelomith, and Haziel, and Haran, three. These were the chief of the fathers of Laadan.

10 And the sons of Shimei were, Jahath, "Zina, and Jeush, and Beriah. These four were the sons of Shimei.

11 And Jahath was the chief, and "Zizah the second: but Jeush and Beriah "had not many sons; therefore they were in one reckoning, according to their father's house.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIII. V. 1. David named Solomon his successor.—If this transaction preceded his last sickness, and Adonijah's usurpation; that was thus rendered more inexcusable, for it is evident that David acted as a prophet, as well as with the full concurrence of his people. (Notes, xxix. 21-25. 1 Kings i. 5. 6.)

V. 2-6. The ark being now stationed at Jerusalem, the place of the temple appointed, and great preparations made for the building of it, (xvi. 1. xxii. 1-4.) David proceeded to reduce the whole service of the priests and Levites to method, which seems before to have been conducted with less regularity. The Israelites had been greatly increased; and we may suppose that, towards the close of David's reign, the occasional sacrifices were far more numerous than they had been. The priests and Levites also were greatly multiplied; and it was of importance to make every thing ready for conducting the service, with proportionable splendour and solemnity, as soon as the temple was finished. David therefore began his arrangements with numbering the Levites, from thirty years of age, as in the time of Moses: but it does not appear that such as were above fifty years old were omitted. (Notes, 25-27. Num. iv. 8. viii. 24-26.) The priests, who were very numerous, were not included in the sum total here mentioned; so that this tribe had increased in greater proportion than the others.—Twenty-four thousand Levites were employed to "set forward the work of the house of the LORD;" that is, to assist the priests in every thing pertaining to the sacrifices, and in removing from the temple and its courts, whatever might be polluting and offensive; that the whole service might be performed with expedition and exactness, and every thing preserved entirely clean and beautiful; (28:) and it is probable that, while the temple was building, they were employed in superintending the workmen. They served in rotation by courses: it is probable, that every week a thousand came in, and a thousand went out. (Marg. Ref. Note, 2 Kings xi. 5-9.) Doubtless it was also intended, that they should be instructors of the people, in their several districts, when not employed at the sanctuary. Six thousand were employed as magistrates, in the different parts of the country, and perhaps they likewise acted in rotation. Four thousand kept the doors of the sanctuary, that no unclean or improper person might enter the courts, that none but priests might go into the temple, and that no one might rob the treasures there deposited: and four thousand were appointed as singers and musicians, to keep up that part of divine worship continually. (Marg. Ref.)—These also were divided into twenty-four courses, and changed weekly. (ix. 25.)

V. 7-23. (Marg. Ref.) Moses, &c. (14.) As the sons of Moses were excluded from the priesthood; evidently with Moses' most cordial and disinterested concurrence; and, as it appears from the history, by their own also: no other person, not of Aaron's race, could on any account reasonably think of intruding into that sacred office.

V. 24-28. (Note, 3-6.) The work of the Levites was not so laborious at this time, as when the tabernacle was carried by them, along with Israel in their journeys; and perhaps numbers of the young Levites, being out of employ, differences, and build the spiritual temple so magnificent and glorious, that the fame of it may be spread into all countries, till all the nations of the earth become his willing subjects, and live in peace with one another!

V. 11-19. Even the young, the weak, and inexperienced, when called forth to service by the Lord, may expect that he will be with them; and that he will give them upright zealous minds, with true wisdom and understanding, and then cause them to prosper in their work.—No abilities or diligence can render us durably and extensively useful to others, if we do not take heed to our own conduct, that it be regulated according to the word of God. Whilst we trust in his grace and mercy, and obey his commandments, we need fear no difficulties or opposition: the things, which seem to be against us, will "work together for our good;" we should then be "strong in the Lord," and of good courage, and not dread, or be dismayed, at the prospect of any temptations, troubles, or persecutions, which may meet us in the way of our duty.—In such an age and nation as this, we of course enter in many respects into the labours of others: but to all the preparation hitherto made in any place, we shall find it requisite to add far more; for much, very much remains to be done to render us "a peculiar people, zealous of good works." All our advantages, and all the promises of the gospel, are intended to encourage our activity, and not to excuse our sloth. And, whether we seek our own salvation, or that of other men, we must "arise, and be doing."—The whole weight of public services should not be laid upon those who sustain public characters. Others are commanded to assist them in proportion to their talents and abilities; and they are exhorted to set their hearts and souls thus to seek and serve the Lord, that the good works, which have been devised, may be completed without needless delay. Thus nobles, senators, magistrates, and indeed every subject in his place, should concur with the king, in every measure for checking immorality and profaneness, and for promoting the fear of God, and a regard to his truths, ordinances, and commandments: first they should lead the way by a good example; then they should proceed to employ their authority and influence, to give effect to such endeavours; and finally, they should seek the blessing of God upon them by fervent prayers. Thus likewise the leading persons in congregations should second to the uttermost the labours of the minister for the good of souls: their unanimity, forbearance, and cordiality; their pious examples, family-religion, and earnest prayers, should never be wanting, that they may add weight to his exhortations, strengthen his hands, encourage him in his arduous work, and bring a blessing upon it. Yet, alas! how contrary is the conduct of too many, who would be thought friends to the gospel! In the church, in their families, and in their worldly concerns, they act as if they meant to counteract the labours of ministers; to weaken their influence, to discourage their hearts, to prejudice men's minds against the blessed truths which they preach, and to embolden all around them to disregard their warnings and exhortations!—But surely, if "the LORD indeed be with us," and hath given us rest from our enemies; we shall set our hearts and souls to seek him, and by every means in our power, to glorify his name, and promote the peace and prosperity of his church.

given rest unto his people, *that they may dwell in Jerusalem for ever.

26 And also unto the Levites: they shall no more carry the tabernacle, nor any vessels of it for the service thereof.

27 For ^{by} the last words of David, the Levites were ^{numbered} from twenty years old and above:

28 Because their office was to wait on the sons of Aaron for the service of the house of the LORD, in the courts, and in the chambers, and in the purifying of all holy things, and the work of the service of the house of God;

29 Both for the shew-bread, and for the fine flour for meat-offering, and for the unleavened cakes, and for that which is baked in the pan, and for that which is fried, and for all manner of measure and size;

30 And to stand every morning to thank and praise the LORD, and likewise at even;

31 And to offer all burnt-sacrifices unto the LORD in the sabbaths, in the new-moons, and on the set feasts, by number, according to the order commanded unto them continually before the LORD:

32 And that they should keep the charge of the tabernacle of the congregation, and the charge of the holy place, and the charge of the sons of Aaron their brethren, in the service of the house of the LORD.

contracted bad habits, or set bad examples: therefore David, as a prophet, ordered this change. Twenty-five years of age had been the earliest term of their entering upon their probationary services, but now they were to be employed from twenty years old: and, as a matter of importance, David confirmed it with his last words.

V. 29. (Marg. Ref.) All manner, &c. Those Levites, who acted as magistrates, (4.) had the inspection of weights and measures of every kind, that no fraud might in this way be committed. Honesty is nearly connected with piety; and therefore the Levites, being sufficiently numerous, were employed to superintend the former as well as the latter. (Notes, Deut. xxv. 13-16. Prov. xi. 1. xvi. 11. xx. 10. 23. Am. viii. 4-10. Mic. vi. 10-15.) They probably kept standard weights and measures at the temple, by which all those allowed in traffic, were tried and approved. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 30-32. The Levites assisted the priests, in offering the sacrifices; though some parts of that service were performed by the priests alone. (Notes, Lev. i. 5-9. Num. viii. 24-26.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

If we be prepared for death, having accomplished our measure of services, and seeing others raised up to succeed us in the church or community, according to our several situations, we surely may be "full of days," whatever our term of life may be: and satisfied with living in this world of sin and sorrow, of vanity and temptation, we may rejoice to leave all below, and even to be absent from our bodies, that we may go to heaven, and be present with the Lord.—We should be thankful, in declining years, to be eclipsed by men of real integrity, piety, and useful endowments, who are coming forward upon the stage of action: yet, we should still endeavour to do all we can to promote the common cause of religion; and sometimes the sagacity and experience of old age, when incapable of much bodily exertion, may suggest and effect more real good, than the vigour and activity of youth.—The increase of ministers is of great importance, provided they be men of God, zealous for his glory, and earnestly seeking the salvation of souls. In this case they will desire employment, and in one way or other will be usefully active.—But it is expedient that every one should know his proper place, to help forward the work of the house of the Lord; to promote equity and justice; to instruct the people in the truths and precepts of God's word; to take care that his ordinances be duly administered; and to excite and assist the people in his sacred worship.—Every method should be used to prevent the irregularity, indolence, and worldly lusts, of this order of men, whose example, influence, and conversation are more useful, or more pernicious, than those of any other; and who are commonly either better or worse employed than the other orders in society.—Though it is generally inexpedient, that the more arduous part of the sacred ministry should be performed by very young men: yet, they who are intended for this service, ought by no means to waste their youth in inactivity or dissipation; but to employ their time in preparatory and initiatory studies and exercises.—A constant succession of religious duties, stated or occasional, public or private, must engage the true minister's attention,

2 But Nadab and Abihu died before their father, and had no children: therefore Eleazar and Ithamar executed the priest's office.

3 And David distributed them, both Zadok of the sons of Eleazar, and Ahimelech of the sons of Ithamar, according to their offices in their service.

4 And there were more chief men found of the sons of Eleazar than of the sons of Ithamar: and thus were they divided. Among the sons of Eleazar there were sixteen chief men of the house of their fathers, and eight among the sons of Ithamar according to the house of their fathers.

5 Thus were they divided by lot, one sort with another; for the governors of the sanctuary, and governors of the house of God, were of the sons of Eleazar, and of the sons of Ithamar.

6 And Shemaiah the son of Nethaneel the scribe, one of the Levites, wrote them before the king, and the princes, and Zadok the priest, and Ahimelech the son of Abiathar, and before the chief of the fathers of the priests and Levites: one principal household being taken for Eleazar, and one taken for Ithamar.

7 Now the first lot came forth to Jehoiarib, the second to Jedaiah,

8 The third to Harim, the fourth to Seorim,

9 The fifth to Malchijah, the sixth to Mijamin,

10 The seventh to Hakkoz, the eighth to Abijah,

11 The ninth to Jeshuah, the tenth to Shecaniah,

12 The eleventh to Eliashib, the twelfth to Jakim,

13 The thirteenth to Huppah, the fourteenth to Jeshebeab,

14 The fifteenth to Bilgah, the sixteenth to Immer,

15 The seventeenth to Hezir, the eighteenth to Apses, day by day continually: and if a man cannot take pleasure in such employments, he must soon be weary of the work, as a drudgery; and will either neglect it, or attend upon it unwillingly, for the sake of his wages. A new heart, a spiritual mind, which delights greatly in God's commandments, is the first and most essential qualification for the ministry; as indeed it forms the great distinction between the true Christian, and all other men in the world. To the spiritual man, every successive service will yield renewed satisfaction; and he will be unwearied, and always abounding and delighting in the work of the Lord; being never so happy, as when employed for such a good Master, in so pleasant a service. With him the work itself, and the success of his labours, are the principal objects: the emolument or maintenance, (though he has a right to it, and perhaps cannot live without it,) is a very subordinate consideration: nor will he much regard whether he be called to take the lead, or whether he keep the charge of others who are placed over him, provided they do not bind his hands, or impede his usefulness. (Notes, 1 Tim. iii. 1-7. 1 Pet. v. 1-4.) These are "men of God:" may he supply his church with numbers of them, in the place of those hirelings, who have in all ages swarmed in the professing church, to the scandal of religion, and the ruin of their own souls! Such ministers as have been described, will be accepted and useful in the most obscure situations; and will subvert the interests of morality most effectually, as well as promote the spiritual worship of God through Jesus Christ. And should they leave their families in poverty and obscurity, after their decease: this circumstance will be a testimony before the world of their disinterestedness; and the Lord will surely provide for their wants, as far as is truly good for them. He advances, and he abases, as his infinite wisdom sees good, whatever may be our cares or desires. May we then seek and serve him uprightly, and leave all the rest to his disposal, by faith in his word, and resignation to his righteous will!

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIV. V. 1-4. (Notes, Lev. x. 1-5. Num. xviii. 7. Marg. Ref.) It may be supposed, that the house of Ithamar, in consequence of the sentence denounced against them in the days of Eli, had decreased in numbers and eminency, before Zadok was constituted high priest: (Notes, 1 Sam. ii. 30-36. iii. 11-14.) so that there were twice as many flourishing families, and principal persons, in the line of Eleazar, as in that of Ithamar.

V. 5. Governors, &c. Or, principal ministers in holy things, and rulers in behalf of God, or superior magistrates. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 6. The regulation of these courses of the priests was made by casting lots, before the king and all the chief persons in the land, in a most solemn manner; and a record was made of the transaction, to prevent any future contest. First, one household was taken of Eleazar's race, and then one of Ithamar's, till sixteen had been completed; after which, the remaining eight of Eleazar's sons were arranged according to the order in which their lots came forth.

V. 7. It was thought, by the Jews in after ages, a great honour to be descended from Jehoiarib. The Maccabees were descended from him;

CHAP. XXV.

16 The nineteenth to Pethahiah, the twentieth to Jehezekel,

17 The one and twentieth to Jachin, the two and twentieth to Gamul, 18 The three and twentieth to Delaiah, the four and twentieth to Maaziah.

19 These were the orderings of them in their service to come into the house of the LORD, according to their manner, under Aaron their father, as the LORD God of Israel had commanded him.

20 ¶ And the rest of the sons of Levi were these: Of the sons of Amram, Shubael: of the sons of Shubael, Jehdeiah.

21 Concerning Rehahiah: of the sons of Rehahiah, the first was Isshiah.

22 Of the Izharites, Shelomoth: of the sons of Shelomoth, Jahath.

23 And the sons of Hebron; Jeriah the first, Amariah the second, Jahaziel the third, Jekameam the fourth.

24 Of the sons of Uzziel; Michah: of the sons of Michah; Shamir.

25 The brother of Michah was Isshiah: of the sons of Isshiah; Zechariah.

26 ¶ The sons of Merari were, Mahli, and Mushi: she sons of Jaaziah; Beno.

27 The sons of Merari by Jaaziah; Beno, and Shoham, and Zaccur, and Ithri.

28 Of Mahli came Eleazar, who had no sons.

29 Concerning Kish: the son of Kish was Jerahmeel.

30 The sons also of Mushi; Mahli, and Eder, and Jerimoth. These were the sons of the Levites after the house of their fathers.

31 These likewise cast lots over against their brethren the sons of Aaron in the presence of David the king, and Zadok, and Ahimelech, and the chief of the fathers of the priests and Levites, even the principal fathers over against their younger brethren.

The names and offices of the principal singers and musicians, 1—7. They are divided by lot into twenty-four courses, 8—31.

MOREOVER, David and the captains of the host separated to the service, of the sons of Asaph, and of Heman, and of Jeduthun, who should prophesy with harps, with psalteries, and with cymbals: and the number of the workmen according to their service was:

2 Of the sons of Asaph; Zaccur, and Joseph, and Nethaniah, and Asarelah, the sons of Asaph under the hands of Asaph, which prophesied according to the order of the king.

3 Of Jeduthun: the sons of Jeduthun; Gedaliah, and Zeri, and Jeshaiiah, Hashabiah, and Mattithiah, six, under the hands of their father Jeduthun, who prophesied with a harp, to give thanks and to praise the LORD.

4 Of Heman: the sons of Heman; Bukkiah, Mattaniah, Uzziel, Shebuel, and Jerimoth, Hananiah, Hanani, Eliathah, Giddalti, and Romamti-ezer, Joshbekashah, Mallothi, Hothir, and Mahazioth.

5 All these were the sons of Heman, the king's seer in the words of God, to lift up the horn. And God gave to Heman fourteen sons and three daughters.

6 All these were under the hands of their father for song in the house of the LORD, with cymbals, psalteries, and harps, for the service of the house of God, according to the king's order to Asaph, Jeduthun, and Heman.

7 So the number of them, with their brethren, that were instructed in the songs of the LORD, even all that were cunning, was two hundred fourscore and eight.

8 ¶ And they cast lots ward against ward, as well the small as the great, the teacher as the scholar.

9 Now the first lot came forth for Asaph to Joseph: the second to Gedaliah, who with his brethren and sons were twelve:

domineer over the others. Thus, in Jesus Christ, there is neither male nor female, bond nor free; but all believers are one in him, being children of God, fellow-heirs of eternal life, and brethren to each other. May they all on earth emulate that love, peace, and harmony, which will subsist in the heavenly world!

NOTES.

CHAP. XXV. V. 1—6. "The captains of the host," (1.) seem to mean the leaders, or heads, of the several courses of the priests and Levites.—Jeduthun either was the same person, who was before called Ethan; or Ethan was dead, and Jeduthun succeeded him.—The word prophesy, in this place, seems to mean no more, than praising God by singing inspired prophetic hymns, with great earnestness and devout affections, under the influences of the Holy Spirit. As the prophets in Samuel's days used music and singing; it hath been conjectured, that he first introduced them into the regular worship of Israel, and that David reduced to order what he found already established. (Note, ix. 22.)—These persons are said to have prophesied according "to the order of the king;" because he instituted the order of their services.—Only five sons of Jeduthun are here named; but Shimei, afterwards mentioned, is supposed to have been the sixth. (17.) Perhaps, though, as Jeduthun's son, he was chosen to be the head of one course; he was at this time young, and not fit for present service.—Heman seems to have been a prophet, or seer, in the common acceptation, and was much consulted by David: "he lifted up the horn," or presided, over those who used wind-instruments of music. (Notes, vi. 33. 39. ix. 33. xvi. 87—43. xxiii. 3—6. Marg. Ref.)

V. 7. These two hundred and eighty-eight, being twenty-four courses of twelve each, were more skilful than the other Levites; and being placed under the twenty-four sons of the chief singers, they had the four thousand before mentioned divided among them, to officiate by courses, according to their instructions.

V. 8. Even among the twenty-four leaders, some were more expert than others; some were teachers, and others scholars; but every one was taken by the solemn casting of lots, without any regard to these distinctions. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 9—31. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The Lord is in himself exalted far above all blessing and praise, and our obligations to him are infinite: we ought therefore to give him thanks, and to praise him, with our noblest powers; and to render every kind and degree of (1 Mac. ii. 54;) and Josephus thought himself noble, because he sprung from the first of these twenty-four courses.

V. 10. Abijah. The courses of the priests, established by David, were continued, with some alterations, till the days of Christ: these records must therefore have been very useful to the Jews, after their return from the Babylonish captivity. (Note, Luke i. 7—9. Marg. Ref.)

V. 19. Under Aaron. All the priests were considered as Aaron's successors, and as filling up his place, in whose person the whole priesthood was originally vested, and from whom it was derived to his posterity.—These arrangements having been made by David, acting under the Divine direction, and according to the commandment given by Moses concerning the priesthood; the courses of the priests attended, each during one week at a time, for the ordinary services; though at the great festivals, and on other public occasions, numbers of the rest would be present and assist.

V. 20—30. (Marg. Ref.) These persons seem to have been the heads of those twenty-four thousand Levites, who in twenty-four courses waited on the priests in their ministrations. (xxiii. 4.)

V. 31. The principal, &c. The whole company being ranged, according to their families, into the proper number of divisions, the order of their courses was assigned them by lot, without respect to rank or seniority.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The Lord will certainly perform all his promises and threatenings; and if they do not take effect suddenly, and with observation, they will do it gradually and silently.—Sin ruins men's characters, comforts, and families; and will destroy the immortal souls of all those, who do not obtain salvation by faith in Jesus Christ.—In all cases we ought to act with exact impartiality, as far as we are able: and when human prudence fails of discerning a reason of preference, where it must be given; it is right, in one way or other, to refer the determination to the Lord.—Much wisdom and equity is requisite to exclude occasions of envy, jealousy, and contention, in the regulation of public affairs, where numbers are concerned; but what is done fairly and openly, and in the fear of God, is placed upon the most permanent basis.—The solemn appointment and orderly attendance of ministers is of considerable importance; but they are all under the hand of Jesus, from whom they receive their commission and instructions, as well as their qualifications; and to whom they are all accountable.—Difference of age, learning, piety, reputation, and other circumstances, gives external precedence to some ministers; but they are all brethren, and none ought to

2 And the sons of Meshelemiah were, Zechariah the first-born, Jediahel the second, Zebadiah the third, Jathniel the fourth,

3 Elam the fifth, Jehohanan the sixth, Elioenai the seventh.

4 Moreover the sons of ^eObed-edom were, Shemaiah the first-born, Jehozabad the second, Joah the third, and Sacar the fourth, and Nethaneel the fifth,

5 Ammiel the sixth, Issachar the seventh, Peulthai the eighth: for ^f'God blessed ^g*him.

6 Also unto Shemaiah his son were sons born, that ruled throughout the house of their father: for they were ^h'mighty men of valour.

7 The sons of Shemaiah; Othni, and Rephael, and Obed, Elzabad, whose brethren were strong men, Elihu, and Semachiah.

8 All these of the sons of Obed-edom: they and their sons and their brethren, able men for strength for the service, were threescore and two of Obed-edom.

9 And ⁱ'Meshelemiah had sons and brethren, strong men, eighteen.

10 Also ^j'Hosah, of the children of Merari, had sons: Simri the chief, (for though he was not the first-born, yet ^k'his father made him the chief;)

11 Hilkiath the second, Tebaliah the third, Zechariah the fourth: all the sons and brethren of Hosah were thirteen.

12 Among these were the divisions of the porters, even among the chief men, having ^l'wards one against another, to minister in the house of the LORD.

13 ^m¶ And they cast lots, ⁿ'as well the small as the great, according to the house of their fathers, for every gate.

14 And the lot eastward fell to ^o'Shelemiah. Then for ^p'Zechariah his son (a wise counsellor,) they cast lots; and his lot came out northward.

15 To Obed-edom southward; and to his sons, the house of ^q'Asuppim.

16 To Shuppim and ^r'Hosah the lot came forth westward, with the gate Shallecheth, by the ^s'causeway of the going up, ^t'ward against ward.

17 ^u'Eastward were six Levites, northward four a day, southward four a day, and toward Asuppim two and two.

18 At Parbar westward, four at the causeway, and two at Parbar.

19 These are the divisions of the porters among the sons of ^v'Kore, and among the sons of Merari.

20 ^w¶ And of the Levites, Ahijah was over the ^x'treasures of the house of God, and over the treasures of the ^y'dedicated things.

capacity, ingenuity, or skill, which we possess, subservient to that highest end: but especially our best and most lively affections are his due. Every part of his service is delightful, in proportion as we are properly disposed: yet we should apply our minds to instruction, that we may become "workmen that need not be ashamed," as capable of performing our several duties with propriety and readiness.—Human prudence must regulate certain circumstances relative to religious worship; and every society, larger or smaller, should order such matters for themselves, to the best of their judgment: but unless the Spirit of God put life and fervour into our devotions, they will, however appointed, be a lifeless, worthless form.—We should all be ready to give, or to receive, instructions, without self-preference, or accounting ourselves degraded: for in God's sight the teachable scholar is nearly as honourable as the able instructor.—It is pleasant to receive all our temporal and domestic comforts, as given unto us of God, and then to devote them all to his service: and it is a singular mercy to have a large family, all employed and accepted by him. But whether our children and connexions be few or many, may we and they all be his, and meet in his temple above, to sing his praises for ever! Whatever Providence may allot us here, may this be the lot and portion of our inheritance hereafter!

NOTES.

CHAP. XXVI. V. 4, 5. The numerous and prosperous family of Obed-edom was the effect of the Divine blessing, by which his reverential regard to the ark was recompensed. (Notes, 2 Sam. vi. 10—13.)

V. 6—12. (Marg. Ref.) Mighty men, &c. (6.) The porters, and treasurers of the temple had occasion for strength and valour, both to oppose such as improperly attempted to enter the courts or sanctuary, or to raise any disturbance there; and also to guard the sacred treasures of money, vessels, flour, frankincense, wine, and oil, there deposited, and of which some of them were appointed to keep an account. (20. Notes, xii. 27—29.)—Josephus speaks of the gates of the temple being so massy, as to require twenty persons to open or shut them: this too would find employment for the strength of the porters. The temple indeed was not yet built; but David had received from the Lord a pattern of what it was to be, and he arranged every thing with reference to it. (Notes, xxviii. 11—18.)—It is supposed, that the families of the Levites succeeded to the lot assigned to their fathers, whether as singers, porters, &c. from one generation to another, without passing from one company to another.

V. 13. And they, &c. The porters seem to have been divided into courses by a different method than the other Levites. The different families, or divisions, of them cast lots, at which gates they should keep ward: and then the individuals of those divisions attended in rotation; but whether their order of succession was determined by lot, or by agreement, it does not appear.

V. 14. A wise, &c. It seems that Zechariah was, for his wisdom, preferred to be the king's counsellor. The office of porter in the temple was a place of great trust, and therefore honourable.

V. 15. "Asuppim" signifying gatherings; it is supposed, that the house of Asuppim was a building erected to contain the collections made for the service of the sanctuary.

21 As concerning the sons of "Laadan; the sons of the Gershonite Laadan, chief fathers, even of Laadan the Gershonite, were "Jehieli.

22 The sons of Jehieli; Zetham, and Joel his brother, which were "over the treasures of the house of the LORD.

23 Of the "Amramites, and the Izharites, the Hebronites, and the Uzzielites:

24 And "Shebuel the son of Gershom, the son of Moses, was ruler of the treasures.

25 And his brethren by "Eliezer; "Rehabiah his son, and Jeshaiab his son, and Joram his son, and Zichri his son, and "Shelomith his son:

26 Which Shelomith and his brethren were "over all the treasures of the dedicated things, which David the king, and the chief fathers, the captains over thousands and hundreds, and the captains of the host, had dedicated.

27 Out of the "spoils won in battles did they dedicate, "to maintain the house of the LORD.

28 And all that "Samuel the seer, and Saul the son of Kish, and "Abner the son of Ner, and "Joab the son of Zeruiah, had dedicated; and whosoever had dedicated any thing, it was under the hand of Shelomith and of his brethren.

29 ¶ Of the "Izharites, Chenaniah and his sons were for "the outward business over Israel, for "officers and judges.

30 And of the "Hebronites, Hashabiah and his brethren, men of valour, a thousand and seven hundred, were "officers among them of Israel on this side Jordan westward, in all the business of the LORD, and in the service of the king.

31 Among the Hebronites was "Jerijah the chief, even among the Hebronites, according to the generations of his fathers. In the "fortieth year of the reign of David they were sought for, and there were found among them mighty men of valour at "Jazer of Gilead.

things.—Wisdom, courage, strength of faith, holy affections, and constancy of mind in our duty, are requisite for every station. But they, who minister in the house of the Lord, and are required, without respect of persons, to prevent the profanation of holy things, have peculiar need of these qualifications. They are the porters of the spiritual house, and the stewards of the mysteries of God; a charge is committed to their trust, infinitely more valuable than all the treasures of the temple; and they need to be watchful and faithful. (Notes, Matt. xxiv. 45-51. Mark xiii. 33-37. Luke xi. 35-46. 1 Cor. iv. 1-5.) Their office requires them rightly to divide the word of truth, and to administer divine ordinances according to it; that the hungry souls may be fed and feasted from the provisions of the Lord's house; and that he may be glorified by their spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to him through Jesus Christ. Great integrity, firmness, and discretion are necessary to do this, according to the mind of the great Master of the family, and to prevent abuses, and prostitution of sacred ordinances to secular purposes by ungodly men. From these sacred treasures, the unsearchable riches of Christ, all our wants are supplied: but receiving from his fulness, and being victorious over our enemies by his grace, we must give him the glory, and endeavour to dispose of the whole of our abilities and substance according to his will; allotting a proportion to maintain the expense of his worship, as well as to provide for the poor. Many unbelievers, however, join in these external services, and we must not in any wise rest our hopes on them.—The work of the minister requires the whole man: internal renovation is immediately its object; and the outward business of external order in society properly belongs to the magistrate. These services are therefore best preserved distinct; yet particular circumstances may warrant exceptions. However, both magistrates and ministers should concur in leading people, by different means, to fear God, and honour the king, and to do justice and shew kindness to their brethren.—It is very wrong for able men to get out of the way, when their help is wanted; but they should be sought out, and set to work: and as our end approaches, we should be more earnest to render our last services to mankind.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXVII. V. 1-15. When David was not actually engaged in war, twenty-four thousand men seem to have been continually kept under military discipline. These were exchanged every month for others; so that two hundred and eighty-eight thousand men were, every year, exercised as a regular militia; but they were not kept from their other engagements, more than a month at one time. These were mustered from all the tribes of Israel, under commanders, called "captains of the companies that ministered to the king by

V. 16-23. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 24-27. These are the only persons among the descendants of Moses, who are mentioned, as appointed to any office of honour and distinction. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 28. Samuel, &c. It had been customary from the time of Abraham, (Notes, Gen. xiv. 8-20. xxviii. 20-22;) and probably from the beginning of the world,) for persons to dedicate a portion of their gains to the service of God, as an acknowledgment that all came from him: but it is uncertain whether Samuel, or the other persons here mentioned, had an expectation of a temple being built, for which they desired to make preparation.

V. 29. The outward business, &c. These Levites seem not to have performed any service within the sanctuary: and their employment on that account is called "the outward business." In general, it may be supposed, that, as well as the other Levites, they were expected to be instructors of the people in the law of God; and in particular they were made magistrates of different orders, to administer justice to the people. As the Levites were more numerous than could be employed in the sanctuary, and as they ought to be, and had opportunities of being better acquainted with the law than the other Israelites; they were appointed to this service, along with the elders of every tribe. From these, the scribes, lawyers, doctors of the law, mentioned in the New Testament, seem to have arisen. As the office of the magistracy reaches only to the regulation of the outward conduct, whilst the ministry of the word forms the means of regulating the affections of the heart; the former may in this sense also be called the outward business. The lawyers before mentioned made the whole of religion a mere outward business; and they have always had abundance of disciples in this respect. (Notes, Matt. xxiii. 25-28. Luke xi. 37-41.)

V. 30-32. Hebron was first assigned to the priests, but it was afterwards occupied by Levites, perhaps as tenants whilst the priests were but few. (Note, Josh. xxi. 11, 12.) The Levites here mentioned, lived there, till they acquired the name of Hebronites, and then removed over Jordan into the land of Gilead. But being sought out, they were appointed judges, on each side Jordan, in two divisions: though the larger proportion was assigned to those who lived east of that river; perhaps because, being more remote from the sanctuary and the seat of government, they needed more attention to keep them to their duty, both to God and to the king. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The blessing of God renders individuals happy and families flourishing: and they, who have been faithful in a little, will be made rulers over many

26 And over them that did the work of the field for tillage of the ground was Ezri the son of Chelub:

27 And over the vineyards was Shimei the Ramathite; over the increase of the vineyards for the wine-cellar was Zabdi the Shiphamite:

28 And over the olive-trees and the sycamore-trees that were in the low plains, was Baal-hanan the Gederite: and over the cellars of oil was Joash.

29 And over the herds that fed in Sharon was Shitrai the Sharonite: and over the herds that were in the valleys, was Shaphat the son of Adlai:

30 Over the camels also was Obil the Ishmaelite: and over the asses was Jehdeiah the Meronothite:

31 And over the flocks was Jaziz the Hagarite. All these were the rulers of the substance which was king David's.

32 Also Jonathan David's uncle was a counsellor, a wise man, and a scribe: and Jehiel the son of Hachmoni was with the king's sons:

33 And Ahithophel was the king's counsellor; and Hushai the Archite was the king's companion:

34 And after Ahithophel was Jehoiada the son of Benaiah, and Abiathar: and the general of the king's army was Joab.

CHAP. XXVIII.

David assembles the chiefs of Israel: shows them how his purpose of building a temple had been disallowed, and relates the Lord's special favour to him; and his promises to Solomon, 1—8. He charges Solomon to serve God, and to build the temple, 9, 10. He gives a pattern for the form, (as God had shewed it to him,) and gold and silver for the materials, 11—19. He encourages Solomon with the assurance of help, both from God, and his people, 20, 21.

AND David assembled all the princes of Israel, the princes of the tribes, and the captains of the companies that ministered to the king by course, and the captains over the thousands, and captains over the hundreds, and the stewards over all the substance and possession of the king, and of his sons, with the officers, and with the mighty men, and with all the valiant men, unto Jerusalem.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The prudent management of secular affairs subverts the interests of godliness; provided it be kept in its proper place, and the favour and glory of God have a decided preference. In the kingdoms of this world, habitual readiness for war forms a better security of peace, than any treaties or alliances: in like manner, nothing so much encourages Satan's assaults, as our unwatchfulness; and while we stand armed with the whole armour of God, in the exercise of faith and preparation of heart for the conflict, we shall certainly be safe, and probably enjoy inward peace.—When we have exposed ourselves to wrath and chastening for our sins, we ought humbly to confess them and to desist from them: this will not make atonement for our crimes; but it prepares us for receiving the atonement made by the Saviour, and making suitable returns for it.—Usefulness is the proper standard of valueableness: and he who estimates by this rule, will give the word of God, the salvation of Christ, and true religion, a decided preference to all other things; because infinitely more useful.—Well-chosen counsellors prove the wisdom of princes: yet, some will be found wise men and scribes, and eminent for worldly policy and plausibility, who are in fact very wicked characters.—But the faithful, the upright, and godly, should be our friends and chosen companions; and no king will be well advised in all things, or in those of the greatest importance, who doth not make the testimonies of God "his delight and his counsellors," however he may be surrounded by powerful family-connexions, faithful friends, and able politicians.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXVIII. V. 1. This transaction seems to have occurred in the time of David's last sickness, which, notwithstanding remissions, he was aware would terminate in death. He therefore summoned the several descriptions of men, which were mentioned in the preceding chapter; and which formed a convention of the states, or representatives of the people: that he might declare to them the will of God as revealed to him, and engage them to a hearty concurrence in those public measures, which, in obedience to that will, he had resolved on. (Notes, xxvii.)—Many of the chief priests and Levites generally resided with David at Jerusalem; but it is not expressly said, that they were present on this occasion.

course," (xxviii. 1.) These were always of the same tribe: but the inferior officers were from among themselves. All the twelve captains are named amongst David's mighty men. (xi. 10—47. 2 Sam. xxiii. 8—39. Marg. Ref.)—The word translated priest, and applied to Benaiah, evidently means, and should be rendered, ruler.—Asahel, whom Abner slew, is numbered among these captains, and upon his death, his son succeeded him: hence we learn, that this order was at least begun to be established before David ruled over the whole land. (Note, 2 Sam. ii. 18—23.)—Joab was the commander in chief. (34.)

V. 16—22. These persons, called "the princes of the tribes," (xxviii. 1;) seem to have been civil rulers over their several tribes, not entirely unlike the lord-lieutenants of counties in England.—Gad and Ashur are not mentioned, probably because they were joined to their neighbouring tribes. Elihu, or Eliab, was David's elder brother. The son of Abner was, probably, advanced upon his father's death, as an expression of David's unfeigned concern for that event. (Notes, 2 Sam. iii. 27—39.)

V. 23, 24. It seems probable, from this passage, that Joab began, by David's order, to number the children, as well as the grown men, but was prevented from finishing the account. (Notes, 2 Sam. xxiv. 1—9.) The numbering of the effective men might have been deemed politically expedient: but ostentation alone could dictate the numbering of minors and infants; especially as God had pronounced the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, innumerable. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 25—31. This account mentions only such persons, as filled up needful or useful stations; not any superfluous officers, retained merely to make a shew of magnificence. Luxury, ambition, and venality have multiplied these attendants on courts; and selfish opposers will so impede the most unexceptionable measures of government, in limited monarchies, that without a number of retainers whose interest it is to support the crown, the public business must move heavily, if it could at all proceed. Yet ancient simplicity was preferable to modern refinement; and the useful productions of the earth, to all the devices of luxury and indulgence. (Notes, 1 Kings iv. 2—19. 2 Chr. xxvi. 10.)—These officers are called "the stewards over all the substance and possessions of the king," (xxviii. 1.)

2 Then David the king ⁵stood up upon his feet, and said, Hear me, ⁶my brethren, and my people: ⁷As for me, I had in mine heart to build an house of ⁸rest for the ark of the covenant of the LORD, and for ⁹the footstool of our God, and ¹⁰had made ready for the building:

3 But God said unto me, "Thou shalt not build an house for my name, because thou ¹¹hast been a man of war, and hast shed ¹²blood."

4 Howbeit the LORD God of Israel ¹³chose me before all the house of my father, to be king over Israel for ever: for he hath ¹⁴chosen Judah to be the ruler; and of ¹⁵the house of Judah, the house of my father; and ¹⁶among the sons of my father, he liked me to make ¹⁷me king over all Israel:

5 And of ¹⁸all my sons, (for the LORD hath given me many sons,) ¹⁹he hath chosen Solomon my son ²⁰to sit upon the throne of the kingdom of the LORD over Israel.

6 And he said unto me, Solomon thy son, ²¹he shall build my house and my courts: for ²²I have chosen him to be my son, and I will be his father.

7 Moreover ²³I will establish his kingdom for ever, ²⁴if he be ²⁵constant to do my commandments and my judgments, ²⁶as at this day.

8 Now therefore ²⁷in the sight of all Israel, the congregation of the LORD, and ²⁸in the audience of our God, ²⁹keep and seek for all the commandments of

V. 2. David, finding himself able, and being animated by the solemn occasion, stood up on his feet, to express his earnestness in this address, and his affection and respect for the people; and especially as intending to honour the Lord, by whose authority and commission he spake. Moses and Joshua had, just before their death, assembled the people for similar purposes. (Deut. xxxi. 28-30. Notes, Deut. xxxii. 45-52. xxxiv. 1-4. Josh. xxiii. xxiv.) David used the most endearing language in this parting interview, begging their attention, as his "brethren and his people."—The ark is here called "the footstool of our God." Heaven, where the Lord unveils his glories, is his throne; the earth is his footstool; and the place of the ark was, as it were, the centre of that footstool, where the gracious presence of God on earth was chiefly displayed, and before and toward which all his people worshipped. That is, permanently in his posterity, and to the end of the world, yea, to eternity, in Christ, of whom David and Solomon were remarkable types.—It was not known till David's time, from which family in Judah the Messiah would descend.

V. 7, 8. David had committed several great transgressions, and he every where speaks the language of conscious sinfulness. Yet the people had been preserved from idolatry, and retained in the worship and service of God, during his whole reign; and at this time they, as well as Solomon, appeared well disposed to true religion. If therefore they continued constant, "as at that day," to keep the Lord's commandments and judgments; their national covenant remaining unviolated, would secure their possession of Canaan and other important advantages. Yet they were exhorted not only to "keep," but "to seek for, all the commandments of the Lord;" that they might know them more exactly, and perform them more entirely. David therefore exhorted the princes to engage themselves to this, as "in the sight of all Israel, even the congregation of the Lord;" and as in audience of their God, who was especially in that solemn assembly: that they might be the more impressed, and that their example might have a salutary effect on others also.

V. 9. The being and perfections of God are made known by his works, and by his word: and we ought diligently to seek the knowledge of him from both these sources. That discovery of some of the Divine perfections, which may be made by studying the works of creation and providence, may be naturally delightful to man; because it gratifies his love of knowledge, and excites his surprise, without affronting his pride, alarming his conscience, or offending his prejudices. But revelation gives us the whole character of God, as connected with his natural perfections and mysterious subsistence: and this not only in plain declarations, but in an historical and prophetic view of his providential government of the universe; in his holy law, "the ministration of condemnation," and in his blessed gospel, "the ministration of righteousness and of the Spirit." (Note, 2 Cor. iii. 7-11.) This knowledge of God, the natural man cannot receive. (Note, 1 Cor. ii. 14-16.) It implies the infinite justice and holiness of God, and the entire apostasy, rebellion, pollution, and misery of man; and shews every person on earth to be a criminal condemned to everlasting punishment, from which he cannot be delivered, except by the unmerited mercy of the Father, through the atonement of the Son, and by the sanctification of the Holy Spirit. All men therefore oppose, neglect, or pervert this knowledge of God, except as they are taught by him. Some notions of these things may be attained by an unhumiliated sinner: but he sees them not as they really are, according to their nature and value; and his ideas no more agree to the true meaning of his own words, than the words of a man born blind do to his ideas, when he speaks about light and colours. This knowledge therefore will have no effect, unless a bad one, on the state of his heart, and the conduct of his life. But where God is truly known, he is also feared, believed, trusted, loved, worshipped, and obeyed, in proportion to that knowledge. Self-abasement, hatred of sin, indifference about worldly objects, and general benevolence, from the purest principles, will uniformly attend, and grow with it; and all true religion may be resolved into it. (Notes, Ps. ix. 10-12. xci. 14-16. Jer. xxiv. 7. xxxi. 33, 34. Matt. xi. 27. John xvii. 1-3. 2 Cor. iv. 3-6.) This knowledge of God is received by faith simply crediting "the testimony of God," and diligently appropriating the information which he communicates in Scripture. As far as acquired, it regulates the understanding, judgment, conscience, will, affections, and all the powers and operations of the soul; and consequently, all the intentions, dispositions, words, and actions. It brings a man acquainted with God in Christ, as a father and friend, in a way of experience and communion. It discovers what we may expect from him, and what he must approve, or abhor in us; and consequently what is requisite to his honourably saving sinners, and to our being capable of happiness in his favour and service. Thus we learn the inestimable value of the Saviour's atonement, and of the sanctification of the Holy Ghost, and are influenced to walk conscientiously in all his ordinances and commandments. It brings a sinner to his proper place at the foot of the cross, and prostrate before the mercy-seat of a forgiving God, as a poor helpless worthless worm, an ignorant child, a poor suppliant, a condemned criminal, deserving nothing but wrath, yet expecting every thing needful or desirable from the infinitely free mercy and grace of God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ. Having been forgiven much, and receiving much, the pardoned sinner learns to love much: and experiencing the blessed effects of this knowledge of God on his own soul, he declares its excellency to others, that they too may seek and find so inestimable a treasure.—Thus David had known the Lord; and having for many years feared, trusted, loved, and worshipped him, he was about to remove to that better world, where knowledge, holiness, love, and felicity are perfected: but before he went, he desired to give it, as his parting counsel to his beloved Solomon, to cultivate the acquaintance of so kind, merciful, faithful, and powerful a friend; (Note, Job xxii. 21-30;) and to serve him with a perfect heart and a willing mind, or inward delight. But he also reminded him at the same time of the Lord's heart-searching knowledge, and of his justice and holiness, as well as of his mercy. (Marg. Ref.) A formal service therefore would not profit: if he sought God in a proper manner, he would be found of him; but if he finally renounced his service, he would "cast him off for ever," notwithstanding all his former kindness to him. (10.)

V. 11-13. David was divinely instructed, either by immediate revelation, or by some prophet, (perhaps Nathan,) in what form the temple was to be built, and how to regulate every thing respecting it, and its chambers, courts, and treasuries. (Notes, ix. 22. xv. 16. xvi. 1-3. xxiii. -xxvi.) "The LORD made him understand it in writing by his hand upon him." (19.) And in what way soever this writing was made and sent to him, he gave it to Solomon just before his death; so that nothing was left even to "the wisdom of Solomon," but all was done by rule, even to the quantity of metal used in each vessel. Moses had been instructed in the same manner in erecting the tabernacle. For both house of the LORD, and for all the vessels of service in the house of the LORD.

14 He gave of gold by weight for things of gold, for all instruments of all manner of service; silver also for all instruments of silver by weight, for all instruments of every kind of service:

15 Even the weight for the candlesticks of gold, and for their lamps of gold, by weight for every candlestick, and for the lamps thereof; and for the candlesticks of silver by weight, both for the candlestick, and also for the lamps thereof, according to the use of every candlestick.

16 And by weight he gave gold for the tables of shew-bread, for every table; and likewise silver for the tables of silver:

17 Also pure gold for the fleshhooks, and the bowls, and the cups: and for the golden basons he gave gold by weight for every bason; and likewise silver by weight for every bason of silver;

18 And for the altar of incense refined gold by weight; and gold for the pattern of the chariot of the cherubims, that spread out their wings, and covered the ark of the covenant of the LORD.

19 All this, said David, the LORD made me understand in writing 'by his hand upon me, even all the works of this pattern.

20 ¶ And David said to Solomon his son, "Be strong, and of good courage, and do it: fear not, nor be dismayed: for the LORD God, even my God, will be with thee: he will not fail thee, nor forsake thee, until thou hast finished all the work for the service of the house of the LORD."

21 And, behold, the courses of the priests and the Levites, even they shall be with thee for all the service of the house of God: and there shall be with thee, for all manner of workmanship, every willing skilful man, for any manner of service: also the princes and all the people will be wholly at thy commandment.

CHAP. XXIX.

David shews the princes and people what he had prepared for the building and service of the temple, 1-5. After his example they offer liberally, 6-9. He adores and blesses God, and prays for the people and for Solomon, 10-19. The people worship, sacrifice, and feast with joy; and then make Solomon king the second time, 20-22. He reigns in majesty and prosperity, 23-25. David's long and prosperous reign, and happy death, 26-30.

FURTHERMORE, David the king said unto all the congregation, Solomon my son, whom alone God hath chosen, is yet young and tender, and the work is great: for the palace is not for man, but for the LORD God.

usefulness: he was pleased to make us Christians, or ministers, and to employ us in various ways; but he does not generally acquaint us with the reason of it. Happy are they, whom he hath "chosen in Christ," "to the adoption of children unto himself, according to the good pleasure of his will;" (Note, Eph. i. 3-8:) from their almighty Father they will "receive a kingdom that cannot be moved," and he will establish it to them for ever. This their privilege will appear by their constancy in keeping his commandments, and doing their proper work in his church, after the example, and by the grace, of the Saviour. Let us then, "give diligence to make our calling and election sure;" and, as in the presence of God, and in the sight of his people, let us "seek out that we may do all his commandments," sincerely, unreservedly, and in humble imitation of our perfect pattern. Let us seek the knowledge of God, as the most valuable of all treasures; and acquaint ourselves with him, as the God of all those who, "through faith and patience inherit the promises." Let us seek grace from him by earnest prayer, that we may serve him with an upright, undivided heart, and a willing cheerful mind. Let us beware of hypocrisy; "for the Lord searcheth all hearts, and understandeth all the imaginations of our thoughts." Let us fear coming short, growing negligent, or turning aside; for, "if we forsake him, he will cast us off for ever." But let us hope also in his mercy; for, if we seek him, he will be found of us: and we shall be strong to do our work, shall live in some measure in possession of our privileges, and may hope to leave them for an inheritance to our children. In this "fear of the Lord, there is strong confidence;" and, by attaining to an assurance that we are his people, we may be assured also that he will not fail us, nor forsake us; we may then bid defiance to all our enemies, and be of good courage in the prospect of difficulties and dangers.

V. 11-21. If the Lord employ us and be with us, he will raise us up helpers, both willing and skilful, as far as we want them: and thus he will carry us through our work, and, that being finished, will receive us unto himself.—Nobles, ministers, and people, should be wholly at the command of those rulers especially, who boldly endeavour to promote true religion; using their influence and authority to lead all their subjects to a willing attendance to things evidently scriptural, and of acknowledged excellency and importance.—But we should never forget that the whole contrivance, purchase, and revelation of salvation for sinners, are of the Lord: the way of access, the ministry of the gospel, the written word, the throne of grace, the public ordinances, the sacramental seals, and every thing pertaining to our reconciliation and walk with God, are from him, and may not be modelled by human authority. Even mere circumstances, which must be regulated by man's discretion, and in which every society has a right to judge for its willing members, are not to be imposed on our brethren: and we are accountable to God, though not to man, for that judgment and practice which we ourselves form and adopt. We should, therefore, in every thing be circumspect, and not leave the Scripture in any particular where it affords us directions; yet we should not endanger the peace of the church for the sake of minute external regulations. Hitherto much has been amiss in every age, in every state, and in every division of the church: ere long, our Prince of peace, the builder of the true temple, the Son of God, will come, and set all right. In the mean time let us judge for ourselves, and bear with each other; let us cease from self-confident boastings, and acrimonious controversies; and, in our several places, let us endeavour to serve God, and to help one another, and to promote the common cause of truth and holiness.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIX. V. 1. Whom alone God, &c. David, by this expression, declared that God had chosen Solomon in preference to the rest of his sons; and that this was the sole reason of his succession to the throne, and not any partial affection of his own towards him. This would tend to satisfy the people, and to induce David's other sons to submit to the Divine appointment. (Notes, xxii. 2-10.)

the tabernacle and temple were typical of Christ, and heavenly things. (Note, Ex. xxv. 9.)—In vain do men of opposite sentiments contend for such uniformity in the circumstances of our worship, under the New Testament; seeing it is evident, that exact, precise, and express rules are no where to be found, in respect of every particular.—It is, however, most evident, that, to model divine ordinances according to man's imagination, would have been the height of presumption even in Solomon himself.

V. 15, 16. (Note, 1 Kings vii. 48-51.) The candlesticks of silver, and tables of silver, are not elsewhere mentioned, and it is not known to what use they were put. It seems there were in the temple several tables of gold for the shew-bread, and the vessels belonging to that part of the stated service. (Note, 2 Chr. iv. 19.)

V. 17. The word rendered basons, seems to be derived from the atonement made by the blood of the sacrifices, which was received into them till it was sprinkled. (Note, Num. vii. 13, 14.)

V. 18. Above the ark, between the cherubim, the glory of the Lord appeared as a mighty warrior riding in his chariot of war to the assistance of Israel his people. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ex. xxv. 10-21.) As the cherubim of gold made by Moses seem to have been joined to the mercy-seat, which covered the ark, it has been thought that Solomon was directed to make two additional cherubim, after the same pattern. These must, however, be distinguished from those made of olive-trees covered with gold. (Note, 1 Kings vi. 23-28.) And it is not absolutely certain, that, amidst the many removals of the ark which had taken place, the cherubim had not been separated from it, and whether Solomon did any thing more than make two others in the stead of them.

V. 20, 21. (Marg. Ref.) There appeared, in all the several orders of men, a promising disposition to harmony among themselves, and loyalty to their prince; and David foresaw that God would dispose them to cordial obedience to Solomon, though a younger brother, and in his youth.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-10. Whilst life continues, it is desirable to spend it in promoting the peace, prosperity, and spiritual good, of those who may remain behind. (Notes, Ec. ix. 10. 2 Pet. i. 12-15.)—To treat inferiors with condescending respect and affection, is the way to gain love, without losing any due honour; and to address subjects as rational creatures, shewing them the propriety and advantage of proposed measures, and persuading them to a willing concurrence, is far preferable to the exercise of despotic authority. Indeed, kings, and their meanest subjects, are all brethren in fallen Adam; and believers, on a throne or in a cottage, are all brethren in Jesus Christ, and should mutually seek each other's welfare.—In that monarchy, which God established in Israel, and sanctioned by his approbation, we see no traces of the unalterable right of primogeniture, or of ruling with absolute authority. Rather we perceive a resemblance of that limited, moderate, and equitable authority, which a kind Providence hath established over these kingdoms, for which we can never be sufficiently thankful, and for the continuance of which to our latest posterity, we should most fervently pray. The wickedness of man, indeed, and the experience of ages, have taught the friends of liberty to secure that blessing by many regulations which were not thought of, nor needful, in the happy days of "the man after God's own heart;" and prudence dictates the general expediency of hereditary succession. Yet surely the conduct of David at the beginning, in the middle, and at the close, of his reign, greatly resembled that of a British monarch meeting his parliament, and doing all things by their concurrence and assistance.—It may be comfortable to us in a dying hour, to recollect the plans which we had framed to promote true religion, though we have been unable to accomplish them: from hence we may infer, that we are the chosen and called of God; as such designs prove, that he hath given us a heart to account his service a delightful privilege, and to long and love to be employed in it. But, in the nature and measure of our services, we must learn acquiescence in His will, whose choice of us is the source of all our grace, comfort, or

2 Now ¹I have prepared ²with all my might for the house of my God: ³the gold for things to be made of gold, and the silver for things of silver, and the brass for things of brass, the iron for things of iron, and wood for things of wood; ⁴onyx-stones; and stones to be set, glistening stones, and of divers colours, and all manner of precious stones, and marble-stones in abundance.

3 Moreover, because ¹I have set my affection to the house of my God, ²I have of mine ³own proper good, of gold and silver, which I have given to the house of my God, ⁴over and above all that I have prepared for the holy house,

5 The gold for things of gold, and the silver for things of silver, and for all manner of work to be made by the hands of artificers. And ¹who then is willing to ²consecrate his service this day unto the LORD?

6 ¶ Then ¹the chief of the fathers and princes of the tribes of Israel, and the captains of thousands and of hundreds, with the rulers of the king's work, offered willingly,

7 And gave for the service of the house of God, of gold five thousand talents and ten thousand drams, and of silver ten thousand talents, and of brass eighteen thousand talents, and one hundred thousand talents of iron.

8 And they with whom precious stones were found gave them to the treasure of the house of the LORD, by the hand of ¹Jehiel the Gershonite.

9 Then the people rejoiced, for that ¹they offered willingly; because with ²perfect heart they offered willingly to the LORD; and ³David the king also rejoiced with great joy.

10 ¶ Wherefore ¹David blessed the LORD before all the congregation: and David said, ²"Blessed be thou, ³LORD God of Israel, ⁴our Father, for ever and ever.

11 Thine, O LORD, ¹'is the greatness, and the power, and the glory, and ²'the victory, and the ³'majesty: for

V. 2. The peculiar use made of the precious stones of various kinds, mentioned in this verse, in decorating the temple, or in adding to the magnificence of the service there performed, is not known. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 3-9. David seems to have dedicated a certain proportion of all his spoils and gains to God, before he considered the residue as his own; and this proportion constituted the treasure before spoken of, (xxii. 14;) but besides this, he gave, from his own treasury, about eighteen millions sterling of gold and silver. This he offered, not by constraint, or from ostentation, but because "he had set his affection to the house of his God," and thought he could never do enough towards promoting that good work. He was likewise desirous to see his subjects "abound in this grace also;" as they had been enriched by his victories, and never burdened with taxes; and he knew that it would be "fruit which would abound to their own account." Having set them the example, he only enquired who was willing to assist, and to consecrate his service unto the Lord, by contributing part of his wealth to that holy use; and immediately they offered about thirty millions of gold and silver, besides brass, iron, and precious stones; and instead of grudging the expense, the king and people all rejoiced together; for they were cordial in it, and offered willingly themselves, and rejoiced to see all the others offering with the same liberality.—The prosperity of Israel must have been immense under the reign of David; and it seems that there was also much true piety among the people, especially towards the close of his reign. We can scarcely form a conception of the magnificence of the temple, and adjacent edifices, about which such immense quantities of gold and silver were employed. (Note, Ez. xli. 22.) But "the unsearchable riches of Christ" excel the splendour of the temple, infinitely more than that surpassed the meanest cottage on earth.—The refined silver seems to have been used in covering the inner walls of the chambers and other out-buildings; for those of the temple itself were plated with gold. (1 Kings vi. 21, 22.)

V. 10-19. Instead of boasting of these extraordinary oblations, (Note, Num. xxiii. 4-6.) David gave solemn thanks to the Lord, with vast enlargement of heart and copiousness of expression.—"LORD God of Israel, our Father," may mean, either the 'God of our father Israel, or Jacob, (18;) or, JEHOVAH our Father, the God of Israel.' In this last view, the words may be considered as the first instance in Scripture of God being addressed in prayer ceived more humble, pure, evangelical, spiritual, devout, or exalted, than the praise, adoration, gratitude, confidence, love, zeal, and philanthropy, which it breathes throughout. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 20. David, having concluded his act of worship, called upon the people to bless the LORD with him; and when they had rendered their adoring praises to God, they performed obedience to their aged and pious king. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 21—25. Besides the burnt-offerings, which were entirely consumed on the altar, numerous peace-offerings were sacrificed, on the flesh of which the assembled multitudes joyfully feasted. (Notes, Deut. xii. 5—7. 1 Kings viii. 62. Neh. viii. 10—12.)—Solomon had been hastily, and by a few persons, anointed king, during Adonijah's usurpation; but he was at this time anointed in a more solemn and public manner. As Abiathar was removed from the high-priesthood, and Zadok substituted in his place, after David's death, it has been thought that the second anointing of Solomon was also subsequent to that event. (Note, 1 Kings ii. 26, 27.) He was anointed unto "the LORD to be the chief governor," and "he sat on the throne of the LORD." For the LORD was in an especial manner the King of Israel; the princes received their authority from him by peculiar designation; and they were expressly required to support his worship and law. They also were all types of Christ, who "sat down with his Father on his throne."—We may suppose that every kind of personal accomplishment united with justice, wisdom, and prosperity, in that royal majesty which the Lord bestowed upon Solomon, and by which he magnified him in the sight of all Israel. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 26—28. When we read the eleventh chapter of the second book of Samuel, and the sequel of that melancholy narration, we could scarcely have expected to behold David appear so illustrious in his closing scene, in which every thing heavenly and excellent is combined; and the people seem to have considered him with a veneration and affection which language fails to express. But his repentance had been as remarkable as his sins; and his conduct during his afflictions, and towards the end of his life, seems to have had more effect on his subjects, than all that they had before witnessed.—It is indeed hard to say, which shines the brightest in this chapter, the rising, or the setting sun: but it is better to rise behind clouds, and to be much obscured in the course of our lives, and to set, like David, with splendour, than, with Solomon, to rise very bright, and shine very splendidly, and then to set behind an almost impenetrable cloud. (Note, 1 Kings xi. 42, 43.)

V. 29, 30. It is plain from these verses, that the contemporary prophets were the historians, or annalists, of God's people; and that they left far more copious records of public transactions, both in respect of Israel and the adjacent countries, than have come down to us. (Note, 2 Sam. xxiv. 11.)—Learned men may indeed regret the loss of these histories; but "God knows better than we, what was most fit to be preserved for the use and benefit of the church." (Bp. Patrick.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—9. The due support and promotion of religion, is always more important, and, in many cases, more arduous, than the administration of civil government; because the honour of God, and the most essential interests of immortal souls, are concerned in it: compared with which, all other interests are trivial. They alone whom the Lord hath chosen for such a work, will prosper in it; and it is the duty of all, to assist by every proper means in their power.—Strong affection to God, and to all that relates to him for his sake, will constrain men to the most disinterested, self-denying, and liberal services; and they will never think that they have done, or can do, enough to promote his glory; but, with all their might, will be preparing for, and abounding in, every good work. (Note, 2 Cor. v. 13—15.)—They who would excite others to consecrate their service to the Lord, either in feeding his poor children, or in spreading his truth and supporting his worship, must set the example; and then a hint from them will go further than a laboured and eloquent oration from a man who persuades others to those things which he himself evidently does not practise.—Our holy joy in God will commonly bear proportion to the willingness, uprightness, and liberality, with which we devote our all to him; and that rejoicing is peculiarly pure and heavenly which springs from beholding those we love giving evidence of their real devotedness to God, and their delight in his ways. The bodily pain and infirmities of age, and the chilling in the sight of all Israel, and ^ubestowed upon him such royal majesty as had not been on any king before him in Israel.

26 ¶ Thus David the son of Jesse reigned ^vover all Israel.

27 And the time that he reigned over Israel was ^wforty years: seven years reigned he in Hebron, and ^xthirty and three years reigned he in Jerusalem.

28 And he died in ^ya good old age, ^zfull of days, ^{aa}riches, and honour: and Solomon his son reigned in his stead.

29 Now ^{ab}the acts of David the king, first and last, behold, they are written in the ^{ac}book of ^{ad}Samuel the seer, and in the book of ^{ae}Nathan the prophet, and in the book of ^{af}Gad the seer, hand of death, whilst they indispose us for all other enjoyments, or separate us from them, cannot preclude or extinguish this, which emulates that of angels, who "rejoice over one sinner that repenteth."

30 With all his reign and ^{ag}his might, and ^{ah}the times that went over him, and over Israel, and over all the kingdoms of the countries.

V. 10—19. They who are zealous for good works will never boast of them, or trust in them. Sensible of their indigence as creatures, and conscious of their guilt and defilement as sinners, they will allow that "it is of the LORD's mercies they are not consumed." To them it appears an unspeakable favour, that a holy God will accept any worship or service from such polluted creatures; they know that all their ability of every kind is from him; and they account it their chief pleasure, honour, and privilege, to be employed by Him, who needeth not, and cannot be profited by, their services. They are conscious that their best needs forgiveness, falls infinitely beneath his glorious majesty, and is utterly unworthy of His acceptance, "whose is the kingdom, and who is exalted as head above all." In like manner, we ought to acknowledge God in all spiritual things; referring every good thought, good purpose, good work, to his divine grace, from whom we receive it; beseeching him, as David does, to preserve it in us. (Bp. Patrick.) Thus our best and most useful works will terminate in admiration of his inconceivable majesty, goodness, power, and holiness; in unfeigned praises and thanksgivings, and in the deepest self-abasement before him. This is genuine grace; but when we are proud of our services, (which we are very prone to be,) what is it, but sacrilegiously to rob God of what belongs to him alone, and sacrifice it to the vilest of our own lusts? We may, indeed, "rejoice in the testimony of our consciences," when we have acted with "simplicity and godly sincerity," in the presence of that God who trieth the heart, and hath pleasure in uprightness; and should joyfully observe the indications of the same disposition in others: but we must remember that this also is the gift of God, and that we can no more offer the sacrifice of a broken or a thankful heart, than we can present ten thousands of bulls and goats, except as we give unto him his own, which he hath previously conferred upon us. All cometh from him, and to him belongeth "the kingdom, and the power, and the glory for ever."—Whilst we bless the Lord for putting good desires into our hearts, or the hearts of others, we should never forget to pray to him to keep and joining immediately with ineffable delight in the worship of angels. May we "die the death of the righteous, and may our latter end be like his!" Blessed be God, the chief of sinners may hope for such a glorious exit, when brought to repent, and to flee for refuge to the Saviour's atoning blood: nay, even they, who have grievously sinned, after a long profession of godliness, to the triumphing of the wicked, and their own severe correction, may possibly retrieve all; may have their broken bones made to rejoice, may recover "the joy of God's salvation;" may have their lips opened to shew forth his praises, "that sinners may be converted unto him;" and may regain the entire confidence of those, who had been the most stumbled by their fall. (Notes, Ps. li. title, 11—13.) But this cannot be done without deep humiliation before God and man, resigned patience under correction, and redoubled watchfulness and diligence in the Lord's ways. Let us then mark the difference between the spirit and character of the man after God's own heart, living and dying; and those of such worthless professors, as resemble him in nothing but his sin, and who apologize for their crimes by his example. Let us also compare him, with those presumptuous cavillers, who profanely carp at the blemishes in illustrious scriptural characters; but never raise their minds to an idea of such exalted excellency, piety, and philanthropy, as he shewed, living and dying. We cannot too closely imitate the general example of this most eminent saint: but let us watch and pray, lest we be overcome by temptation, and overtaken with sin, to the dishonour of God, and the wounding of our own consciences: and if we have offended, let us copy his example of repentance and patience, still hoping to close our days like him; and having "served our own generation by the will of God," to fall asleep, with the sure and certain hope of a glorious resurrection, through our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen.

THE SECOND BOOK OF THE CHRONICLES.

This book is a continuation of the history begun in the former book. It, in some respects, coincides with the books of Kings. But there, the histories of Judah and Israel are carried on together; as those of England and Scotland are by some of our historians: here, the affairs of Judah are more fully and distinctly recorded, while those of Israel are only mentioned occasionally, when required by the main subject, as an English historian would sometimes digress concerning the affairs of France or Germany, in elucidating his narrative.—The history opens with the accession of Solomon, and contains a narrative of the several kings of his race, who reigned in succession, till the Babylonish captivity; and it concludes with an intimation of Cyrus's decree for the restoration of the Jews and the rebuilding of the temple, about four hundred and eighty years after.—Besides the additional practical instruction, especially in respect of the different effects of piety, or profaneness, in the affairs of nations favoured with revelation, here afforded; this history throws great light on the prophetic writings, which can by no means be well understood without constantly adverting to it. The prophecies contained in it, either were fulfilled soon after they were spoken, or coincide with those before considered: and it is not always easy to determine concerning subsequent scriptural references, whether they relate to this book, or to the books of Kings.

CHAP. I.

Solomon, established as king, calls on his nobles and people, to join in sacrificing at Gibeon, 1—7. The Lord appears to him there by night, and allows him to choose what blessing to ask: he asks wisdom, and is promised also riches and honour, 8—12. Solomon's forces, riches, and commerce, 13—17.

AND Solomon the son of David ^awas strengthened in his kingdom, and the ^bLORD his God was with him, and ^cmagnified him exceedingly.

2 Then Solomon spake unto all Israel, ^dto the captains of thousands and of hundreds, and to the judges, and to every governor in all Israel, ^ethe chief of the fathers.

3 So Solomon, and all the congregation with him, went to the high place that was at ^fGibeon, for there was ^gthe tabernacle of the congregation of God, which Moses ^hthe servant of the LORD had made in the wilderness.

4 But ⁱthe ark of God had David brought up from Kirjath-jearim to the place which David had prepared for it: ^jfor he had pitched a tent for it at Jerusalem.

5 Moreover, ^kthe brazen altar that ^lBezaleel, the son of Uri, the son of Hur, had made, ^mhe put before the tabernacle of the LORD: and Solomon and the congregation sought unto it.

6 And Solomon went up thither to the brazen altar before the LORD, which was at the tabernacle of the congregation, and offered ⁿa thousand burnt-offerings upon it.

7 ¶ In that night did God appear unto Solomon, and said unto him, ^oAsk what I shall give thee.

9 Now, O LORD God, ^slet thy promise unto David my father be established; for thou hast made me king over a people ^tlike the dust of the earth in multitude.

11 And God said to Solomon, Because ^wthis was in thine heart, and thou hast not asked riches, wealth, or honour, nor the life of thine enemies, neither yet hast asked long life; but hast asked wisdom and knowledge for thyself, ^xthat thou mayest judge my people, over whom I have made thee king;

13 ¶ Then Solomon came from his journey to the high place that was at Gibeon to Jerusalem, from before the tabernacle of the congregation, and ^areigned over Israel.

14 And ^bSolomon gathered chariots and horsemen: and he had a thousand and four hundred chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen, which he placed in the chariot-cities, and with the king at Jerusalem.

V. 7—13. (Note, 1 Kings iii. 5—14.) "This was in thine heart." (11.) This does not occur in Kings: and it implies that the request of Solomon, as arising from a spiritual judgment and heart, was peculiarly acceptable to that God,

NOTES.

CHAP. I. V. 2. This seems to have taken place a short time after David's decease; when Solomon, being established in his kingdom, convened his chief men, and spake to them concerning the solemn sacrifice, in honour of God, which he purposed.

15 And ^{the king} made silver and gold at Jerusalem as ^{plenteous} as stones, and cedar-trees made he as the ^{“sycamore-trees that are in the vale for abundance.”}

16 And ^{Solomon} had horses brought out of Egypt, and linen yarn: the king's merchants received the linen yarn at a price.

17 And they fetched up, and brought forth out of Egypt a chariot for six hundred shekels of silver, and an horse for an hundred and fifty: and so brought they out horses for all ^{the kings of the Hittites, and for the kings of Syria, by their means.}

CHAP. II.

Solomon purposes to build the temple, and a palace, 1. His workmen, 2. He sends to Hiram for skilful artificers, and for timber, 3—10. Hiram's friendly answer, 11—16. Solomon employs strangers as labourers, and overseers, 17, 18.

AND Solomon ^{determined} to build an house for the name of the LORD, and ^{an house for his kingdom.}

2 And Solomon ^{told} out threescore and ten thousand men to bear burdens, and fourscore thousand to hew in the mountain, and three thousand and six hundred to oversee them.

3 ¶ And Solomon sent to ^{Hiram} the king of Tyre, saying, ^{As thou didst deal with David my father, and didst send him cedars to build him an house to dwell therein, even so deal with me.}

4 Behold, ^{I build an house to the name of the LORD my God, to dedicate it to him, and to burn before him sweet incense, and for the continual shewbread, and for the burnt-offerings morning and evening, on the sabbaths, and on the new-moons, and on the solemn feasts of the LORD our God. This is an ordinance for ever to Israel.}

5 And the house which I build is ^{great}: for ^{great} is our God above all gods.

6 But ^{who is able to build him an house, seeing the heaven and heaven of heavens cannot contain him? who am I then, that I should build him an house, save only to burn sacrifice before him?}

7 Send me now therefore a man ^{cunning} to work in gold, and in silver, and in brass, and in iron, and in purple, and in crimson, and in blue, and that can skill to grave with the cunning men that ^{are} with me in Judah and in Jerusalem, ^{whom David my father did provide.}

8 ^{Send me also cedar-trees, fir-trees, and alghum-} who searches, regards, and demands the heart. God promised Solomon all the things he had not asked, except the life of his enemies: but he was to be a peaceable king, a type of the Prince of peace. (12.)

V. 14—17. (Note, 1 Kings x. 24—29.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The presence and blessing of God give strength, honour, happiness, and stability; and to whom he hath given much, from them he requires the more.—It would be a comely sight to the spiritually minded, to behold kings and nobles, and the chief estates of their dominions, assembling together for the purposes of religious worship, vying with each other in the fervency of their devotions, and giving evident demonstrations how generally and deeply their hearts were engaged in the sacred services. Alas! even in Christian countries such scenes are seldom, if ever exhibited! But the example, the influence, and the exhortations of princes, who greatly fear and love the Lord, who are eminent for piety and wisdom, (one succeeding another in the same steps,) may effect very great things: and those who love the truths and service of God should unite in praying, not formally, but fervently, for all in authority; that, being enriched with grace and wisdom, they may become instruments of such extensive good to their dominions.—To us the desires of men's hearts can only be known by their habitual conduct; but in themselves they as certainly distinguish characters, as actions do: and if the Lord see, that it is in our heart to desire wisdom and grace, more than riches, honour, or pleasure, he will delight to fulfil all our mind. His promises should form the rule of our prayers: and when they respect any important end, they may be pleaded as engaging him to grant all things requisite in order to it.—To know and to do our duty in the station of life assigned us, to the glory of God and the benefit of our connections in society, requires much wisdom, and is one principal exercise and evidence of it: and if we humbly feel our need of this wisdom, and faithfully ask it of God, he will give it liberally, and not upbraid our former folly. (Note, Jam. i. 5—8.)—Those secular employments, that are commenced by the worship and service of God, are likely to be well managed and to be prosperous: and as he “gives grace and glory; so he will withhold no good thing from them that walk uprightly.”—But, alas! prosperity is always dangerous, because our hearts are deceitful: and it is with great propriety that we pray, “In all time of our wealth, good Lord, deliver us” from pride, ostentation, indolence, self-indulgence, and a worldly mind. Let us then improve our present talent, seek heavenly blessings, and be contented without those great things, which men generally covet, but which commonly prove fatal snares to their souls.

NOTES.

CHAP. II. V. 1, 2. (Notes, 1 Kings v. 13—18. Marg. Ref.)

V. 3—10. We have here a more particular account of Solomon's message to Hiram, (or Hiram,) king of Tyre, than was before given, (1 Kings v. 5—12. Notes, 9—11;) and it appears, that he thought it no impropriety to speak freely on religious subjects, in treating with a heathen prince about secular business. On the contrary, he laboured to give him very high and honourable thoughts of Israel's God, as great above all gods, and as one whom “the heaven of heavens could not contain:” he particularly explained to him his intentions in building a temple to the name of the Lord; viz. that it was to be the stated place of those instituted ordinances, which were required by the law of God, given to Israel; that he might not misapprehend him, as if he supposed that JEHOVAH could be circumscribed in a temple, like the idols of the heathen: and he represented to him his own inability and unworthiness for such a service, except as mercifully assisted, and accepted, in it, by that gracious God, who had chosen him for the work. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 11, 12. The just sentiments contained in these verses, with the pious and benevolent spirit which they breathe, leave no doubt, but that Hiram was himself a spiritual worshipper of the true God. (Note, 1 Kings x. 8, 9.)

CHAP. III.

The place of the temple, and the time when the building of it was begun, 1, 2. Its dimensions and ornaments, 3-7. Those of the most holy place, 8-10. The cherubim placed in it, 11-13. The veil, 14. The two pillars, 15-17.

THEN Solomon began to build the house of the LORD at Jerusalem in mount Moriah, where the LORD appeared unto David his father, in the place that David had prepared in the threshing-floor of Ornan the Jebusite.

2 And he began to build in the second day of the second month, in the fourth year of his reign.

3 ¶ Now these are the things wherein Solomon was instructed for the building of the house of God. The length by cubits after the first measure was threescore cubits, and the breadth twenty cubits.

4 And the porch that was in the front of the house, the length of it was according to the breadth of the house, twenty cubits, and the height was an hundred and twenty: and he overlaid it within with pure gold.

5 And the greater house he ceiled with fir-tree, which he overlaid with fine gold, and set thereon palm-trees and chains.

6 And he garnished the house with precious stones for beauty: and the gold was gold of Parvaim.

7 He overlaid also the house, the beams, the posts, and the walls thereof, and the doors thereof, with gold; and graved cherubims on the walls.

8 And he made the most holy house, the length whereof was according to the breadth of the house, twenty cubits, and the breadth thereof twenty cubits: and he overlaid it with fine gold, amounting to six hundred talents.

9 And the weight of the nails was fifty shekels of gold; and he overlaid the upper chambers with gold.

10 And in the most holy house he made two cherubims of image-work, and overlaid them with gold.

V. 13.-Of Huram my father's. Or, Huram-abi. It seems that this man being the most eminent in his line of business, was called father, or my father Huram. King Huram called him so, and Solomon did the same. (Note, iv. 16.) For it is evident that the artist's name is here meant, and not that of the king's father.

V. 17, 18. (Notes, Kings v. 8-18. vii. 14. ix. 20-22. Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We ought always to attend to the work of God, in preference to our own indulgence or accommodation: and our hearts should be resolved for every service, that we may endure hardship, struggle with difficulties, and not yield to weariness or discouragement.—The greatest monarchs on earth are as nothing, in comparison with the God of heaven; and they should deem it their highest honour to be his servants, and to speak of his glorious majesty.—The genuine love of God, abounding in the heart, would intermix the savour of piety in the ordinary concerns and converse of life. Indeed, we should be neither afraid nor ashamed to embrace every opportunity of speaking honourably of Him, and of impressing the minds of men with a deep sense of his majesty and excellency, and of the importance of his favour, worship, and service.—It is a great part of our "wisdom towards them that are without," so to explain our meaning in every doctrine and ordinance, and so to guard our discourses about them, as may best prevent misapprehension or prejudice: and the neglect of this rule is not boldness, or faithfulness, as some well-meaning zealots suppose, but indiscretion and folly.—In pleading the cause of God and religion, we should always speak humbly of ourselves; but, unless we be humbled, our temper and conduct will betray the hypocrisy of our self-abasing language. May the Lord himself therefore "clothe us with humility!"—Possessions, endowments, or royal authority, are given men for the sake of others; and a wise and pious king is an evidence of the Lord's special love to the people. Who then can express the greatness of his love to his believing people, in giving them his only begotten Son, to be their Prince and Saviour! It is also a great mercy to have children endued with wisdom and understanding: and we should all desire to be blessings to those among whom we live, that they may bless God for us. We ought also to praise him for those blessings which are exclusively bestowed on others: and it is pleasant to observe how the friendship of pious men becomes the means of bringing those who were far off, to know, love, and worship our God and Saviour. Let us then be unwearied in spreading the knowledge of his name and truth; and let us devote our several talents to his service; endeavour to be helpful to one another in this good work; and be thankful that poor heathens, and the meanest slaves, may be usefully and acceptably employed by our great and gracious Lord!

NOTES.

17 And he reared up the pillars before the temple, one on the right hand, and the other on the left; and called the name of that on the right hand Jachin, and the name of that on the left Boaz.

CHAP. IV.

The altar of brass, 1. The molten sea supported by twelve oxen, 2-5. The lavers, candlesticks, and tables, 6-8. The two courts of the temple, 9, 10. The vessels, furniture, and instruments of brass, 11-18. Those of gold, 19-22.

MOREOVER, he made an altar of brass, twenty cubits the length thereof, and twenty cubits the breadth thereof, and ten cubits the height thereof.

2 ¶ Also he made a molten sea of ten cubits from brim to brim, round in compass, and five cubits the height thereof; and a line of thirty cubits did compass it round about.

V. 3, 4. "The first measure" seems to mean the original plan. The height of the porch is not mentioned in Kings; but the description given of the temple, in the exposition, takes in this account. (Notes, 1 Kings vi. 2, 3. 1 Chr. xxviii. 12.)

V. 6-8. (Marg. Ref.) It is not known on what account the gold, here mentioned, is called gold of Parvaim; that word not elsewhere occurring in Scripture.

V. 9. Some by the word rendered "the upper chambers," suppose the ceiling of the most holy place to be meant: but perhaps some of the upper chambers, on the outside of the temple, were thus decorated; the lower being used for more common purposes.

V. 10. The meaning of the word rendered "image-work," is not well known; but it implies something highly ornamented.

V. 12-17. (Notes, 1 Kings vi. 23-28. 31-35. vii. 16-22.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Proper instructions, well understood, enable us to go about our work without hesitation or uncertainty, and to proceed in it with confidence and comfort. Blessed be God, the sacred Scriptures are sufficient to render "the man of God thoroughly furnished for every good work;" and all our mistakes and embarrassments, in matters of importance, arise from inattention to this our heavenly rule. Let us then search them daily; and beseech the Lord to enable us to understand, believe, remember, and obey his whole word; that our way may be made plain before us. Let us endeavour, that all our works may be "begun, continued, and ended in him;" let us seek his grace to adorn our souls with the beauties of holiness, and his strength to establish us in faith and steady obedience, and to prosper our labours for his glory. Beholding God in Christ, his true temple, infinitely more glorious than that of Solomon, may we too become "a spiritual house," "an habitation of God through the Spirit;" and "an holy priesthood;" that here on earth we may begin to join the worship of cherubim and seraphim before the throne; and at length in his courts above, sing "praises to Him who sitteth upon the throne, and to the Lamb, for ever and ever."

NOTES.

CHAP. IV. V. 1. This altar is not mentioned in the book of Kings. It was four times as long and as broad, and above three times as high, as that made by Moses; (Notes, Ex. xxvii. 1-8. Ezra iii. 2, 3. Ex. xliii. 13-17;) and it formed a scaffold, above eleven yards square, and five yards high.—It might be supposed that the Israelites, now that they were settled, multiplied, and enriched, in Canaan, would bring vastly more sacrifices, than they could have done in the wilderness; and the altar was formed accordingly, to be capable of containing many more. As it was so high, all the worshippers in the most distant parts of the courts of the temple, might behold, and be affected with, this representation of the Lord's wrath against sinners, and his way of shewing mercy through the sufferings of the promised Saviour. This was continually

3 And under it was 'the similitude of oxen, which did compass it round about: ten in a cubit, compassing the sea round about. Two rows of oxen were cast, when it was cast.

4 It stood upon twelve oxen, 'three looking toward the north, and three looking toward the west, and three looking toward the south, and three looking toward the east: and the sea was set above upon them, and all their hinder parts were inward.

5 And the thickness of it was an handbreadth, and the brim of it like the work of the brim of a cup, 'with flowers of lilies: and it received and held 'three thousand baths.

6 ¶ He made also 'ten lavers, and put five on the right hand, and five on the left, to wash in them: 'such things as they offered for the burnt-offering, they washed in them; 'but the sea was for the priests to wash in.

7 And he made 'ten candlesticks of gold 'according to their form, and set them in the temple, five on the right hand, and five on the left.

8 He made also 'ten tables, and placed them in the temple, five on the right side, and five on the left. And he made an hundred 'basons of gold.

9 ¶ Furthermore, he made 'the court of the priests, and the great court, and doors for the court, and overlaid the doors of them with brass.

10 And 'he set the sea on the right side of the east end, over against the south.

11 ¶ And Hiram made 'the pots, and the shovels, and the 'basons. And Hiram 'finished the work that he was to make for king Solomon for the house of God;

12 To wit, 'the two pillars, and 'the pommels, and the chapters, which were on the top of the two pillars, and the two wreaths to cover the two pommels of the chapters which were on the pillars;

13 And 'four hundred pomegranates on the two wreaths; two rows of pomegranates on each wreath, to cover the two pommels of the chapters which were upon the 'pillars.

14 He made also 'bases; and 'lavers made he upon the bases;

15 'One sea, and twelve oxen under it:

16 The 'pots also, and the shovels, and the 'flesh-hooks, and all their instruments, did 'Hiram 'his his father make to king Solomon, for the house of the LORD, of 'bright-brass.

17 In the plain of Jordan did the king cast them, in the 'clay-ground between Succoth and 'Zeredathah.

18 Thus Solomon made all these vessels in great abundance: for 'the weight of the brass could not be found out.

19 ¶ And Solomon made 'all the vessels that were for the house of God, 'the golden altar also, and 'the tables whereon the shew-bread was set;

20 Moreover 'the candlesticks with their lamps, that they should 'burn after the manner, before 'the oracle, of pure gold;

21 And 'the flowers, and the lamps, and the tongs, made he of gold, and that 'perfect gold;

22 And the 'snuffers, and the 'basons, and the spoons, and the censers, of pure gold: and 'the entry of the house, the inner doors thereof for the most holy place, and the doors of the house of the temple, were of gold.

CHAP. V.

The temple is finished, and the dedicated treasures deposited in it, 1. The ark is brought into the most holy place, 2—10. Whilst the Levites sing praises to God, a cloud fills the temple, 11—14.

THUS all the work that Solomon made for the house of the LORD was finished: and Solomon 'brought in all the things that David his father had dedicated; and the silver, and the gold, and all the instruments, put he among the treasures of the house of God.

2 ¶ 'Then Solomon assembled the elders of Israel, and all the heads of the tribes, 'the chief of the fathers of the children of Israel, unto Jerusalem, to bring up the ark of the covenant of the LORD 'out of 'the city of David, which is Zion.

3 Wherefore all the men of Israel assembled themselves unto the king, 'in the feast which was in the seventh month.

4 And all the elders of Israel came; and 'the Levites took up the ark.

5 And they brought up the ark, and 'the tabernacle of the congregation, and all the holy vessels that were in the tabernacle, these did the priests and the Levites bring up.

6 Also 'king Solomon, and all the congregation of Israel that were assembled unto him before the ark, sacrificed sheep and oxen, which could not be told nor numbered for multitude.

shadowed forth, by the innocent animals consumed by the fire which came down from heaven, whilst the guilty offerers were spared. (Notes, Gen. iv. 3—5, Lev. i. 4.)

V. 2—6. (Notes, 1 Kings vii. 23—39, Jer. lli. 17—23, Zech. xiii. 1, Tit. iii. 4—7.)

V. 7. Form. Or, the form, in which Moses had been taught to make the golden candlestick for the tabernacle. (Notes, Ex. xxv. 31—39, 1 Kings vii. 48—51.)

V. 12. Pommels. Or, Globes. These are not mentioned in the parallel passage. Perhaps they were globes placed above the chapters, which were seen through the ornaments with which they were decorated. (Note, 1 Kings vii. 15—22.)

V. 16. 'Some think, Solomon calls him his father out of great respect to him, or because he was the inventor of this excellent work.' (Gen. iv. 20, 21.) (Bp. Patrick.)

V. 17, 18. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 19. It is probable, that but one table was used for the shew-bread: but the rest might be placed near it, for other purposes; or, perhaps some of them were kept against future emergencies. (Note, 1 Chr. xxviii. 15, 16.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The furniture of the temple, compared with that of the tabernacle, plainly instructed God's ancient people, that his church would be gradually enlarged, and his worshippers immensely multiplied: and, blessed be God, in the person, sacrifice, and offices of Christ, there is an abundant sufficiency for any multitudes, who can ever come to the Father through him.—May the preaching of the gospel hold him forth, as crucified for sinners, to all the nations of the earth; and may his Spirit prepare the hearts of all the inhabitants, to welcome his salvation; for all things else are now ready. Whilst we thus pray for others, may we be found humble penitents, by faith beholding Jesus, as "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world:" may we daily wash our souls, and our services, in that "Fountain which he hath opened for sin and for uncleanness:" may we find continual access to the Father, through our heavenly Advocate, and receive continual supplies of his Spirit: may we walk in the light of his word, feast upon the provisions of his house, and be "constrained by his love, to live no longer to ourselves, but unto him who died for us, and rose again."—Nothing can be too precious to be consecrated to his service; but he will not reject the meanest abilities, the feeblest endeavours, or the most trivial oblations, which are offered in faith and love: yet he requires the very best of our affections, and of all we have; and he will sooner bear with external meanness in our services, than with an insincere heart, however covered with specious and pompous professions and performances. The nearer we approach him in privilege and external worship, the more holy we should be; and the nearer we really approach to him in knowledge and communion, the more holy we shall become; till at length faith shall be changed for vision, and we shall be made perfectly and eternally like him, and fitted for the full fruition of his favour and glory. (Notes, 2 Cor. iii. 17, 18, 1 John iii. 1—3.)

NOTES.

CHAP. V. V. 1. (Notes, 2 Sam. viii. 9—11, 1 Kings 48—51, 1 Chr. xxvi. 28, xxix. 3—9.)

V. 2—5. Levites. (4.) Perhaps the Levites, of the family of Kohath, carried the ark into the courts of the temple, and then the priests conveyed it into its proper place. (Notes, Num. iv. 6—18, 1 Kings vii. 1—5.)

V. 6. 'The observation of Victorinus Strigelius upon this history is very pious: That nothing is more lovely in human things than such concord, as here appeared among all orders of men; both of teachers and learners, magistrates, soldiers, and people, who were all combined to promote the honour and service of God. Such unity ought to be studied by christian people, that we may be all one, as our Saviour prayed.' (Bp. Patrick.)

7 And the priests brought in the ark of the covenant of the LORD unto his place, ^kto the oracle of the house, into the most holy place, even under the wings of the cherubims.

8 For the cherubims spread forth their wings over the place of the ark, and the cherubims covered the ark and ^lthe staves thereof above.

9 And they drew out the staves of the ark, that ^mthe ends of the staves were seen from the ark before the oracle; but they were not seen without. And ⁿthere it is unto this day.

10 There was nothing in the ark ^osave the two tables which Moses put therein at Horeb, ^pwhen ^qthe LORD made a covenant with the children of Israel, when they came out of Egypt.

13 It came even to pass, as the trumpeters and singers were ^bas one, to make one sound to be heard in praising and thanking the LORD, and when they lifted up their voice with ^cthe trumpets and cymbals and instruments of music, and praised the LORD, ^dsaying, For ^ehe is good; for his mercy endureth for ever: that ^fthen the house was filled with a cloud, even the house of the LORD;

14 So that ^gthe priests could not stand to minister by reason of the cloud: for ^hthe glory of the LORD had filled the house of God.

CHAP. VI.

Solomon blesses the people, and praises God, 1-11. His prayer at the dedication of the temple, 12-39. He concludes by earnestly intreating the Lord's special presence and blessing, 40-42.

THEN said Solomon, ⁱThe LORD hath said that he would dwell in the thick darkness.

2 But ^jI have built an house of habitation for thee, and a place for thy dwelling for ever.

3 And the king ^kturned his face, and ^lblessed the whole congregation of Israel: and ^mall the congregation of Israel stood.

It is remarkable, that the Lord took possession of his temple by the cloud, at the moment when, with one consent, the Levites were singing the praises of his everlasting goodness and mercy. (Notes, vii. 1-3. xx. 21-25. Ezra iii. 8-11. Ps. cxxxvi. 1. Jer. xxxiii. 11.)

V. 14. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The gracious presence of God renders his ordinances far more glorious, and is more essential to their efficacy, than any conceivable external order or magnificence: and he is as really present with two or three humble worshippers in a mean obscure corner, as with tens of thousands assembled with every possible accommodation. Yet, on some occasions, the concurrence of vast multitudes, under the direction of pious princes, has been made extensively useful to mankind, and greatly honourable to, and honoured by God.—The eye of our faith must, in every service, be primarily directed to the atoning sacrifice of Christ: but in subordination to it, our sacrifices of praise and thanksgiving are peculiarly well pleasing unto God; if the harmony of our voices, or musical instruments, is really accompanied with the sweet melody of an humble and grateful heart.—All the Divine perfections are glorious in themselves: but the Lord's goodness and ever-enduring mercy are peculiarly endearing to the broken-hearted sinner; and he especially delights in the exercise and in the glory of his mercy, in harmony with his wisdom, truth, and justice, through the merits of the Saviour. This should encourage all who feel their need of abounding mercy; being conscious that their sins have greatly abounded.—The ministers of God should always be ready, both in body and soul, for every service, ordinary or extraordinary: and it looks ill, when they are loath to exceed that measure, which entitles them to their emoluments. (Note, Mal. i. 9-11.)—When the worshippers of God are of one mind, as well as in one place, they may expect his more immediate presence and blessing: if he take possession of our hearts to sanctify them, he will exclude whatever interferes with his design of filling them with his glory; and though darkness now rests upon our views of heavenly things, yet, in the temple above, "the Lord himself will be our everlasting light," and we shall know even as we are known. (Notes, Rev. xxi. 22-27. xxii. 2-5.) May he prepare us for that land of perfect knowledge, purity, and felicity!

CHAP. VII.

God testifies his acceptance of Solomon's prayer by fire from heaven: the glory fills the temple, and the people worship. 1-3. Solomon's sacrifices at the dedication, 4-7. The congregation keep the feast of tabernacles, and the feast of the dedication, fourteen days, 8-9. He dismisses the people joyful, and is prospered, 10, 11. God again appears to Solomon, and makes a covenant with him, 12-23.

NOW ^awhen Solomon had made an end of praying, ^bthe fire came down from heaven, and consumed the burnt-offering and the sacrifices; and ^cthe glory of the LORD filled the house.

2 And ^dthe priests could not enter into the house of the LORD, because the glory of the LORD had filled the LORD's house.

3 And when all the children of Israel saw how the fire came down, and the glory of the LORD upon the house, ^ethey bowed themselves with their faces to the ground upon the pavement, and worshipped, and praised the LORD, saying, ^fFor he is good: for his mercy endureth for ever.

4 ¶ Then the king and all the people offered sacrifices before the LORD.

5 And king Solomon offered ^ga sacrifice of twenty and two thousand oxen, and an hundred and twenty thousand sheep: so the king and all the people ^hdedicated the house of God.

6 And ⁱthe priests waited on their offices: ^jthe Levites also with instruments of music of the LORD, ^kwhich David the king had made to praise the LORD, ^lbecause his mercy endureth for ever, when David praised by their ^mministry: and ⁿthe priests sounded trumpets before them, and all Israel stood.

7 Moreover Solomon ^ohallowed the middle of the court that ^pwas before the house of the LORD: for there he offered burnt-offerings, and the fat of the peace-offerings, because ^qthe brazen altar which Solomon had made was not able to receive the burnt-offerings, and the meat-offerings, and the fat.

8 ¶ Also at the same time Solomon ^rkept the feast seven days, and all Israel with him, ^sa very great congregation, from ^tthe entering in of Hamath unto the river of Egypt.

the flourishing of true religion, cause them "to rejoice in the goodness" of the LORD; by enlarging and gratifying all their holy, pious, and benevolent affections.—These seem, therefore, the blessings peculiarly intended; though the outward protection and prosperity, of both priests and people, might also be implied.—Solomon further prayed, that God would not reject his prayer, which he made for a blessing on that work to which he had called him; and for which he had caused him to be "anointed;" for that would be to turn away his face, and to send him away ashamed and discouraged: but in this, he was a type of, and probably had reference to, the promised Messiah. He also intreated the LORD, to remember the mercies which he had promised to David, and through him to his people and posterity; and to continue and perfect them. This also may be applied to the mercies of our Lord Jesus Christ, and of God the Father through him.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-17. It is a great mercy to be enabled to go through important services to the church, in simple obedience, and in dependence on the LORD; and to witness their accomplishment, with humble gratitude to the Giver of both the will, the ability, and the success; adoring his power, faithfulness, and goodness in every part of it, without expressing self-importance or self-complacency. For, pride and ostentation, if allowed to intrude, rob God of his glory, and mar the acceptance, or the comfort, of the most useful and excellent undertakings. Here then the main guard should be placed, by those who are employed as instruments for the good of others: this, this above all the rest, should dictate their constant prayers; and all, who wish success to their attempts, should join in prayer for them, that they may be kept humble, in proportion as they are honoured by God for usefulness.—When a good work is well finished, it is not done with: when the sermon is preached, the letter written, or the book sent to the press, or even well received by the public, its real utility depends on the LORD's consequent blessing. Then, it ought to be dedicated to him, committed to his hands, and his blessing should be sought upon it; and in this case we may confidently expect, that the fruit, which by his grace we have produced, will remain for the durable good of many, when we are gone to our long home. (Note, Ec. xii. 2-7.)

V. 18-42. The more we know of God and religion, spiritually and experimentally, the more humbly we shall think of ourselves and of all our performances; the more reverentially we shall adore the infinitely glorious God, and the more entirely we shall trust to his covenant of mercy and grace, made with believing sinners in Jesus Christ.—We may and ought, unworthy as we are, to expect large answers to all our prayers, which we present for ourselves and others, through the Saviour's intercession. They are greatly favoured who have pious friends to pray for them; and it is a mercy for us all, that "we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous, who is the propitiation for the sins of the world." (Note, 1 John ii. 1, 2.) Yet, this will not prevent the destruction of any who never pray for themselves: not that the Saviour pleads in vain, but that the event shews he does not intercede for them.—In times of prosperity, personal or public, we should expect adversity, and pray with reference to it; and in seasons of deep distress and temptation, we should still hope and pray for deliverance and comfort.—Blessed be God, sinners of every description, when they bethink themselves, and humbly pour out their prayers, in dependence on the Saviour's merits, may be assured of forgiveness, acceptance, and all the blessings of salvation.—JEHOVAH hath made our nature his resting-place for ever, in the person of Emmanuel; and through him he dwells and delights in his church of redeemed sinners. May all his ministers of every name, be clothed with righteousness and salvation; may all his saints be made joyful in his goodness; may the numbers of both be continually increasing, till the boundaries of his church extend as wide as those of the human species! May the hearts of the writer and of every reader become his resting-place; may Christ dwell in us by faith, casting out every idol, cleansing us from all filthiness, consecrating us as his temples, and shedding abroad his love therein: may the Father look upon us, in and through his Anointed, whose face he never turns away, and whose petitions meet with no repulse; and may he remember and bless us in all things, according to his mercies to sinners in and through him!

NOTES.

CHAP. VII. V. 1-3. (Note, 1 Kings viii. 10-14.) Fire, descending and consuming the sacrifices, was the customary token of the Divine acceptance. (Marg. Ref.) This represented the righteous displeasure of God against man's sin, as the cause of the sufferings of our holy Surety; and perhaps the sanctification of our souls by the power of the Holy Spirit, like purifying fire, consuming our carnal and corrupt affections. The visible displays also of the Divine glory still continued, or were renewed after some intermission; or perhaps were sensibly augmented. But it is probable, the people expected these tokens of the LORD's acceptance; and the awful sight did not terrify them, but only 19 But if ye turn away, and forsake my statutes and my commandments, which I have set before you, and shall go and serve other gods, and worship them:

20 Then will I pluck them up by the roots out of my land which I have given them: and this house, which I have sanctified for my name, will I cast out of my sight, and will make it to be a proverb and a byword among all nations.

21 And this house, which is high, shall be an astonishment to every one that passeth by it; so that he shall say, Why hath the LORD done thus unto this land, and unto this house?

22 And it shall be answered, Because they forsook the LORD God of their fathers, which brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, and laid hold on other gods, and worshipped them, and served them: therefore hath he brought all this evil upon them.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The mercies of God to sinners are communicated in a manner suited to impress all who receive them, with the most profound reverence of his majesty, justice, and holiness: thus leading them to unite humble confidence with fear of offending so holy a God. Thus, whoever beholds, with true faith, the divine Saviour agonizing and dying for man's sin, will, by that view, find his godly sorrow enlarged, his hatred of sin increased, his soul made more watchful, and his life more holy: and they are speculating hypocrites, who profess to expect salvation by the cross of Christ, whilst the world has their hearts, and sin is allowed in their habitual conduct.—The Lord's ready answers to our prayers should animate us to repeat with deeper reverence and livelier gratitude, our praises of his mercy.—The most endearing displays of the love of God, rightly understood, speak terror to hypocrites and presumptuous offenders; but the most tremendous discoveries of his righteous vengeance need not discourage the upright humble believer.—Every token of his favour should enlarge our hearts in his service: and they, who are inspired with zeal for his glory, and who taste the joy of his salvation, will never think too much time, or expense, can be bestowed in communion with him and his saints, provided other duties be not neglected.—In the best state of nations favoured with revelation, there hath hitherto been a succession of prosperity, ingratitude, corrections, repentance, forgiveness, renewed mercies, and prosperity, &c. Yet the Lord delights in those places, where his ordinances are maintained and attended on, in some measure of purity and consistency. But in cases of apostasy, or general profaneness, or hypocrisy, he will glorify his justice upon those, who have thus abused his mercies, and so forfeited their privileges. Let us then stand in awe of him, and watch against all sin; and copy the examples of the most approved of his saints, in the brightest parts of their characters.

NOTES.

CHAP. VIII. V. 1-3. Perhaps Hamath-zobah had revolted: but Solomon regained possession of it. (Notes, 2 Sam. viii. 3-11. 1 Kings ix. 1, 2. 11-14. xi. 23-25.)

V. 4-9. (Notes, 1 Kings v. 13-18. ix. 15-22.)

V. 10. Three hundred overseers, omitted in one place, are added in another, completing the same number. (Compare ii. 18. 1 Kings v. 16. ix. 23.)

V. 11. Pharaoh's daughter is supposed to have been a proselyte to the true religion: but she was of heathen extraction, and perhaps attended by many who were not proselyted. (Notes, 1 Kings iii. 1.) If there were no open idolatry or profaneness in her court, there might be many things inconsistent with spiritual religion; and Solomon did not think it right, that she should reside where the ark had been situated, and so near to the continual temple-worship. Perhaps he wanted resolution entirely to suppress all that he did not entirely approve.

V. 12-15. Solomon exactly adhered, both to the law of Moses, and also to all David's regulations: not only because he was his father; but because he was "a man of God," and acted by his authority in forming them. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 1 Chr. xxiii. -xxvi.)

V. 16. (Notes, 1 Kings vi. 7.)

V. 18. Ships, &c. The materials perhaps were ready prepared, and the workmen sent, that the ships might be constructed at the Red Sea; for vessels could not sail from Tyre to Ezion-geber, or Elath. (Note, 1 Kings ix. 26-28. x. 22.)

CHAP. IX.

The queen of Sheba's visit to Solomon; her admiration of his wisdom and magnificence: her presents and return, 1-12. Solomon's annual revenue in gold, 13, 14. His golden shields and targets, 15, 16. His ivory-throne, and rich vessels of gold, 17-22. The honour paid him by other kings, 23, 24. His stalls, horses, and chariots, 25. The extent and wealth of his dominions, 26-28. He dies, and is succeeded by Rehoboam, 29-31.

AND "when the queen of ^bSheba heard of ^cthe fame of Solomon, she came to prove Solomon ^dwith hard questions at Jerusalem, with a very great company, and ^ecamels that bare ^fspices, and gold in abundance, and precious stones: and when she was come to Solomon, ^gshe communed with him of all that was in her heart.

2 And Solomon ^htold her all her questions: and ⁱthere was nothing hid from Solomon which he told her not.

3 And when the queen of Sheba had ^kseen the wisdom of Solomon, and ^lthe house that he had built,

4 And ^mthe meat of his table, and ⁿthe sitting of his servants, and the attendance of his ministers, and their apparel; his ^ocup-bearers also, and their apparel; and ^phis ascent by which he went up into the house of the LORD; ^qthere was no more spirit in her.

5 And she said to the king, It was a true report which I heard in mine own land of thine ^racts and of thy wisdom:

6 Howbeit ^sI believed not their words, until I came, and mine eyes had seen ^tit: and, behold, ^uthe one half of the greatness of thy wisdom was not told me: for thou ^vexceedest the fame that I heard.

7 ^wHappy ^xare thy men, and happy ^yare these thy servants, which stand continually before thee, and hear thy wisdom.

8 ^zBlessed be the LORD thy God, ^awhich delighted in thee to set thee on his throne, to be king for the LORD thy God: ^bbecause thy God loved Israel, to establish them for ever, therefore made he thee king over them, ^cto do judgment and justice.

9 And ^dshe gave the king an hundred and twenty talents of gold, and ^eof spices great abundance, and precious stones: neither was there any such spice, as the queen of Sheba gave king Solomon.

10 And the servants also of Hiram, and the servants of Solomon, ^fwhich brought gold from Ophir, brought ^galgum-trees, and precious stones.

11 And the king made ^hof the algum-trees ⁱterraces to the house of the LORD, and to the king's palace, and ^jharps, and psalteries for singers: and there were none such seen before in the land of Judah.

12 And king Solomon gave to the queen of Sheba, ^kall her desire, whatsoever she asked, beside ^lthat which she had brought unto the king. So she turned, and went away to her own land, she and her servants.

13 ¶ Now ^athe weight of gold that came to Solomon in one year was six hundred and threescore and six talents of gold:

14 Beside ^bthat which chapmen and merchants brought. And all the kings of Arabia, and ^cgovernors of the country, brought gold and silver to Solomon.

15 ¶ And king Solomon made ^dtwo hundred targets of beaten gold: six hundred ^eshekels of beaten gold went to one target.

16 And three hundred shields ^fmade he of beaten gold: three hundred ^gshekels of gold went to one shield. And the king put them ^hin the house of the forest of Lebanon.

17 Moreover the king made ⁱa great throne of ivory, and overlaid it with pure gold.

18 And ^jthere were six steps to the throne, with a footstool of gold, ^kwhich were fastened to the throne, and ^lstays on each side of the sitting place, and ^mtwo lions standing by the stays:

19 And ⁿtwelve lions stood there on the one side and on the other upon the six steps. There was not the like made in any kingdom.

20 ¶ And all ^othe drinking vessels of king Solomon were of gold, and all the vessels of the house of the forest of Lebanon were of ^ppure gold: ^qnone were of silver; ^rit was not any thing accounted of in the days of Solomon.

21 For the king's ships went to ^sTarshish with the servants of Hiram: every three years once came the ships of Tarshish bringing gold, and silver, ^tivory, and apes, and ^upeacocks.

22 And king Solomon ^vpassed all the kings of the earth in riches and wisdom.

23 ¶ And all the kings of the earth ^wsought the presence of Solomon, to hear his wisdom, that ^xGod had put in his heart.

24 And they brought ^yevery man his present, vessels of silver, and vessels of gold, and raiment, harness, and spices, horses and mules, a rate year by year.

25 ¶ And Solomon had ^zfour thousand stalls for horses and chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen; whom he bestowed in the chariot cities, and with the king at Jerusalem.

26 ¶ And he ^areigned over all the kings, from ^bthe river even unto the land of the Philistines, and to the border of Egypt.

27 And ^cthe king ^dmade silver in Jerusalem as stones; and cedar-trees made he ^eas the sycamore-trees that are in the low plains in abundance.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Some difficulty or conflict must be expected in every state on earth; but they whom the Lord loveth will prevail; and in heaven their peace will be perfect and eternal.—We shall never be satisfied with our possessions, enjoyments, or achievements; unless we limit our desires by the precept and the providence of God: yet, he indulges his people in things indifferent, as far as this is consistent with their real good.—His 'service is perfect liberty': all else is bondage: but if we poor condemned criminals and strangers are brought nigh, pardoned, and employed by our merciful Lord, we shall surely render him our tribute of praise and grateful obedience, though the lowest and most laborious service in his house be allotted to us.—It is hard to keep up a proper distinction between things sacred and common, in the palaces of the great, or in the courts of kings: and it sometimes requires more wisdom and resolution to govern a large family in the fear of God, without conniving at evident evil, than it does to govern a large kingdom with reputation, and in prosperity: and the difficulty is increased, when by any means a man hath got a hinderance, instead of a helper, in the wife of his bosom. But the truths, worship, and honour of God should be nearer our hearts than any relative comforts: and we ought to offend or grieve any one, rather than disobey God and grieve his people, by allowing his ordinances to be profaned. (Note, 1 Tim. iii. 4, 5.)—In all things, which are expressly directed in Scripture, our religious diligence should be exactly regulated by it: every part of the Lord's service should be attended to, in due succession, order, and proportion; and then we should not find any vacant time lie heavy upon our hands.—In beginning and conducting every undertaking, we should keep the end in view: and from our entrance upon life we should look forward, and be preparing for the close of it; that then we may have peace, and a happy entrance into a better state. Nor should we allow ourselves in any pursuit, or indulgence, which interferes with that grand object. Thus "known unto the Lord are all his works from before the foundation of the world:" every thing respecting his spiritual temple was planned and determined, before he began to work; and "his counsel shall stand, and he will do all his pleasure."—As men risk much, and undergo great hardship, in obtaining an earthly treasure: may we remember "how much better wisdom is than gold;" and, leaving the children of this world to scramble for the toys of this world; may we, as the children of God, "lay up our treasure in heaven, that where our treasure is, there our hearts may be also!"

CHAP. IX. V. 1-12. (Notes, 1 Kings x. 1-13.) The throne on which Solomon reigned, was the throne of God: for he was God's vicegerent, and thus "king for the Lord his God," to promote his glory, and support religion.—His throne. (8.) (Note, ii. 11, 12.)

V. 13-21. Notes, 1 Kings x. 14-22.—Apes, &c. (21.) The imports here mentioned, indicate that prosperity had enervated the minds of Solomon and his subjects, and led them to love things curious and uncommon, though useless in themselves: and, indeed, the East Indian trade hath rendered every

2 And it came to pass, when ^dJeroboam the son of Nebat, (who ^ewas in Egypt, whither he had fled from the presence of Solomon the king,) heard ^fit, that Jeroboam returned out of Egypt.

3 And ^gthey sent and called him: so Jeroboam and all Israel came, and spake to Rehoboam, saying,

4 Thy ^hfather made our yoke grievous: now therefore ease thou somewhat the ⁱgrievous servitude of thy father, and his heavy yoke that he put upon us, and we will serve thee.

5 And he said unto them, ^jCome again unto me after three days. And the people departed.

6 ¶ And king Rehoboam ^ktook counsel with the old men that had stood before Solomon his father while he yet lived, saying, ^lWhat counsel give ye ^mme to return answer to this people?

7 And they spake unto him, saying, ⁿIf thou be kind to this people, and please them, and ^ospeak good words to them, they will be thy servants for ever.

8 But ^phe forsook the counsel which the old men gave him, and took counsel with the young men that were brought up with him, that stood before him.

NOTES.

CHAP. X. V. 1-19. (Notes, 1 Kings xi. 9-40. xii. 1-20.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The wisest of mere men in some things act imprudently, especially when, by sin, they provoke God to leave them to themselves: nay, the most equitable princes may be betrayed into partial, oppressive, or unwarrantable measures: and this is the general consequence of being drawn, by their favourites, or their passions, into lavish expenses. Thus, some cause of complaint will exist in every kingdom, of which turbulent and ambitious men will avail themselves. (Note, 2 Sam. xv. 1-6. P. O. 1-12.) For, whilst we all need so many allowances for ourselves, we are naturally indisposed to make allowances for others. Indeed, very many would be dissatisfied, even if God were to place over them perfectly wise and righteous governors: for do not they murmur against his own most righteous dispensations? Do they not regard his holy law as a heavy yoke, a grievous servitude? and are they not ungrateful for his manifold goodness? Nay, the very kingdom of the Prince of peace, though his throne is established in mercy, doth not give satisfaction. Numbers "will not have him to reign over them;" numbers neglect his service because they think him an austere Lord; numbers renounce their professed subjection to him, and prefer the yoke of sin and Satan; and, alas! the impatience, the negligence, the reluctance to his professed service, which most Christians discover, evince that they want somewhat to be eased even of his yoke. Yet, his wisdom, righteousness, truth, goodness, and mercy are infinite; "his yoke is easy, and his burden light;" and the whole blame of our uneasiness rests upon ourselves alone. This reflection should teach us to "abhor ourselves," and to pray continually, "turn thou me, and so shall I be turned." And, being so culpable ourselves, we should learn to bear with the perverseness of others, and to prefer lenient to violent measures. But nothing manifests greater folly than affronting, menacing language, when united with indecision and weakness in perilous circumstances.—No man can bequeath his prosperity, any more than his wisdom, to his heirs; though our children will generally be affected by our conduct. Let us then seek those good things which will be our own for ever; and implore the blessing of God upon our posterity, in preference to wealth or worldly exaltation: let us lay our account with vicissitudes and vexations on earth, and with fickleness and ingratitude from man: and let us learn to depend on the nation luxurious and self-indulgent, which hath prospered in it, from the beginning to this day.

V. 22-28. (Notes, 1 Kings iv. 21. x. 23-29.)

V. 29-31. Solomon's apostasy and idolatry are not at all hinted at in this narration; and this forms a cogent argument, that, being repented of and forgiven, they would never be remembered against him to his condemnation; though they were in one place recorded for a warning to others in all future ages. (Notes, 1 Kings xi.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In proportion as we possess true wisdom, we shall perceive its excellency, and labour to obtain an increase of it; and in the same proportion we shall become more indifferent about worldly wealth, and more liberal in our use of it to good purposes, if God hath bestowed it upon us. For true wisdom and happiness are inseparably connected; but no such alliance is formed between riches and the enjoyment even of this present life. (Note, Luke xii. 15-21.) It is therefore far more desirable to be connected with those who can teach us wisdom, than with those who can give us wealth: let us, then, acquaint ourselves with the divine Saviour, that, becoming his disciples and servants, we may "find rest for our souls;" and we shall in that case see more glory, experience more pleasure, and appropriate more riches, than our hearts can previously conceive. He will and can "do for us exceeding abundantly above all that we can ask or think;" and the meanness of his servants will be great above all the ungodly princes of the earth: nor can they be separated from him, though, whilst present with the body they are absent from the Lord, as to the full enjoyment of his presence, and communion with him. Next to this, let us value the acquaintance of those who love and serve him, that we may hear the wisdom that God hath put into their hearts; and let us follow them as far as they follow Christ, but no further, whatever may be their reputation in the church.—Seeing God buries in the depth of the sea the sins of his believing servants, we should be tender of their reputations, as well as careful to avoid their mistakes and falls.—As to worldly grandeur, what is it, that we should covet it? Neither authority, wealth, magnificence, nor reputation for wisdom, can ward off the stroke of death, or prepare us for it, or reconcile us to it. But thanks be to God, who giveth victory to the true believer, even over this dreadful enemy, through Jesus Christ our Lord!

B. C. 975.

Rehoboam, preparing to reduce Israel, is forbidden by the prophet Shemaiah, 1-4. He builds and fortifies several cities, 5-12. The priests and Levites, being cast off by Jeroboam, resort to Jerusalem, attended by other pious Israelites, 13-17. Rehoboam's wives and children, 18-23.

AND "when Rehoboam was come to Jerusalem, he gathered of the house of Judah and Benjamin an hundred and fourscore thousand chosen men, which were warriors, to fight against Israel, that he might bring the kingdom again to Rehoboam.

2 But the word of the LORD came "to Shemaiah the man of God, saying,

3 Speak unto Rehoboam the son of Solomon, king of Judah, and "to all Israel in Judah and Benjamin, saying,

4 Thus saith the LORD, Ye shall not go up nor fight "against your brethren: "return every man to his house; "for this thing is done of me. And "they obeyed the words of the LORD, and returned from going against Jeroboam.

5 ¶ And Rehoboam dwelt in Jerusalem, and "built cities for defence in Judah.

6 He built even "Beth-lehem, and "Etam, and "Tekoa,

And "Beth-zur, and "Shoco, and "Adullam,

8 And "Gath, and "Mareshah, and "Ziph,

9 And Adoraim, and "Lachish, and Azekah,

10 And "Zorah, and Aijalon, and "Hebron, which are in Judah and in Benjamin, fenced cities.

11 And he fortified the strongholds, and put "captains in them, and store of victual, and of oil and wine.

12 And in every several city he "put shields and spears, and made them exceeding strong, "having Judah and Benjamin on his side.

13 ¶ And the priests and the Levites that were in all Israel "resorted to him out of all their coasts.

14 For the Levites left "their suburbs and "their possession, and came to Judah and Jerusalem: for "Jeroboam and his sons had cast them off from executing the priest's office unto the LORD.

15 And he ordained him priests for the high places, and "for the devils, and "for the calves which he had made.

16 And "after them out of all the tribes of Israel, such as "set their hearts to seek the LORD God of Israel, came to Jerusalem, "to sacrifice unto the LORD God of their fathers.

17 So they "strengthened the kingdom of Judah, and made Rehoboam the son of Solomon strong three years: for "three years they walked in the way of David and Solomon.

18 ¶ And Rehoboam took him Mahalath the daughter of Jerimoth the son of David to wife, and Abihail the daughter of "Eliab the son of Jesse;

19 Which bare him children; Jeush, and Shamariah, and Zaphan.

20 And after her he took "Maachah the daughter of "Absalom; which bare him "Abijah, and Attai, and Ziza, and Shelomith.

21 And Rehoboam loved Maachah the daughter of Absalom above all his wives and his concubines: (for he took "eighteen wives, and threescore concubines; and begat twenty and eight sons, and threescore daughters.)

22 And Rehoboam "made Abijah the son of Maachah the chief, to be ruler among his brethren: for he thought to make him king.

23 And "he dealt wisely, and "dispersed of all his children throughout all the countries of Judah and Benjamin, unto "every fenced city; and he gave them victual in abundance. And he desired "many wives.

that have been greatly reduced. It is probable, that scarcely any either of the priests or Levites remained behind on this occasion, for we read nothing of them in the subsequent history of Israel. This must be allowed to have been as noble a testimony for the cause of God, against apostates and idolaters, as any history hath recorded of a whole body of professed ministers.—Along with them numbers of the pious Israelites left their estates, and came to unite with the tribes of Judah and Benjamin. They might bring away with them many of their effects: and, as the land afforded room enough for them, their numbers and treasures greatly strengthened the kingdom of Judah, and rendered it almost equal in force to that of Israel. But the chief advantage was, that nearly all the true religion of the nation was concentrated in that division of it. Accordingly, for three years the kingdom of Judah was greatly strengthened; whilst the king and the people in general adhered to the worship of God, as in the days of David, and in the best times of Solomon: but afterwards matters took another turn.—It is not probable, that Solomon would have been thus joined with David, as the good pattern which Rehoboam and his subjects followed, if he had persevered and perished in his apostasy.

V. 18-21. Rehoboam imitated his father in multiplying wives, but not to the same enormous excess: and he does not appear to have married any heathen women.—Absalom, here mentioned, seems to have been a Benjamite; for Gibeah belonged to the tribe of Benjamin. (Marg. Ref. xiii. 2. Marg.)

V. 22, 23. Rehoboam acted from partial affection, and by his own authority, in advancing Abijah above his elder brethren: whereas, God himself chose Solomon to be king in preference to David's other sons. (Note, 1 Chr. xxix. 1.) It is probable, that Rehoboam's conduct gave umbrage to his other sons; and that he dispersed them, in the fenced cities, in honourable and affluent situations, to prevent their uniting against Abijah: but perhaps he also confided in them, to retain these cities in their duty, and to defend them against the common enemy. Whatever were his motive, it was deemed good policy by his contemporaries.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It is commonly more prudent to manage moderate possessions well, than to risk losing them by grasping at greater advantages: and when an egregious error has exposed us to some heavy loss, it is generally wisest to sit down by it, lest we be betrayed into still more fatal mistakes.—It is in vain to contend with the purpose of God, when he makes it known unto us: and, as his word declares that none shall enjoy durable peace in the practise of wickedness, it is madness to expect it: yet, by this rule of judgment, what a world of madness and folly do we live in!—Even they, who are destitute of true faith and grace, frequently pay some regard to the word of God, and, for a time, are restrained by it from actions to which they are inclined; and do many things which are disagreeable to them: and even this temporary faith, and external obedience, are often power, faithfulness, and love of that God, who, in correcting his children, or punishing his enemies, will never fail of performing his largest promises to those who trust in him.

NOTES.

CHAP. XI. V. 1-4. (Notes, 1 Kings xii. 21-24.)

V. 5-12. (Marg. Ref.) The Lord did not permit Rehoboam to wage war against the newly erected kingdom of Israel; yet it was allowable and prudent for him to take all proper measures for the defence of his remaining dominions: this he did by repairing and fortifying several cities, to obstruct the entrance, or retard the progress, of Jeroboam and his troops, in case he should attempt an invasion.—Perhaps he was become weary of his young counsellors, and disposed to hearken to more sage advisers: and his remaining subjects were very hearty and united in his interests.

V. 13-17. When Jeroboam had established the worship of the golden calves, and prevented his subjects from going to Jerusalem; (Notes, 1 Kings xii. 25-33;) it is probable, that all the priests and Levites unanimously protested against this idolatry; and were therefore laid aside, to make way for a more compliant priesthood. As Jeroboam established no other idolatry than that of the calves: the language here employed teaches us, that the worship paid to them was actually rendered to devils; though he professed, and probably intended, by them to worship the God of Israel. For it was in a way which he had expressly prohibited, and which was infinitely dishonourable to him; and therefore it was only acceptable to Satan, and his detestable associates in rebellion. (Note, Lev. xvii. 3-7.)—The word rendered devils, in the texts of the New Testament referred to, is daemon, which often, in heathen writers, has a good sense; that is, it is used for the objects of their worship: but these were evil spirits; and the word has always a bad meaning in Scripture, and denotes abominable idols, and evil spirits as worshipped under their names. Holy angels are never called demons. It is not certain whether Jeroboam had deprived the priests and Levites of their dues, to maintain his new priesthood: but it seems, that, for the present, they might have retained their cities, suburbs, and possessions, if they would have remained inactive; yet, their situation would have been extremely ensnaring and perilous, and it afforded them little or no prospect of usefulness. In the days of David and Solomon, they had become generally attached to the worship of God at the sanctuary, as well as to the royal family of Judah; and, as a body, they seem to have been more pious and zealous, than at any other period: they therefore magnanimously determined, with one consent, to desert their cities and possessions, and entirely to leave the apostate Israelites, thus "shaking off the very dust of their feet for a testimony against them."—Jeroboam probably was glad to be rid of them: but they were cordially welcomed by the king and people of Judah; and doubtless were provided for among their brethren, whose emoluments must

"they may know my service, and the service of the kingdoms of the countries.

9 So "Shishak king of Egypt came up against Jerusalem, and "took away the treasures of the house of the LORD, and the treasures of the king's house; he took all: he carried away also "the shields of gold which Solomon had made.

10 Instead of which, king Rehoboam made "shields of brass, and committed them to the hands of "the chief of the guard, that kept the entrance of the king's house.

11 And when the king entered into the house of the LORD, the guard came and fetched them, and brought them again into the guard-chamber.

12 And "when he humbled himself, the wrath of the LORD turned from him, that he would not destroy him altogether: and "also in Judah things went well.

13 ¶ So king Rehoboam strengthened himself in Jerusalem, and reigned: for "Rehoboam was one and forty years old when he began to reign, and he reigned seventeen years in Jerusalem, "the city which the LORD had chosen out of all the tribes of Israel, "to put his name there. And his mother's name was Naamah, "an Ammonitess.

14 And he did evil, because "he "prepared not his heart to seek the LORD.

15 Now the acts of Rehoboam, "first and last, are they not written in the "book of "Shemaiah the prophet, and of "Iddo the seer concerning genealogies? And there were "wars between Rehoboam and Jeroboam continually.

16 And Rehoboam "slept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David: and "Abijah his son reigned in his stead.

—24.) The leading men also and the bulk of the nation, so generally and openly renounced the worship of God at the temple, that it was adjudged a national apostasy.—The ten tribes had before apostatized with Jeroboam; and when Rehoboam, with Judah and Benjamin, followed their example, "all Israel," as a nation, "had forsaken the law of the LORD;" and the pious remnant formed only a few exceptions to the general rule.

V. 2. (Note, 1 Kings xiv. 25-28.) It is probable, that Shishak was of another family than Pharaoh, whose daughter Solomon had married; and was excited to this invasion by the reports of the immense treasures, which that prince had collected at Jerusalem, with the division in his dominions, and the weakness of Rehoboam's administration. But the Lord gave him power to execute his rapacious purposes; which he would not have done, if the people had not transgressed against him.

V. 3, 4. (Marg. Ref.) It is likely, that several of Rehoboam's sons were slain, or taken captive, by Shishak, when he took the cities in which they governed.

V. 5, 6. Whilst the king and his nobles were consulting what measures to adopt, in this dangerous extremity, and perhaps were about to surrender to the conqueror; the prophet, in a few words, reminded them, that Shishak's power over them was the effect of the Lord's righteous indignation, who was contending with them for their apostasy. The time and circumstances indeed of their affliction, evidently proclaimed this truth, yet they had not before attended to it: but this message had an immediate effect upon them; for they humbled themselves, and acknowledged the justice of God in their punishment. (Marg. Ref.) An external reformation, and a regard to the worship at the temple, during the remainder of Rehoboam's reign, were consequent to this humiliation; but it went no further, at least with him.

V. 7-11. (Notes, Judg. iii. 1, 2. 1 Kings xxi. 27-29. Ps. lxxvi. 10.) It is probable, that Shishak had intended to give up the city to be plundered by his army: but God suddenly disposed him to greater moderation and clemency, than could possibly have been expected from such a man in his circumstances. So that he contented himself with emptying the treasures of the temple and of the king, and carrying away the golden shields which Solomon had made for magnificence rather than for use: (Note, 1 Kings x. 16, 17.) and he did not proceed to rob the temple of its sacred vessels. Neither did he deprive the inhabitants of their private property; but perhaps he exacted a sum of money, in token of their becoming his servants. He was, however, permitted thus far to prevail, that Rehoboam and his subjects might experience the different effects of keeping close to the worship of God, as in the prosperous days of David and Solomon; and of renouncing his service, and in consequence being reduced under the power of the conqueror, and preserved from entire ruin merely by his unexpected clemency, on their unreserved submission. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 12. Things went, &c. Or "in Judah there were good things;" (Marg.) that is, there were a number of true believers, spiritual worshippers, and servants of God, especially such as came out of Israel: for whose sake Rehoboam recompensed with temporary and external advantages.—In seasons of prevailing ungodliness and public disturbances, the ministers of religion will be exposed to peculiar trials; as they must either act contrary to their consciences, or expose themselves to great loss and peril. This is the time, when God puts the sincerity of their faith and love to the proof: on these great occasions, he peculiarly calls upon them to bear testimony to his truth, and to protest at all events, against enormous evils, by whomsoever patronized. As connivance and silence in such a case are very criminal; so it is peculiarly honourable to God, and convincing to the consciences of men, when they readily renounce their secular interests, and stand up boldly for the cause of God, without regarding consequences: nor will such behaviour ever lose its reward.—It may be their duty to retire from such places as will not receive their testimony, where they can do no good, where their temptations are great, and where they may be exposed to still fiercer persecutions: and in that case no possessions or connexions ought to be regarded.—When the ministers and ordinances of God are driven from any place, it is time for them, "who set their hearts to seek the Lord," to come out and be separate, that they may not be seduced to have fellowship with the worshippers and servants of Satan. Trials like these, serve to separate the chaff from the wheat; and indeed untried faith is not much to be depended on: but when we have been proved, and it appears, that we are willing to renounce our worldly interests, as far as called to it, for the sake of Christ and the gospel, we have got one good evidence that we are truly his disciples.—Those ministers should be welcomed and encouraged, who evidently prefer their work, with a good conscience, to their possessions; and if things were as they should be, their more affluent brethren would readily share their emoluments with them, if they saw them destitute.—It is genuine policy for any kingdom to entertain such as are willing to leave their estates and native country, purely for conscience-sake; for they will prove the strength and bulwark of the state, that gives them a comfortable asylum. But "Ichabod, the glory is departed," may be written on that kingdom which drives them away, by superstitious or idolatrous impositions and persecutions.—Nothing can injure us, whilst we keep close to the worship and service of God: but without true faith and grace, all apparent zeal and external profession at length will wither. Yet, many deem themselves passing good, because they are circumstantially not so faulty, in the best part of their character, as some eminently godly persons were in the greatest blemishes of their lives!—It is indeed well, when they, who begin foolishly, grow wiser by experience: but, alas! that wisdom is of little value, which is engrossed by the care of secular interests, to the neglect of the immortal soul, through the indulgence of worldly lusts, and departing from the living God.

NOTES.

CHAP. XII. V. 1. Rehoboam's religion seems to have proceeded wholly from his fears of being given up into the hands of Jeroboam: when, therefore, he was become so strong, that, as he supposed, he had nothing to apprehend from that quarter, he became openly irreligious and idolatrous. (Notes, 1 Kings xiv. 21

8 And now ye think to withstand ³the kingdom of the LORD in the hand of the sons of David; and ye be ⁴a great multitude, and there are ⁵with you golden calves, which Jeroboam made you for gods.

9 Have ye not ⁶cast out the priests of the LORD, the sons of Aaron, and the Levites, and have ⁷made you priests after the manner of the nations of other lands? so that whosoever cometh to ⁸consecrate himself ⁹with a young bullock and seven rams, the same may be a priest of them that are ¹⁰no gods.

10 But as for us, ¹¹the LORD is our God, and we have not forsaken him; and ¹²the priests, which minister unto the LORD, are the sons of Aaron, and the Levites wait upon their business:

it: robs them of substantial blessings, and substitutes a mere empty worthless shew of good; and whatever else be preserved or obtained, it will ruin the immortal soul, except true repentance intervene.—Unless “the heart be prepared to seek the Lord,” we must perish: and if convinced, that we are unable of ourselves to effect this preparation, let us pray fervently, according to the language of Scripture, “Turn thou me, and so shall I be turned.” “Create in me a clean heart, and renew a right spirit within me.” If we do this in sincerity, using the other means of grace, and watching against sin and temptation; our endeavours will not be in vain. Where these things are wanting, formality and hypocrisy form a man's highest attainments; his chief advantages prove an aggravation of his crimes; and a life of vanity and vexation will be closed by a miserable death. May we then look to our hearts, and keep them with all diligence; for the Lord especially regards them; and may be prepare our hearts unto himself, that we may serve him with perseverance and delight, whilst we live; possess a strong consolation and joyful hope, when we are called to walk through the valley of the shadow of death, and so, have an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of Jesus Christ! Amen.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIII. V. 1, 2. (Notes, xi. 18-23. 1 Kings xv. 1-3. Marg. Ref.)

V. 3. The kingdom of the ten tribes had been given to Jeroboam; but he and his people had, by apostasy and idolatry, merited the severest punishment, which Abijah was permitted to execute. Rehoboam had aimed to recover dominion over all Israel; but perhaps Abijah only endeavoured to secure his own kingdom.—The numbers which they brought into the field were immense; but when every man was a soldier, small kingdoms could raise vast armies upon any great emergency. Five hundred thousand had been numbered of Judah in the time of David, and it had received a great increase on the division of the kingdom; yet Israel raised an army twice as large out of all their tribes. (Notes, xii. 13-17. 2 Sam. xxiv. 9. 1 Chr. xxi. 5. xxvii. 1-15.)

V. 4-12. Jeroboam seems to have been the aggressor in this war: yet Abijah had marched into his country; and from a hill, whence Jeroboam and many of the Israelites could hear him, he spake to them as one who wished to bring the contest to an amicable conclusion. At least this seems to have been his ostensible design; though his speech was well suited to encourage his own troops, and to dismay those of Jeroboam. Abijah bears a bad character in Kings; (Note, 1 Kings xv. 2-4;) yet, on this occasion, he spoke religiously; and he seems to have had a kind of confidence in God, grounded on the maintenance of his ordinances, and the number of pious worshippers, in his kingdom. The basis of his address was truth; but there was much false colouring, in his manner of stating it, according to the too general custom of eloquent orators. For the covenant respecting the kingdom, made with David in behalf of his posterity, (except as it related to the Messiah,) was conditional; and neither Solomon, Rehoboam, nor Abijah, had been attentive to the stipulations. (vii. 17, 18. Notes, 2 Sam. vii. 12-16. 1 Kings ix. 6-9. xi. 9-13. Ps. lxxxix. 19-37. cxxxii. 11, 12.)—“A covenant of salt” is one solemnly ratified by a sacrifice and a feast, at both of which salt was used; that is to say, an unchangeable covenant; (Notes, Lev. i. 13. Num. xvii. 19;) but the Lord evidently did not consider himself irreversibly engaged to continue the kingdom of all Israel to David's posterity.—Jeroboam had indeed acted wickedly in his manner of seizing and governing the kingdom of Israel: yet, it had been granted to him by God himself, and Abijah never mentioned that circumstance. (Notes, 1 Kings xi. 14-40.)—The persons, who revolted from Rehoboam and made Jeroboam king, had acted with great precipitation and ingratitude; but perhaps it was and the kingdom were spared: so that we read no more of Shishak, who, by one means or other, was kept from coming to extort any further tribute, or services from them. (Notes, Gen. xxxii. 6-28. xxxiii. 4.)

V. 13. The city, &c. It was a peculiar honour conferred on Rehoboam for his fathers' sake, and his greatest advantage, that he reigned in that city which the LORD had chosen for his temple, and instituted worship; (Marg. Ref.) but it seems to be here mentioned as an aggravation of the guilt of his ungodliness.

V. 14. Rehoboam's religion was a reluctant formal service; his heart was not engaged; he never called upon “all that was within him to praise the Lord:” he neither desired, nor endeavoured after, that preparation of an humble, believing, and pious disposition of heart, which is requisite in order to worship God spiritually and with delight. This was the source of his instability; and thus he was easily drawn into open ungodliness and wickedness. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It is a very common but most lamentable case, that men who in distress or danger, or apparently near death, seem very much engaged in seeking God, often throw aside their religion when they have received a merciful deliverance. But the warning, “Sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee,” deserves the most serious consideration of all, who are tempted to such vile ingratitude. The Lord can soon arrest them by renewed afflictions; reduce them to still greater extremities; and bring trouble upon them from those quarters whence it was least expected. (Note, John v. 10-15.)—Ungodly prosperity serves only to increase vain confidence, and to invite rapacity, without affording any real security; and, all methods of defence prove ineffectual, when an angry God “arises to that judgment, which he hath commanded.”—Every affliction has a voice, and delivers a message from the Lord; but sinners do not regard or understand: it is, therefore, a singular mercy when he sends them “an interpreter,” to explain the voice of his rod by that of his word. (Note, Job xxxiii. 19-26.)—Humiliation before God for sin, and cordial acknowledgments that he is just in all that he inflicts or threatens, are essential to true repentance: but this may be counterfeited both by word and deed. Yet, when there are merely external appearances of contrition, our merciful God will often grant respites, in order to encourage true penitents by shewing his readiness to forgive. This is especially the case in his dealings with sinful nations: for a general external humiliation before God, under national judgments, is a good evidence that their iniquities are not yet full: and when there is a number of true believers among them, who are protected from oppression and persecution; the Lord will grant some deliverance, and his wrath shall not be poured out upon them as yet.—Amidst all our abounding iniquity, impiety, and infidelity, these kingdoms seem hitherto to have been spared on these accounts: may he reform, and not destroy us!—When the Lord is pleased to shew mercy, he can dispose the hardest hearts to compassion, the most rapacious to moderation, or the most impious to fear profaning sacred things: for he rules the impetuous lusts of men as he does the raging ocean, saying, “Hitherto shalt thou go, and no further, and here shall thy proud waves be stayed.” But his wrath may occasion many painful effects, when not poured out unto the uttermost. These are, however, often intended in mercy, and are of salutary tendency: for it is good to be convinced by any sufferings, short of eternal misery, that by forsaking the Lord we are cruel to ourselves; and that his service, which is but another name for liberty, peace, and felicity, cannot be renounced, without our becoming the miserable slaves of the worst of tyrants and oppressors: and whenever the heart is truly humbled, the afflictions will be removed, or alleviated, by divine consolations.—Sin always debases those who commit 13 ¶ But Jeroboam caused an ambushment to come about behind them: so they were before Judah, and the ambushment was behind them.

14 And when Judah looked back, behold, the battle was before and behind: and they cried unto the Lord, and the priests sounded with the trumpets.

15 Then the men of Judah gave a shout; and as the men of Judah shouted, it came to pass, that God smote Jeroboam and all Israel before Abijah and Judah.

16 And the children of Israel fled before Judah: and God delivered them into their hand.

17 And Abijah and his people slew them with a great slaughter: so there fell down slain of Israel five hundred thousand chosen men.

18 Thus the children of Israel were brought under at that time, and the children of Judah prevailed, because they relied upon the Lord God of their fathers.

u xvi. 8, 9. xx. 20. 2 Kings xviii. 5. 1 Chr. v. 20. Ps. xxii. 4, 5. xlvii. 5. Dan. iii. 28. Eph. i. 12.

not candid to call them indiscriminately "vain men, the children of Belial." Rehoboam had given them no small provocation; he was surely old enough to have behaved more wisely, if he had not been actuated by a proud domineering disposition: and it was not so much owing either to his lenity, his timidity, or his weakness, that he had not prosecuted his pretensions by war: as to the Divine prohibition. (Notes, 1 Kings xii. 8—24.)—But Abijah's words were more forcible, when he exposed the apostasy and idolatry of the kingdom of Israel; their impiety and sacrifice in excluding the priests of the Lord from their possessions; and the shameful manner, in which any worthless man was made a priest, who could and would bring the sacrifice appointed by way of consecration: for, by these crimes Jeroboam, and his subjects, were drawing down the vengeance of heaven upon them. (Notes, xi. 13—17. 1 Kings xii. 26—33. xiii. 33, 34. xiv. 5—16.) But what Abijah urged, concerning the state of true religion in Judah, was not strictly just; and, as spoken by him, it savoured of ostentation. Abijah himself was not a godly man; and idolatry was evidently connived at in his days. (Note, xiv. 2—5.) Yet it was true, that the men of Judah had the priests, ordinances, and worship of God among them; that there were numbers of pious worshippers in the land; that their's was the more righteous cause; that the Lord was on their side, and their Captain, whilst the Israelites fought against him; and that the presence of the priests blowing the sacred trumpets, according to the law, was a token of his presence with them and favour to them. (Notes, Num. x. 1—10.) The expression, "after the manner of the nations," (9,) shews that the laws of Moses were not made according to the customs of the gentiles, as many suppose; but entirely distinct from them: and that the similarity which in many instances has been traced, actually arose from the idolaters, in several particulars, adopting or imitating the usages of Israel.

V. 13—22. Jeroboam, like a profane politician, (Note, 1 Kings xii. 26—29,) disregarded all Abijah's pleas, and rested his whole dependence on the valour of his troops, and the skilfulness of his arrangements. Whilst Abijah therefore was speaking about peace, he was preparing for action: and to make, as he supposed, sure of the event, to the superiority of his numbers he added an ambushment, that he might surround and destroy the whole army of Judah, probably intending to seize upon that kingdom also. But the people cried unto the Lord in this extremity, as expecting help and deliverance from him alone; whilst the sounding of the sacred trumpets caused numbers to shout with confidence of success: and, according to their hope, it pleased God to smite the Israelites in such a manner, that they were unable to resist or to flee; and thus five hundred thousand were slain in one day, which is the largest slaughter that history records to have been ever made in any one battle. This decisive blow gave Judah so great a superiority, that it can only be ascribed to a divine interposition, that the kingdom of Israel was not entirely subverted. Many cities, however, were subdued, and among the rest Beth-el fell into the hands of the victor; yet we do not read that he removed the golden calf, and probably the city was soon conceded to Jeroboam. That prince, however, never recovered from this blow, for the Lord soon after smote him, and he died: (Note, Acts xii. 20—23:) yet Abijah died nearly two years before him, and did not long enjoy the fruits of his victory, for which he made very ungrateful returns. Though destitute of piety, he seems to have possessed great vigour and capacity. During his short reign he became very powerful; he had a numerous family; and his ways and sayings were so remarkable as to be particularly recorded by the prophet Iddo; of whom, however, we have no further knowledge. (Notes, 1 Kings xv. 1—9.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—12. The promptness of mankind to war lamentably proclaims the depravity of our nature, and the influence that the great murderer of bodies and souls has upon the minds of men, even in the determinations of senates and in the cabinets of kings. Nor can vainglorious commanders more delight in seeking renown, power, or revenge, by the destruction of the human species, than many of their inferiors do, in listing under their banners, seconding their aims, and rushing upon danger and death, that they may attempt the slaughter of those who never injured or even saw them. Such stubborn facts stand in the page of every history, a confutation of the ridiculous encomiums, which self-flattering speculators have passed upon the philanthropy of the human heart, and the sufficiency of human reason, for every purpose of virtue and

CHAP. XIV.

Abijah dies, and Asa succeeds him. 1. He abolishes idolatry, 2—5. Enjoying peace, he fortifies his kingdom, and establishes a large army, 6—8. Being attacked by Zerah, with an immense army of Ethiopians, he calls on God, is victorious, and acquires much spoil, 9—15.

religion. The annals of mankind form one continued narration of bloodshed in the most wanton and unnecessary manner, in pursuit of honour and dominion, or in seeking to wrest the sword of vengeance from the hands of the Supreme Judge. The millions, who have thus perished miserably, "hateful, and hating one another," exceed almost imagination: and to crown the whole, the chief actors in this bloody tragedy have almost engrossed the applause of their fellow-mortals; or shared it with the poets, orators, and historians, who have excited them by infamous panegyrics to such destructive pursuits! Compare the whole with the short command, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself;" and then bring in an impartial verdict concerning the heart of man, and the state of human nature. (Note, Lev. xix. 18.)—Yet, all the blood thus shed must be one day accounted for, as murder, on whomsoever that load of guilt may fall. Surely then, war should be always considered as the last resource, a desperate remedy, never to be used when the welfare of the state can be otherwise secured! A righteous cause, a willingness for peace on reasonable terms, and a well grounded confidence in God, should be considered as the grand requisites, in the management of this direful appeal to the supreme arbiter of kings and nations.—But, it is easy to speak on these topics, without the fear of God possessing the heart. Many presume upon external privileges, who disregard his precepts: they boast of the form of godliness, without the power of it; they are justly severe upon the crimes of other men, yet they do not amend their own: but palliate the offences of their own party, whilst they aggravate the misconduct of their adversaries. These are not only the arts of those, who purposely frame manifestos to varnish their ambition with the shew of equity; but are often employed by such as really have justice on their side, yet forget that real beauty is disgraced and rendered suspected, by being painted. It is obvious, however, that ungodly princes have often prospered, because their enemies have been still more abandoned; because they had justice on their side; because many of their subjects were pious; because more external honour was paid to the truth and ordinances of God among their subjects; or because the appeal to him, and professed reliance on him, was more openly made in the decision of the contest.

V. 13—22. The wise politicians of the world generally treat, with contempt, all arguments grounded on the state of religion, and the favour of God towards his worshippers; their whole dependence is "on an arm of flesh," and if their confidence be disappointed, they ascribe it to fortune, or to the chance of war. But, the God of battles gives victory to whom he pleases: against him all courage and conduct are vain; and he will appear for them, who rely on and call upon him in the time of distress. He hath often brought his people into imminent danger, to exercise their faith, and to put vigour into their prayers, which will be sure to terminate in shouts of victory. But, to triumph in those contests, which cause so many thousands, and hundreds of thousands, of the human species to expire in agony, and their immortal souls to be sent to the tribunal of God and an eternal state, can give little pleasure to a feeling heart; except as his justice, and faithful care of his people, are seen and adored in them. And least of all, can success in civil wars, which are commonly conducted with the most unrelenting rancour and most tremendous slaughter, give satisfaction to any benevolent mind. Nor are the victories acquired in those fierce, though unbloody contests, which rend the church of Christ to the disgrace of the common cause, and the joy of the common enemy, to be more rejoiced in. But to conquer our own passions, to prevail against the tempter and the world, and to overcome evil with good, are victories to be gained by faith, patience, and prayer, in which we may safely and purely rejoice. And when the conquerors and the conquered in bloody battles will join in execrating their own and each other's madness: "when the earth shall disclose her blood, and shall no more cover her slain;" then shall we receive the unsullied palm, the conqueror's noblest crown. Nay, death and the grave, which so dreadfully triumph over those whom the Lord smites in his anger, and so speedily wrench the prosperous from all their grandeur, will never hurt us; indeed, we shall then gain a final victory over that last enemy, and mortality shall be swallowed up of life.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIV. V. 1. The land, &c. Abijah's vigour and success laid the foundation of Asa's peace and prosperity. Jeroboam, and his son Nadab, remained quiet during the short time which they reigned over Israel, after Abijah's victory. Baasha began to reign before the close of Asa's third year; but though

2 And Asa did that which was good and right in the eyes of the LORD his God:

3 For he took away the altars of the strange gods, and the high places, and brake down the images, and cut down the groves;

4 And he commanded Judah to seek the LORD God of their fathers, and to do the law and the commandment.

5 Also he took away out of all the cities of Judah, the high places and the images; and the kingdom was quiet before him.

6 ¶ And he built fenced cities in Judah; for the land had rest, and he had no war in those years; because the LORD had given him rest.

7 Therefore he said unto Judah, Let us build these cities, and make about them walls and towers, gates and bars, while the land is yet before us; because we have sought the LORD our God, we have sought him, and he hath given us rest on every side. So they built and prospered.

8 ¶ And Asa had an army of men that bare targets and spears: out of Judah three hundred thousand; and out of Benjamin, that bare shields and drew bows, two hundred and fourscore thousand: all these were mighty men of valour.

9 ¶ And there came out against them Zerah the Ethiopian with an host of a thousand thousand, and three hundred chariots; and came unto Mareshah.

10 Then Asa went out against him, and they set the battle in array in the valley of Zephathah at Mareshah.

15 They smote also the tents of cattle, and carried away sheep and camels in abundance, and returned to Jerusalem.

CHAP. XV.

The prophecy of Azariah before Asa, 1-7. Asa puts away idolatry, assembles the people, and enters into covenant with God, 8-15. He removes his mother from being queen, for her idolatry; yet the high places are not taken away, 16, 17. He brings the dedicated things into the temple, and enjoys a long peace, 18, 19.

AND the Spirit of God came upon Azariah the son of Oded:

2 And he went out to meet Asa, and said unto him, Hear ye me, Asa, and all Judah and Benjamin:

the LORD is with you, while ye be with him; and if ye seek the LORD, may be serviceable to others: but nothing will profit our own souls, except that religion, which induces us to "do that which is good and right in the eyes of the LORD." Indeed, this alone can prepare us for arduous and perilous services; and influence us to undertake, to pursue without weariness, and by cheerful perseverance to accomplish, designs of usefulness in our various situations: and when men in authority, (or others according to the duties of their stations,) properly attempt reformation, they often find less difficulty than they expected: for they are approved even by the consciences of those men, whose sins oppose their designs.—In all our prosperity we should notice and acknowledge the hand of God; if he gives rest, none can cause trouble; and they who uprightly seek him shall find peace and comfort. Yet, while in this world, we must prepare for trials and conflicts; we can never be safe except we be watching; and, though the grace of God will indeed be sufficient for his people, none of them will have any strength to spare. Our utmost watchfulness and diligence will not secure us from tribulation: but the consciousness of having heartily served the Lord in prosperity, will turn to us for a testimony, that we are indeed his people, and he our God: and this will encourage our confidence in him in the hour of trouble and temptation. When we can clearly see that "God is for us," we shall be enabled to rest in him, and to call upon him with more vigorous faith and enlarged expectation; and then we shall perceive, that our own weakness, or the power of our assailants, is no good reason for discouragement. Improbabilities, and even apparent impossibilities, of help and deliverance, are perfectly easy to an almighty arm: and if the glory of God engage him on our side, no created power can prevail against us. Indeed, it is our duty to employ every prudent precaution, to use all proper means, and to exert the whole strength which he hath given us; and in this way he commonly helps us, both in our temporal and spiritual concerns: but he can as readily work without us, as by us; and when we go forth in his name, and are disposed to give him the glory, we shall certainly have all desirable success.—They, whom the Lord smites, cannot recover their strength, nor they whom he intimidates their courage; and all things work together for the good of those whom he favours. However he may deal with us in temporal things, if we are the soldiers of Jesus Christ, we must be enriched by every conflict, and prove gainers by all our losses: and the approaching victory over our last enemy death, will make way for our entrance into "His presence, where is fulness of joy, and pleasures for evermore."

d 4. 15. xxxiii. 12. 13. Is. lv. 7. 8. Jer. xxix. 13. 14. Matt. vii. 7. 8.

"there was war between him and Asa all their days;" (1 Kings xv. 16;) it did not for some time occasion much disturbance to the peace of Judah, through the enfeebled state of Israel.

V. 2-5. Asa not only behaved so well as to approve his conduct to man, but he aimed to act as in the sight of Him, who seeth the secret intentions of the heart; and accordingly "he had this testimony, that he pleased God." (Notes, 1 Kings xv. 14, 15.) He began his reign by abolishing those idolatries, which had been connived at in the preceding reigns, especially that of the sun-images; (Marg.) and by using his authority to retain the people in the worship of God at the temple, and to enforce obedience to his commandments. He afterwards carried his reformation still further; (Notes, xv. 2-15:) yet at last, the high places, where JEHOVAH was irregularly worshipped, were not removed, though the idolatrous altars were destroyed. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 6-8. The union of piety and prudence, in Asa's conduct, is worthy of notice and commendation. We may suppose that his army generally served in divisions by rotation, but could be marshalled all together upon occasion. (Note, 1 Chr. xxvii. 1-15.) The number of his soldiers was great, especially that of Benjamin; but probably many from the other tribes were numbered among them. (Notes, xvii. 13-19.)

V. 9-15. It is by no means certain, whether the Ethiopians or Cushites of Africa, or those near Arabia, are here intended: but they who suppose the former to be meant, conjecture that Zerah had subjugated his neighbours, the Egyptians; had taken possession of the cities and territories bordering on Egypt; and that he intended still further to extend his conquests, when he had seized upon the kingdom of Judah.—Asa's army was formidable, though not equal to Zerah's immense preparations. He, however, placed no confidence in them, but relied only on the protection of God. His prayer is the genuine language of faith. He was conscious that his aim had been to glorify the Lord, and promote his worship, in the time of his prosperity; and this encouraged him to look upon God as his reconciled Friend and Father. Having put himself and his people under his protection, he was persuaded, that none could prevail against them, without seeming at least to prevail against God. If his army had been superior to that of the enemy, it could not have secured the victory; if it had consisted of a few enfeebled dispirited troops, the Lord could have helped by them: for it was "nothing with him to help with many, or with them that had no power." (Notes, xx. 6-12. xxxii. 8. 1 Sam. xiv. 6-10.) Either way he desired to confide wholly in the Almighty, and to give him the glory of the victory. The event accorded to his faith: the Lord fought by Asa's subjects as his host, (13;) the Ethiopians were entirely overthrown, and dispersed; the spoil, which had been deposited in Gerar of the Philistines, and in other cities in that vicinity, was taken; and this most formidable invasion greatly enriched Judah. (Notes, xvi. 1-10.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The active talents and outward success of ungodly men sometimes make way for the peace and prosperity of those, whose leading aim it is to glorify God and promote true religion; and thus they, whose hearts are "not prepared to ye seek him, he will be found of you; but if ye forsake him, he will forsake you.

3 Now for a long season Israel hath been without the true God, and without a teaching priest, and without law.

4 But when they in their trouble did turn unto the LORD God of Israel, and sought him, he was found of them.

5 And in those times there was no peace to him that went out, nor to him that came in, but great vexations were upon all the inhabitants of the countries.

6 And nation was destroyed of nation, and city of city: for God did vex them with all adversity.

7 Be ye strong therefore, and let not your hands be weak: for your work shall be rewarded.

8 ¶ And when Asa heard these words, and the prophecy of Oded the prophet, he took courage, and put away the abominable idols out of all the land of Judah and Benjamin, and out of the cities which he had taken from mount Ephraim, and renewed the altar of the LORD, that was before the porch of the LORD.

9 And he gathered all Judah and Benjamin, and the strangers with them out of Ephraim and Manasseh, and out of Simeon: for they fell to him out of Israel in abundance, when they saw that the LORD his God was with him.

to those who journeyed, or went out upon business. Now, these times of trouble and vexation seemed to be returning again, (after the prosperity and peace enjoyed under David and Solomon,) in the divisions, apostasies, idolatries, and calamities of the preceding reigns. And the people might be assured, that the Lord would deal with them by the same measure, as he had dealt with their fathers: if they forsook his worship, and ran into idolatry and impiety, they would be left to all their former miseries; but if they returned to God and served him, he would protect and prosper them: even as when Israel under the judges, in their trouble, sought the Lord, he was always ready to remove their afflictions. This seems the most satisfactory interpretation.—But others suppose, that the prophet referred to the state of the kingdom of Israel: they had rejected the true God, expelled the teaching priesthood, and cast off the law of the Lord; and their subsequent calamities were intended as a warning for Judah; yet, even whenever Israel should repent, and seek God, he would be found of them.—Others again suppose the passage to be prophetic of the Babylonish captivity, and even of the present dispersion and future conversion of the Jews, to which the words are doubtless applicable. Perhaps the prophet had some reference to God's general method of dealing with Israel in all ages, and then no wonder that his expressions are descriptive of several distinct transactions. It is plain, however, that warning and encouragement were intended for Asa and his subjects; and the prophet's scope was to excite them properly to improve their present success, by attempting a more effectual reformation, which would assuredly be rewarded with proportionable prosperity.

V. 8. Perhaps the prophet was called Oded, as well as his father, (1,) and Azariah by way of distinction: though some think, that Oded confirmed the words of his son by a prophecy to the same effect.—The work of complete reformation appeared to Asa so difficult and perilous, through the inveterate propensity of the people, and of the chief persons, to idolatry; that he had not courage to attempt it, till thus assured of the Divine assistance and acceptance. Accordingly, when he proceeded in his work, many abominable idols were found in every part of the land; which he removed, with those that were in the cities taken from Israel: but, as the golden calf was not removed from Beth-el, it is probable, that city had been previously ceded to the king of Israel. (Note, xliii. 13—22.)

V. 9. Simeon, &c. The situation of this tribe, in part of the lot of Judah, (Note, Josh. xix. 1—9,) had not prevented them from joining the general revolt. But many of them now submitted to Asa, and probably a great part of that tribe from this time adhered to Judah.

V. 12—15. The people voluntarily covenanted to seek the Lord, each for himself, with all earnestness; and also without respect of persons, to execute the law of God on idolaters, and on those who disregarded the sabbaths and solemn feasts, or refused their attendance on the public ordinances of religion. (Notes, Lev. xxiv. 10—16. Num. xv. 31—36. Deut. xlii. 1—11.) This covenant they entered into in the most cheerful and open manner; and every one ratified it by a solemn oath, with a loud voice, in the presence of all the people: for they were deeply impressed with the kindness which they had experienced, and numbers were evidently very sincere and earnest in their religion. Jerusalem in the third month, in the fifteenth year of the reign of Asa.

11 And they offered unto the LORD the same time, of the spoil which they had brought, seven hundred oxen and seven thousand sheep.

12 And they entered into a covenant to seek the LORD God of their fathers with all their heart and with all their soul;

13 That whosoever would not seek the LORD God of Israel should be put to death, whether small or great, whether man or woman.

14 And they sware unto the LORD with a loud voice, and with shouting, and with trumpets, and with cornets.

15 And all Judah rejoiced at the oath: for they had sworn with all their heart, and sought him with their whole desire; and he was found of them: and the LORD gave them rest round about.

16 ¶ And also concerning Maachah the mother of Asa the king, he removed her from being queen, because she had made an idol in a grove: and Asa cut down her idol, and stamped it, and burnt it at the brook Kidron.

17 But the high places were not taken away out of Israel: nevertheless the heart of Asa was perfect all his days.

18 ¶ And he brought into the house of God the things that his father had dedicated, and that he himself had dedicated, silver, and gold, and vessels.

19 And there was no more war unto the fifth and thirtieth year of the reign of Asa.

V. 16. (Note, 1 Kings xv. 10—13.)

V. 17, 18. (Notes, 1 Kings xv. 14, 15.) Out of Israel, &c. Some have thought that this only relates to the cities, which had been taken from the kingdom of Israel: but it is probable that some high places at least were still connived at in Judah; perhaps as a human device, to render the people more willing to renounce idolatry. Yet, upon the whole, Asa meant well and did well, and was cordial in his endeavours for reformation.

V. 19. Baasha died in the twenty-sixth year of Asa's reign: and, as there were wars between Asa and Baasha, (xvi. 1. 1 Kings xv. 16, 17, 32, 33;) it seems impossible to reconcile this verse, and the date of the ensuing chapter, with the other history, except by allowing a trivial error of the transcribers, and reading the twenty-fifth instead of the thirty-fifth, in this verse, and the twenty-sixth instead of the thirty-sixth, in the first verse of the following chapter. This is the date which Josephus affixes to these events, and it is very probable in itself. Other ways of solving the difficulty have been proposed, but they appear liable to insuperable objections.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Prosperity and comfort should animate us to more diligent obedience; but we need the ministry of the word, to remind us of our duty when successful, as much at least as when afflicted.—The gracious tenour of the gospel authorizes us to assure sinners of every description, that if they "seek the Lord" in a proper manner, he will be found of them; at the same time all should be warned, that if they forsake the Lord, he will cast them off: and we may know that God is with us for every saving purpose, when we are conscious of trusting in his mercy, attending on his ordinances, and walking in obedience to his commandments. But, cautious fear and cheering hope must unite to render us vigilant, active, and steadfast in the ways of God.—The history of the church in all ages, and the experience of every believer, demonstrate, that vexation and distress are the never-failing consequences of negligence and sin, even to those who are not left to final apostasy; and that humiliation before God, and diligent seeking him, uniformly make way for peace and comfort. Hence the benefit of a teaching ministry, of the holy law, and of the blessed gospel. The Lord grant that all, who are called ministers, may become "apt to teach," mighty in the Scriptures, men of God, acquainted with him, his truth, and his will, and able to declare his whole counsel to the people! May he send forth such labourers into his harvest, and extend the blessing of them to the remotest nations of the earth! And may the Jews, who have been so long without the "true God and eternal life," (Note, 1 John v. 20, 21;) without a teaching priesthood, and without him who is the true and only High Priest of God's church, whom "God hath so long vexed with all adversity," at length in their trouble, seek the Lord, be found of him, and be grafted again into their own olive-tree, from which they were broken off through unbelief!—The assured expectation of assistance, acceptance, and a gracious recompense, inspires the soul with courage and strength for present duty: and we ought to exhort and encourage one another, that we may be strong in the Lord, and that our hands may not be weak, when we are called to arduous and perilous attempts, for the

CHAP. XVI.

Asa makes a league with Benhadad against Baasha, who is hindered from building Ramah; and Asa with the stones of it builds Geba and Mizpah, 1-6. Hanani, the prophet, reproves him for trusting in the Syrians, rather than in God, and is imprisoned by Asa, 7-10. When sick, he seeks to physicians, and not to God, 11, 12. His death and burial, 13, 14.

IN the six and thirtieth year of the reign of Asa, ^aBaasha king of Israel came up against Judah, and built Ramah, ^bto the intent that he might let none go out or come in to Asa king of Judah.

2 Then Asa ^cbrought out silver and gold, out of the treasures of the house of the LORD, and of the king's house, and sent to Benhadad king of Syria, that dwelt at ^dDamascus, saying,

3 There is ^ea league between me and thee, as there was between my father and thy father: behold, I have sent thee silver and gold, go, ^fbreak thy league with Baasha king of Israel, that he may depart from me.

4 And Benhadad ^ghearkened unto king Asa, and sent the captains of ^hhis armies against the cities of Israel; and they smote ⁱIjon, and ^jDan, and Abelmaim, and all the ^kstore-cities of Naphtali.

5 And it came to pass, when Baasha heard ^lit, ^mthat he left off building of Ramah, and let his work cease.

6 Then Asa the king took all Judah, and ⁿthey carried away the stones of Ramah, and the timber thereof, wherewith Baasha was building; and he built therewith ^oGeba and ^pMizpah.

7 ¶ And at that time ^qHanani the seer came to Asa king of Judah, and said unto him, ^rBecause thou hast relied on the king of Syria, and not ^srelied on honour of God, and to promote true religion.—The way to win those, who are of the contrary party, is by shewing them evidently that “the LORD our God is with us.” In order to this, all abominable things must be put away, and conscientious obedience must unite with cheerful confidence in God.—Whatever the LORD gives should be employed according to his will: especially we should devote our bodies and souls unto him, according to his everlasting covenant; by accepting of his salvation, and yielding ourselves to his service. Our devotedness to God our Saviour should be avowed and professed, in the most solemn and public manner. Such obligations indeed bind to no more, than was before our duty: but they have a tendency to fortify the heart against temptation, to excite us in a way of remembrance to every service, and to give us a farther opportunity of watching over each other, and exhorting one another to every good work. Unless, indeed, we sincerely mean to seek and serve God with our whole heart, and our whole soul, such transactions are hypocrisy. But, if we enter into these engagements with uprightness, really purposing to be helpful to others also, we may joyfully expect that the LORD will give rest to our souls.—Every public transaction should be conducted with cautious regard to peace, and to civil subordination in all things lawful, lest our good should be evil spoken of. We are not indeed called to inflict death, or any secular punishment, on those who are guilty of impiety, apostasy, or idolatry; yet, they who neglect the great salvation of the gospel, will by no means escape a more dreadful doom.—No relative affections are to be indulged, when they interfere with our evident duty to God: but where the heart is upright, there will be peace and acceptance, though we come short of that perfection which is proposed to us, and to which we should continually be pressing forwards.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVI. V. 1-6. (Notes, xv. 19. 1 Kings xvi. 8-14.)—Baasha seems to have meditated war against Judah from the beginning of his reign; and, probably, he had made some hostile attempts before; but he was not able to make any formidable attack, till the year preceding his death. At that time, he so fortified Ramah upon the frontiers of the land, that he not only prevented his own subjects from migrating into Judah, but stopped all travellers from passing: and this not only hindered the Israelites from going over to the king of Judah, but was likely, it seems, to reduce him and his subjects to distress. In this difficulty, Asa not only distrusted his own troops, and neglected the proper means of defence, but he gave up his confidence in God, and used very sinful means for deliverance. He tempted a heathen prince, with the consecrated treasures, to break a solemn league, and to turn his arms against his ally; and, by making a league with him to this effect, he became accessory to all the treachery, perjury, injustice, and cruelty, of Benhadad! But, though it answered a present purpose, it exposed him to severe rebukes; and he never prospered afterwards. (Note, 1 Kings xv. 17-23.)

V. 7-10. Asa's misconduct entirely originated from unbelief. Had he relied on the LORD, he would have defended him against the Israelites, and enabled him likewise to prevail against the king of Syria, who was then in league with Baasha, by which he might have enriched his treasures, instead of emptying them to purchase his assistance. This was the more inexcusable in the LORD thy God, therefore is ^athe host of the king of Syria escaped out of thine hand.

8 Were not ^bthe Ethiopians and the Lubims ^ca huge host, with very many chariots and horsemen? yet, ^dbecause thou didst rely on the LORD, he delivered them into thine hand.

9 For ^ethe eyes of the LORD run to and fro throughout the whole earth, ^fto shew himself strong in the behalf of ^gthem ^hwhose heart is perfect toward him. Herein ⁱthou hast done foolishly: therefore from ^jhenceforth thou shalt have wars.

10 Then Asa was ^kwroth with the seer, and ^lput him in a prison-house; for ^mhe was in a rage with him because of ⁿthis thing. And Asa ^ooppressed some of the people ^pthe same time.

11 ¶ And, behold, ^qthe acts of Asa, first and last, lo, ^rthey are written in the book of the kings ^sof Judah and Israel.

12 And Asa in the thirty and ninth year of his reign was ^tdiseased in his feet, until his disease was exceeding ^ugreat: yet ^vin his disease he sought not to the LORD, but to the ^wphysicians.

13 ¶ And Asa ^xslept with his fathers, and died in the one and fortieth year of his reign.

14 And they buried him in ^yhis own sepulchres, which he had ^zmade for himself in the city of David, and laid him in the bed which was filled with ^asweet odours, and divers kinds of ^bspices prepared by ^cthe apothecaries' art: and they made ^da very great burning for him.

him, seeing he had before experienced the prevalence of faith and prayer, in his victory over the Ethiopians. (Notes, xiv. 9-15. 2 Sam. xii. 8-10.) Indeed, Asa could not be ignorant of God's omnipresent and ever-watchful providence, by which he notices all the wants, dangers, and trials of those who uprightly trust and serve him; and is ever at hand to give speedy assistance to them, as the case may require. (Marg. Ref.) In this Asa greatly failed; and the prophet plainly told him that he had acted foolishly, and thenceforth should have wars. His subsequent conduct seems to be without parallel in Scripture. No one decidedly pious man, as I recollect, is recorded to have so resented a reproach from a prophet in the name of God, as to have used severity against him for it; yet, the expressions concerning Asa's character are so strong, (xiv. 2. xv. 17.) that we must consider him as an exception, and a lamentable proof that there is no kind of sin which a believer is not capable of committing, if left to himself; so that, we must not form our judgment of men's characters from any detached actions, but the general tenour of their conduct.—In his rage he committed the prophet to prison, or rather, he “put him into the stocks,” for that is the meaning of the original word; perhaps excusing himself to others, and to his own conscience, by criminating the prophet as rude, intermeddling, and insolent: and, perhaps, when some of the people censured his conduct, he oppressed them also, as determined to crush all opposition by violent means. It is probable, however, that he speedily released the prophet; and as he lived at least fifteen years after this event, (for so long he lived after Baasha's death,) and as we do not find that he oppressed or persecuted any person, except on this occasion, we may conclude that he repented, and adhered to the service of God to the close of his life. But, having openly dishonoured him, the latter part of his reign was obscure, inglorious, and troublesome.—It is not said what wars he was engaged in, but probably they were more perplexing to him, than fatal to his people.

V. 12. ‘Asa had the gout, which increased to such a height, that he died of it; which was a just punishment for putting the prophet's feet in the stocks.’ (Bp. Patrick.)—Under this excruciating correction he relapsed into his former sin of relying on man, and not on the LORD. If he consulted physicians, properly so called, his sin entirely consisted in his reliance on them, instead of seeking a blessing from God on the means which they employed. But, perhaps they were such persons as attempted, by charms, or other superstitious devices, to alleviate his pain; and then the thing itself, likewise, was exceedingly sinful. As the LORD has been pleased to throw a cloud upon his memory, we will not further attempt to penetrate it; though, we trust, that he did not die without repenting of this sin also.

V. 13, 14. (Marg. Ref.) Some have considered this funeral as an argument of the improper state of Asa's heart, even at death, supposing that he appointed it for himself, out of vainglory, and in conformity to heathen customs. Indeed, it is said, that he digged a sepulchre for himself, (Margin,) as Manasseh and others also did, but probably the pomp of his interment, which had nothing idolatrous or unlawful in it, was intended by the people as an expression of respect for his memory, (Marg. Ref.;) for, notwithstanding the blemishes recorded in this chapter, he had been an excellent, valuable, and successful prince; and the state of Judah during his reign was most happy, compared with the distractions and miseries of Israel. (Note, 1 Kings xvi. 23.)

CHAP. XVII.

Jehoshaphat succeeds Asa, reigns well, and prospers, 1-6. He sends priests and Levites, accompanied by princes, to teach the law throughout Judah, 7-9. God overrules the minds of Jehoshaphat's neighbours, so that they submit to him, 10, 11. His greatness, and his army, with the captains, 12-19.

AND ^aJehoshaphat his son reigned in his stead, ^band strengthened himself against Israel.

² And he ^cplaced forces in all the fenced cities of Judah, and set garrisons in the land of Judah, and ^din the cities of Ephraim, which Asa his father had taken.

³ And ^ethe LORD was with Jehoshaphat, because ^fhe walked in the first ways of ^ghis father David, and ^hsought not unto Baalim;

⁴ But sought to the LORD God of his father, and ⁱwalked in his commandments, and ^jnot after the doings of Israel:

⁵ Therefore ^kthe LORD established the kingdom in his hand; and all Judah ^lbrought to Jehoshaphat ^mpresents; and ⁿhe had riches and honour in abundance.

⁶ And ^ohis heart was ^plifted up ^qin the ways of the LORD: moreover ^rhe took away the high places and groves out of Judah.

⁷ ¶ Also in the third year of his reign ^she sent to his princes, even to Ben-hail, and to Obadiah, and to Zechariah, and to Nathaneel, and to Michaiah, ^tto teach in the cities of Judah.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The strongest faith is sometimes lamentably out of exercise; and whenever we waver as to confidence in God, we grow negligent and heartless in waiting on him, and serving him, and in using proper means for our own defence or deliverance; and we become ready to turn aside into bypaths, and employ sinful expedients. When once men have set forward in this down-hill road, they hurry along from one crime to another, till they fall into greater ungodliness; nor can we tell into what impety, treachery, or injustice, we may run, if left to ourselves. Well may we then be cautioned, "whilst we think we stand, to take heed lest we fall;" and well may we pray, "Lord, increase our faith!"—The self-sufficient are impatient of reproof, or contradiction; and then the plain language of faithful ministers appears ill-nature, ill-manners, impertinence, or insolence. In this case, if power unite with haughty resentment, persecution will follow; so that they are not qualified at all times to deliver the messages of God, even to good princes, who are not ready to bear the cross. For, in general, "the flatterer, who spreads a net for a man's feet," and merits execration, may more reasonably expect a reward from men, than he who most affectionately labours for their present and eternal good, but who will speak offensive truth, unreservedly, in plain language. (Notes, Matt. xiv. 3-11.)—They who venture to take the part of such as have thus given umbrage, must expect to share in the resentment they have excited; for where rage prevails against the fear of God, justice and humanity will scarcely be attended to. If, however, any of the Lord's own people thus resent the conduct of his faithful ministers, they may lay their account with most severe chastisement; and when they repeatedly relapse into the same crime, they may expect to go down into the grave in dishonour, and in uncertainty, and to leave their characters involved in obscurity. But, notwithstanding incidental faults, we should honour the memory of those who have been useful in their generation, and that of our benefactors, leaving their eternal state to the heart-searching Judge.—In all our conflicts and sufferings, we have need especially to look to our own hearts, that they be "perfect towards God," in the exercise of faith, patience, and obedience; remembering that "his eyes run to and fro throughout the earth, to shew himself strong in behalf of them," who thus trust and serve him; being an ever-present and all-sufficient helper and comforter. And he will especially plead the cause, and abundantly recompense the sufferings, of those who are here persecuted for righteousness' sake, and for being faithful to his truth, and in delivering his message to their fellow-sinners.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVII. V. 1, 2. It is probable that Asa had been engaged in war with the kingdom of Israel, after the establishment of Omri on the throne, though no events occurred so considerable as to be recorded.

V. 3. The first ways, &c. Jehoshaphat copied the example of David, by proceeding to reform the state of religion immediately on his accession to the throne; and in his zeal for the pure, orderly, and spiritual worship of God: but he carefully avoided those sins, into which David afterwards fell. This is the common explication of the expression.—But as David's piety and zeal never shone brighter than at the close of his life, perhaps the words might as properly be read "In the first ways, even those of David his father:" proposing him as his model, and not the succeeding princes, under whom idolatry had been introduced, tolerated, or but feebly opposed; and not being satisfied even with walking in the steps of his father Asa, but aiming to reduce matters to their ancient purity.—Some versions read it, of his father, and of David; for the latter days of Asa were not so worthy of imitation as his former had been.

V. 6. The heart of Jehoshaphat was lifted up, not in pride, but in courage, zeal, and vigour. By strong faith and ardent love, he was lifted up above fears and discouragements; and readily faced, and endured, dangers and difficulties in the cause of God. And he did not glory in his riches and honour, but in serving the Lord, and promoting his cause. (Note, 1 Sam. ii. 1.)—He took away the high places in Judah; but perhaps he left them in the cities of Ephraim; or he destroyed such as were devoted to idols, but spared those in which God was worshipped. Or, he destroyed them at the beginning of his reign; but his subjects restored some of them afterwards. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 7-9. Whilst the priests and Levites neglected their duty, as public teachers, the people remained ignorant of the truth and law of God, and were easily seduced into superstition or idolatry: so that, the reformations which took place were rather the result of authority than conviction and distinct knowledge; and thus only external and transient. Asa and his people had done well, in covenanting together to punish those who would not seek the Lord; (Note, xv. 12-15:) for this was according to the genius and intention of that introductory dispensation; under which the capital punishment of apostate Israelites was one divinely appointed method of preserving that people from sinking wholly into idolatry, till the coming of Christ. But Jehoshaphat did better, when he added the public teaching of the people from the law of God: for this not only tended to the same object, but promoted the salvation of souls, and the increase of spiritual worshippers, who would hand down religion to their posterity. The princes were joined in commission with the priests and Levites; both to excite them to their duty, and to induce the attention of the people. Probably, they acted as magistrates, and were men of known probity, piety, and acquaintance with the law of God; who, when they administered justice, instructed and exhorted the people, and charged them, both as a matter of conscience, and as they regarded the favour of the king, to receive and observe the instructions of the priests and Levites. Those of the latter appointed to be the itinerant instructors, were doubtless selected because they were known to be eminent for piety and ability. They took the book of the law with them, and read and expounded it wherever they went, grounding all their instructions upon it. It must also be supposed, that these teachers were intended to excite, and to strengthen the hands of, the priests and Levites, who resided in the neighbourhood, and who were to be considered as the stated teachers in their several districts. (Note, xv. 1-7.) It has before been shewn, that the prophets in the kingdom of Israel held stated assemblies for religious worship, on the sabbath-days, and on some of their solemn feasts. (Note, 2 Kings iv. 23.) And it is probable that it became gradually the practice of the priests in Judah, as far as they paid any regard to their duty.

V. 10. The army of Jehoshaphat was indeed very formidable, (13-19,) yet it was "the fear of the Lord" that deterred his neighbours from attacking him: they were so dismayed, that they dared not to attempt any thing against one, who was so evidently favoured of God; and it is probable, they had observed, that Judah always prospered, when the worship of God was kept up in the land. (Notes, Ex. xxxiv. 24. Lev. xxvi. 3, 4. Deut. xxviii. 3-14.)

V. 11. The Philistines had been subdued by David, and no doubt had paid him tribute; but, after a time, they seem to have again become independent: (Note, 2 Kings xviii. 8:) and it is not certain, whether they and the Arabians

17 And of Benjamin; Eliada, a mighty man of valour, and with him armed men with bow and shield two hundred thousand.

18 And next him was Jehozabad, and with him an hundred and fourscore thousand ready prepared for the war.

19 These waited on the king, beside those whom the king put in the fenced cities throughout all Judah.

CHAP. XVIII.

Jehoshaphat joins affinity with Ahab, and agrees to go with him against Ramoth-gilead. 1-3. The false prophets assure them of success, 4, 5.—At Jehoshaphat's request Micaiah is sent for, who foretells Ahab's death, and shews that his prophets were instigated by a lying spirit, 6-23. He is reviled, and sent back to prison, 24-27. Ahab goes in disguise to the battle; where Jehoshaphat, in imminent danger, calls on God, and is preserved, 28-32. Ahab is slain by an arrow shot at a venture, 33, 34.

NOW Jehoshaphat had riches and honour in abundance, and joined affinity with Ahab.

2 And after certain years he went down to Ahab to Samaria: And Ahab killed sheep and oxen for him in abundance, and for the people that he had with him, and persuaded him to go up with him to Ramoth-gilead.

3 And Ahab king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat king of Judah, Wilt thou go with me to Ramoth-gilead? And he answered him, I am as thou art, and my people as thy people: and we will be with thee in the war.

brought these presents to Jehoshaphat, as submitting to his authority, or only as desiring to conciliate his friendship.

V. 13-19. Jehoshaphat's militia far exceeded in number that of any of his predecessors, though he did not possess much above a third of the country over which David and Solomon had reigned. But numbers had flocked into his kingdom from Israel, his people increased by a peculiar blessing, and no wasting wars had occurred for many years. It is probable that these troops served by rotation, and some of them might be employed in the buildings and other business, which he had in the cities of Judah. (Marg. Ref.) One of his chief officers is distinguished, for having offered himself willingly to serve God, as well as his country, in that station. (16.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-6. It is a signal blessing, when the Lord raises up pious and able men, in church or state, to succeed one another. For often useful instruments are removed, or laid aside, at the very crisis when their preparations were completed, and their purposes in a fair way of being effected: and others come in their stead, who take a pride and pleasure in rendering their schemes abortive: and thus "one sinner destroyeth much good." (Notes, Ec. ii. 18-23. John iv. 31-38.) It therefore behoves us all to pray for a succession of useful men, who may every one of them endeavour to complete the designs of their predecessors, and make way for the usefulness of their successors: and did all pious persons, with one accord and without intermission, unite in such prayers, in behalf of the community, the church at large, and particular congregations; they would witness blessed effects, and brighter prospects would open before us.—It is happy when prudence, vigour, and piety unite in distinguished characters; when they carefully imitate the best parts of the conduct of eminent believers, and as carefully avoid their mistakes; and when the purest ages of the church are made the models of personal religion and public reformation. Indeed, we should all study to walk in those "first ways" of Christians, when "great grace was upon them all," and not be satisfied with the current standard of modern profession: this would tend to the establishment of our hearts in peace and assurance, and to the prosperity of our endeavours to glorify God and to do good.—When faith is in vigorous exercise, and when zeal, love, and active hope render the ways of God delightful; the soul rises superior to dangers and difficulties, disregards hardships and labours, and can even rejoice in sufferings for the Lord's sake. Then low earthly affections are subdued; the heart is lifted up above them, and soars heavenward: ambitious of, and glorying in, nothing but the service, truth, and favour of God. This exalted piety springs from genuine poverty of spirit: and a deep sense of the condescension of the infinite God, in employing and accepting us poor, guilty, polluted, worthless worms, inspires the heart with renewed vigour in his service.

V. 7-19. The public teaching of the word of God forms, in all ages, the grand method of promoting the power of godliness; for by it the understanding is informed, the conscience awakened and directed, and the hopes, fears, and affections suitably excited: and, as far as the Divine blessing is vouchsafed, religious worship is rendered a voluntary, reasonable, and spiritual service. Kings and princes, therefore, render a most essential service to the cause of God, when they use their influence to excite and countenance those, who "labour in the word and doctrine;" and by their example and public declarations make it known, that they most approve of such as diligently attend on their instructions. And though no violence must be done to any man's conscience, nor any one constrained to teach in contradiction to his judgment; yet surely they, who are publicly maintained as teachers of the people, may be required either to do their work, or to give place to those who will.—Notwithstanding the prejudices of mankind, and the indiscretion of individuals, an itinerant preacher, if duly qualified and sent forth, is one of the most honour-

4 ¶ And Jehoshaphat said unto the king of Israel, Enquire, I pray thee, at the word of the LORD to-day.

5 Therefore the king of Israel gathered together of prophets four hundred men, and said unto them, Shall we go to Ramoth-gilead to battle, or shall I forbear? And they said, Go up; for God will deliver it unto the king's hand.

6 But Jehoshaphat said, Is there not here a prophet of the LORD besides, that we might enquire of him?

7 And the king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat, There is yet one man by whom we may enquire of the LORD: but I hate him; for he never prophesied good unto me, but always evil: the same is Micaiah the son of Imla. And Jehoshaphat said, Let not the king say so.

8 And the king of Israel called for one of his officers, and said, Fetch quickly Micaiah the son of Imla.

9 And the king of Israel, and Jehoshaphat king of Judah, sat either of them on his throne, clothed in their robes, and they sat in a void place at the entering in of the gate of Samaria; and all the prophets prophesied before them.

able and useful characters, that can be found upon earth: and there needs no other proof, that, when this work is done properly, and with perseverance, it forms the grand method of spreading wide, and rendering efficacious, religious knowledge, than the experience of the church in all ages; for great reformations and revivals of religion have generally been thus effected. It is especially sanctioned by the example of Christ and his apostles, and recommended as the Divine method of spreading the gospel through the nations of the earth: itinerant preaching having almost always preceded, and made way for, the stated ministry of regular pastors. But it is a work which requires peculiar talents and dispositions, and a peculiar call in providence; and is not rashly and hastily to be ventured upon by every novice, who has learned to speak about the gospel, and has more zeal than knowledge, prudence, humility, or experience. An unblemished character, a disinterested spirit, an exemplary deadness to the world, unaffected humility, deep acquaintance with the human heart, and preparation for enduring the cross, not only with boldness, but with meekness, patience, and sweetness of temper, are indispensably necessary in such service. They, who engage in it, should go upon broad scriptural grounds, and dwell chiefly upon those grand essentials of religion, in which pious men of different persuasions are agreed; plainly proving every thing from the word of God, running nothing into extremes, and avoiding all disputes, however urged to it, about the shibboleths of a party. In this way itinerant preaching is a blessing which all, who love the souls of men, must wish to be vouchsafed to every part of every nation upon earth. And if those who are in authority, were to employ select men of known and approved piety and ability, protected and countenanced by them, to go from city to city, and from village to village, through the kingdom, teaching in every place the plain acknowledged truths and precepts of the Bible, immense good might be done. Those stated teachers, who have been grossly negligent or profligate, must either be disgraced or reformed; others might be stirred up to use greater diligence; and the instructions of stated faithful ministers would receive an additional sanction, which could not fail of producing a happy effect.—Thus it was in the days of Jehoshaphat; and thus it will be, wherever or whenever God shall please to stir up the hearts of kings, princes, and ministers, to teach the people in every part of their territories, according to the word of God. This is also the proper way of promoting public peace and prosperity; and, it will prove a better protection of nations, than an increase of powerful armies or navies: though it may very properly be connected with the ordinary methods of defence.—Persons in authority have much business, to which they ought to attend: and they should consider that stable peace, and increasing numbers of well-maintained and orderly subjects, are more honourable than the most successful wars: and whatever ability any man possesses, he should willingly devote himself to God, and serve him with it.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVIII. V. 1. Affinity, &c. Jehoram the son of Jehoshaphat married Athaliah the daughter of Ahab. (Notes, 1 Kings xxii. 2. 2 Kings viii. 18. 26.) Perhaps pride and ambition had some influence in forming this fatal union: but probably Jehoshaphat was allured to it, by the hopes of cementing a durable peace between Judah and Israel, whom he wished to consider as brethren. (Note, 2 Kings viii. 18.) Ahab perceived Jehoshaphat to be so strong, that he had no hopes of prevailing against him, and therefore he courted his friendship. But this affinity was evil in itself, and peculiarly dangerous to Jehoshaphat; who, though firm and courageous in resisting and overcoming opposition and difficulties, was easily persuaded by fair words into improper compliances. (Notes, 2 Kings xxii. 4. 7. 29. 2 Kings iii. 7.)

V. 2-6. (Notes, 1 Kings xxii. 1-7.) "We will be with thee in the war." (3.) Thus Jehoshaphat expressly engaged to assist Ahab, before he proposed to enquire of God. (Note, Josh. ix. 14, 15.)

V. 30—34. (Notes, 1 Kings xxii. 31—35.) God moved, &c. extremity of danger, Jehoshaphat made the Lord his refuge, who his servant, though out of the path of duty; and, in answer to prayer, inclined his pursuers to depart from him, by a secret but powerful influence on their minds.

Abundant riches and honour do indeed give large opportunities of doing good ; but they are attended with such strong temptations, as very few who possess them are able to withstand. It is therefore a certain proof, that men are not well acquainted with the artifices of Satan, and the deceitfulness of their own hearts, and that they have much self-confidence, when they covet riches, in order to do good ; for they are far more likely to get harm by them. Among other evils, they often betray pious persons into improper marriages, for themselves or their children. It appears beneath them to join affinity with inferior families ; but “ not many mighty or noble are called ;” and so they are seduced to prefer titles and estates, to faith and holiness ; and the effects are generally lamentable to themselves, to posterity, and to the cause of godliness.—We should follow peace with all men : but we ought to have no intimacies with the workers of iniquity ; for their caresses, flatteries, and feasts are more dangerous than their most imbibed rage; and in fact they are frequently the result of politic enmity, and at best proceed from mercenary self-love. Indeed, the most enormous wickedness is often veiled under a show of piety.—A vast majority of professed ministers, in many ages and places, have been teachers of lies; who, while they acted their parts with the name of God in their mouths, have secretly been prompted by Satan, “deceiving and being deceived.” We should therefore be careful not only to “enquire of the LORD,” but careful likewise by whom we enquire of him, and, likewise, that we enquire his will: before we commit ourselves, by engagements that may be contrary to it.—They who flatter the humours of the rich and great will be most favoured; and they that offend their pride, or disturb their consciences, will be hated, and may lay their account with hard usage: nay, such pious persons as associate with ungodly people, must often witness and seem to approve of very abominable things. The event, however, will show faithful teachers in their proper light; so that, even the wicked will be constrained to allow the propriety of their conduct. In the mean time, let them go on with confidence in God, simply declaring his whole message, and patiently bearing the cross; for “great will be their reward in heaven.” Satan is allowed to deceive those who reject the testimony of God’s prophets.—No policy can avert the stroke of the Lord’s vengeance, when the time arrives; nor can his people ever be destitute of a refuge. He both can and will extricate them even from those difficulties and perils, into which they have sinfully brought themselves, when they earnestly and humbly call upon him: and, as he hath all hearts in his hand, he can easily rescue them in their most urgent distresses.—“O LORD God of hosts, blessed is the man that putteth his trust in thee!”

2 And ^bJehu the son of ^cHanani ^dthe seer went out to meet him, and said to king Jehoshaphat, "Shouldest thou help the ungodly, and love them that ^ehate the LORD? therefore ^fis wrath upon thee from before the LORD."

3 Nevertheless, there are ^ggood things found in thee, in that thou hast taken away the groves out of the land, and hast ^hprepared thine heart to seek God.

4 ¶ And Jehoshaphat dwelt at Jerusalem: and he ⁱwent out again through the people from ^jBeer-sheba to ^kmount Ephraim, and ^lbrought them back unto the LORD God of their fathers.

5 ¶ And ^mhe set judges in the land, throughout all the fenced cities of Judah, city by city;

7 Wherefore now, ^plet the fear of the LORD be upon you; take heed, and do ^qit: for ^rthere is ^sno iniquity with the LORD our God, nor ^trespect of persons, nor ^utaking of gifts.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIX. V. 1. This peaceful return home exceeded Jehoshaphat's expectations, and was contrary to his deserts: and he was thus discriminated from Ahab, to whom he had said, "I am as thou art." (Notes, xviii. 3.29.)

V. 2. Jehu was the son of Hanani, who was cast into prison by Asa for reproving him; (Notes, xvi. 7—10;) yet, he was not afraid of bringing a similar message to Jehoshaphat. That prince's alliance with a notorious idolater was a bad example to his subjects, which exceedingly tended to counteract his endeavours for reformation; and Ahab's expedition was undertaken in defiance of the word of God, and attended with such circumstances, as rendered Jehoshaphat inexcusable in helping him. For this misconduct, "wrath was upon him from before the LORD:" not the wrath of an enemy or avenging judge, but that of an offended father; and the fatal effects of this affinity upon his family and kingdom, were as awful evidences of this wrath, as could be experienced by one that did not finally perish. (Notes, xxi. 4. 18—20. xxii. 5. 9. 2 Sam. xii. 10. 2 Kings xi. 1, 2.)

V. 3. (Notes, xvii. 1—9. Marg. Ref.)

V. 4. Jehoshaphat went no more to Samaria, but stayed at home, and attended to the affairs of his own kingdom. Being assured that the Lord had graciously accepted of his endeavours for reformation, he made a circuit through his kingdom to perfect that work; and it seems, that the people had relapsed into idolatry, regarding his intimacy with Ahab as a kind of dispensation to such as chose to avail themselves of it.

V. 5—11. In process of time, irregularities and abuses in the magistracy had interrupted the regular administration of justice: but Jehoshaphat carefully reduced this likewise into order; and took care that judges, and courts of justice, should be established in every considerable town, for the benefit of the neighbourhood; but with appeal to the superior courts at Jerusalem. (Notes, Ex. xxiii. 1—3. 6—9. Deut. xvi. 18. xvii. 8—13. 1 Chr. xxiii. 3—6. xxvi. 30—32.) It seems, that in all these courts the priests and Levites were joined with the principal persons of the other tribes: for the law of God was in an especial manner the statute law of the realm; according to which both ecclesiastical causes, or the "judgment of the Lord," the pleas of the crown or "the king's matters," and common pleas or "controversies" were to be determined. This settlement was completed, when the king and his attendants returned to Jerusalem from the circuit of the land: and both in the country and at Jerusalem, the king solemnly exhorted, and charged, the magistrates to do the duty of their office, in the fear of the Lord; as acting by his authority, in his presence, under his protection, copying his impartial justice and equity, and looking forward to the account which they must shortly render to him. (Marg. Ref.)—Some interpret, blood and blood, of relationship and titles to estates; but it seems rather to mean causes concerning murder, maiming, or accidentally killing any one.—The judges were required to warn the people not to transgress; as for other reasons, so, lest their brethren should be involved in the consequences of their crimes. The Targum renders part of the sixth verse in this manner: 'Ye do not judge before the sons of men, but before the Word of the Lord; and his glorious presence resides among you in the act of judgment.'—Deal, &c. (11. Notes, Josh. i. 7. 2 Tim. ii. 1, 2.)—The Lord, &c. With good magistrates. (Note, Phil. iv. 8, 9.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Nothing but perils, wrath, and painful effects, can be expected from intimacies with ungodly men; and that in proportion to the degree of their avowed hatred to the character, worship, and service of God. We ought therefore to shun all need-

CHAP. XX.

Jehoshaphat, alarmed by an invasion of the Moabites, Ammonites, and others, proclaims a fast, 1—4. His prayer, 5—13. Jahaziel, the prophet, assures him of a signal deliverance, 14—17. Jehoshaphat and his people receive the promise with adoring thankfulness, 18, 19. He exhorts them to believe, and appoints singers to praise the Lord, 20, 21. The invaders destroy one another, and the people of Judah gather immense spoils, 22—25. They bless God at Berachah, return in triumph, and enjoy peace, 26—30. Jehoshaphat's good reign and acts, 31—34. He joins with Ahaziah in sending ships to Tarshish, which are wrecked, according to the prediction of Eliezer, 35—37.

I T came to pass ^aafter this also, that ^bthe children of Moab, and the children of Ammon, and with them ^cother beside the Ammonites, ^dcame against Jehoshaphat to battle.

2 Then there came some that told Jehoshaphat, saying, There cometh a great multitude against thee from ^ebeyond the sea on this side Syria; and, behold, they ^fbe in ^gHazazon-tamar, which is ^hEn-gedi.

less familiarity with them, and to shew them and all the world, our disapprobation of their principles and conduct; whatever may be their rank, abilities, or accomplishments, or however political interests or relative ties may plead for a coalition. We should bear them good will, and be ready to relieve their distress, and to help them in their most important interests; but we should be cautious of involving ourselves with their secular undertakings, and still more of concurring with them in any of their sinful projects. (Notes, 2 Cor. vi. 14—18. Eph. v. 8—14. 2 John 7—11. P. O. 2 Col.)—The unmerited mercies of God are often united with severe rebukes and corrections; and these again are moderated by tokens of his approbation, where our conduct hath been good in his sight: for he would not have those discouraged, who "prepare their hearts to seek him;" and when there are real good things found in us, he will mercifully forgive the evil which we allow not, and accept the good, through the Saviour's advocacy. In these things we should be followers of God: we must not "hate our offending brother, nor suffer sin upon him; but in any wise rebuke him;" (Note, Lev. xix. 17;) but we should take more pleasure in commending what is evidently good; and bear much from those in whom good things are found.—While ministers must not fear or respect the persons of men, or be intimidated by the sufferings of others in the same cause, but must deliver their whole message plainly; they should also endeavour to do it with forbearance, tenderness, and candour, which will render reproofs less offensive and more effectual. When these are prudently given and properly taken, they are not only salutary, but confer honour on both parties; and when, being united with due commendations, they excite men to renewed vigilance and diligence in their proper work, they become general benefits.—The tendency of human nature to evil renders unremitting vigour necessary in all those, who would suppress abuses and effect reformation; for, on every relaxation, evils will revive and gather strength rapidly, and all will need to be done over again.—The ministry and the magistracy, when restricted to their distinct methods, may concur in promoting godliness, as well as preserving public peace; and all legal decisions should be expedited in a regular and easy method, and with little expense; that the poor may be placed, as nearly as possible, at an equal advantage with the rich, in obtaining their dues.—Magistrates are the vicegerents of the Governor and Judge of the world, and are therefore to be obeyed in all things lawful for the Lord's sake. (Notes, Rom. xiii. 1—7.) But there lies an appeal from their decisions to a superior tribunal; and they should be reminded, that they will be exposed to condemnation, if they do not act uprightly, in the fear of God, without respect of persons, or taking of gifts. And besides executing the laws of man impartially, it is their duty also to warn men not to trespass against the Lord, lest wrath come upon them and their brethren. (Note, xvii. 7—9.) They should, therefore, take heed and deal courageously, not fearing the displeasure of man, but confiding in the protection of God, who is with them in the judgment; that he may indeed be with them for their good. May he provide increasing numbers of good ministers and good magistrates, to suppress vice, and to promote the cause of truth and holiness!

NOTES.

CHAP. XX. V. 1, 2. (Notes, xiv. 1—15. xxxi. 20, 21. xxxii. 1—8. 1 Sam. vii. 1—7.) This formidable armament came from beyond the dead sea. (Marg. Ref.)—"The fear of the Lord had fallen upon the kingdoms round about Judah;" and Jehoshaphat had so long enjoyed peace, that he seems to have neglected his military arrangements, and to have relaxed his vigilance. Perhaps his enemies observed this, and thought to take advantage of it; and perhaps they had heard "that wrath was upon him from before the LORD,"

3 And Jehoshaphat ⁸feared, and set ^{*}himself to ^hseek the LORD, and ⁱproclaimed a fast throughout all Judah.

4 And Judah gathered themselves together, to ^{ask} help of the LORD: even out of all ^kthe cities of Judah they came to seek the LORD.

5 ¶ And ¹Jehoshaphat stood in the congregation of Judah and Jerusalem, in the house of the LORD, before the new court,

6 And said, "O LORD God of our fathers, art not thou "God in heaven? and "rulest not thou over all the kingdoms of the heathen? and "in thine hand is there not power and might, so that "none is able to withstand thee?

7 Art not thou ^our God, [†]who didst ^sdrive out the inhabitants of this land before thy people Israel, and [†]gavest it to the seed of Abraham ^uthy friend for ever?

8 And they dwelt therein, and have ^vbuilt thee a sanctuary therein for thy name, saying,

9 ¶If, when evil cometh upon us, as the sword, judgment, or pestilence, or famine, we stand before this house, and in thy presence, (for thy name is in this house,) and cry unto thee in our affliction, then thou wilt hear and help.

10 And now, behold, the children of Ammon, and Moab, and mount Seir, *whom thou wouldest not let Israel invade, when they came out of the land of Egypt, but they turned from them, and destroyed them not:

11 Behold, I say, ^a*how* they reward us, to come ^bto cast us out of thy possession, which thou hast given us to inherit.

12 O our God, wilt thou not judge them? for ^awe have no might against this great company that cometh against us; ^eneither know we what to do: but ^four eyes are upon thee.

13 And ¹all Judah stood before the LORD, with their little ones, their wives, and their children.

for uniting with Ahab. Accordingly they had actually invaded the island, before he was apprised of their intention, so that he was obliged to muster all his forces.

V. 3, 4. Probably, this invasion took place soon after Jehoshaphat's death from Ramoth; and he was afraid that God was about to chastise him by permitting the devastation of his kingdom. To avert this calamity, himself to seek the Lord." It may be supposed that he made the arrangement of which the exigency would admit; but his chief consisted in proclaiming a fast, and gathering his people together of the Lord.—We have read of private fasting with prayer; of "soul" at the day of atonement; of the people's fasting at the instigation of the prophet; and of the people fasting by common consent; (N. 29, 30. Deut. ix. 18. 25. Judg. x. 26—28. 1 Sam. vii. 5, 6, 23.) but the fast here mentioned was observed at the proclamation of the truce, who acted by the authority of his station, and not by the prophecy; and the event of this measure both warrants civil government of distress to act in this manner, and encourages them to expect important benefits from it. Every one was called upon to unite before God for his own sins, and the sins of the public, as the aggregate whole. Thus they united in expressing their sorrow and self-denial for their sins; and they publicly honoured God as the righteous author of the calamity, and as their only hope and refuge in distress. All other business laid aside, they were at leisure to unite in uninterrupted and fervent prayer for help and forgiveness. Doubtless serious impressions were made on many, who before had been inattentive: the pious affections were revived, and rendered more fixed and lively; and in every way to the honour of God, and the good of his people.

V. 5. New court. It is not known what is here meant by the word, but, probably, Jehoshaphat had rebuilt some of the courts, or had added to them.

v. 6—9. After the example of Solomon, Jehoshaphat himself led in public prayer for this vast congregation, in words which proceeded from the abundance of his heart: a careful examination of the marginal notes will be found the best comment on them. (Notes, 1 Kings viii. 33—43, 10—19.)

V. 10, 11. The mention of mount Seir, the country of Edom, meant in the first verse by "other beside the Ammonites."—The Ammonites, and Edomites, had been expressly named as nations must not invade; and the Divine admonition had been exactly (Deut. ii. 4—7. 9. 19.) Other wars indeed had brought some

14 ¶ ^hThen upon Jahaziel, the son of Zechariah, the son of Benaiah, the son of Jeiel, the son of Mattaniah, a Levite, of the sons of Asaph, ⁱcame the Spirit of the LORD in the midst of the congregation;

15 And he said, Hearken ye, all Judah, and ye inhabitants of Jerusalem, and thou king Jehoshaphat, Thus saith the LORD unto you, ^kBe not afraid nor dismayed by reason of this great multitude; for ^lthe battle is not your's, but God's.

16 To-morrow go ye down against them : behold, they come up by the ^acliff of Ziz ; and ye shall find them at the end of the ^bbrook, before the wilderness of Jeruel.

17 Ye shall ^{not} need to fight in this battle; set yourselves, ^{stand} ye still, and see the salvation of the LORD with you, O Judah and Jerusalem: fear not, nor be dismayed; to-morrow go out against them: ^{for} the LORD will be with you.

18 And Jehoshaphat bowed his head with his face to the ground: and all Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, fell before the LORD, worshipping the LORD.

19 And ^athe Levites of the children of the Kohathites and of the children of the ^rKorhites, stood up to praise the LORD God of Israel with ^aa loud voice on high.

20 And they rose early in the morning, and went forth into the wilderness of Tekoa: and, as they went forth, Jehoshaphat stood and said, "Hear me, O Judah, and ye inhabitants of Jerusalem: 'Believe in the LORD your God, so shall ye be established; 'believe his prophets, so shall ye prosper.

21 And when he had ²consulted with the people, he ³appointed singers unto the LORD, and ⁴that should praise ⁵the beauty of holiness, as they went out before the army, and to say, ⁶Praise the LORD; for his mercy endureth for ever.

22 ¶ And *when they began †to sing and to praise, the dominion of Judah and Israel : but it seems the superiority had been used with gentleness, and no reason had been given for this violent assault ; in which, it is probable, the confederates meant to destroy the kingdom of Judah, and the house of David ; as well as to expel the people of God, from that land which was " his possession ;" so that the war was indeed waged against the LORD himself. (Notes, Judg. xi. 12-27.)

V. 12. The language of this verse is peculiarly expressive of humble genuine faith. The appeal, as to the justice of the cause, is simply, yet emphatically, made to God; and the inability of Jehoshaphat, and the small force which he had hastily collected, to resist so vast an army; the perplexity to which he was reduced; and his only refuge from despair, by firmly relying on the Almighty, and expecting help from him, as pleading his own cause in pleading theirs; are stated in the most natural and affecting manner. (Note, xiv. 9—15.)—‘In this declining state of the church, let us say daily with Jehoshaphat, “We know not what to do; but our eyes are unto thee.” “Thine is the kingdom, the power, and the glory.” Thou art our King and our Shepherd.—Thou only art powerful, we are infirm; but thy power will be perfected in our weakness. “Not unto us, O LORD, but unto thy name give the glory; for thy mercy and thy truth’s sake.”—Such addresses will illustrate this prayer, better than the largest commentaries.’ (Bp. Patrick.)

V. 13. With, &c. (Notes Deut. xxix. 10—15. xxxi. 10—13. Esa x. 1. Neh. viii. 1, 2. Joel ii. 15—17.) Not only the women, and the children who were grown up, attended on this occasion, but the infants also; for, it is probable the people intended their presence, as a silent plea with the Lord to have mercy upon them, for the sake of their helpless offspring. (Note, Jonah iv. 11.)

1 V. 14-17. The Lord did not speak, on this occasion, by the high priest, but by an ordinary Levite, who, it is probable, was an eminently pious person. Whether he had previously been known as a prophet, or not, all present were satisfied that he spoke by the Spirit of God. He assured them of the Lord's especial interposition; for, as the battle immediately concerned his honour, it would be decided by his power. Without any fear of the multitude of their invaders, they were ordered to march forth the next day, not to fight, but to witness the salvation of the Lord with them, and his answer to their fervent prayers. (Notes, Ex. xiv. 13, 14. 1 Sam. xvii. 45-47.)

the Divine promise, at once anticipated its fulfilment, and directly joined in an act of solemn adoration, and in songs of gratitude and praise for this yet unaccomplished deliverance.

V. 20, 21. Jehoshaphat seems not much to have regarded the arrangement of his army : for he so firmly believed the words of the prophet, that he marched

"the LORD set ambushments against the children of Ammon, Moab, and mount Seir, which were come against Judah; and they were smitten.

23 For the children of Ammon and Moab stood up against the inhabitants of "mount Seir, utterly to slay and destroy them: and when they had made an end of the inhabitants of Seir, every one helped "to destroy another.

24 And when Judah came toward the watch-tower in the wilderness, they looked unto the multitude, and, behold, "they were dead bodies fallen to the earth, and "none escaped.

25 And when Jehoshaphat and his people came to take away the spoil of them, "they found among them in abundance both riches with the dead bodies, and "precious jewels, which they stripped off for themselves, more than they could carry away: and they were three days in gathering of the spoil, it was so much.

26 ¶ And on the fourth day they assembled themselves in the valley of "Berachah; for there they "blessed the LORD: therefore "the name of the same place was called, The valley of Berachah "unto this day.

27 Then they returned, every man of Judah and Jerusalem, and Jehoshaphat in the "forefront of them, to go again to Jerusalem with joy; for "the LORD had made them to rejoice over their enemies.

28 And they came to Jerusalem "with psalteries, and harps, and trumpets, unto the house of the LORD.

forth as to a triumph, and not to a battle. Accordingly he exhorted his troops to a firm faith in God, and an entire reliance on his power, faithfulness, and covenanted mercy to his people; and a confident expectation, that all his words spoken to them by his prophets should be accomplished: thus, and thus only, could they be established, and prosper.—He also caused singers to go before the army, "that should praise the beauty of holiness:" that is, according to some expositors, exactly as they used to do at his beautiful sanctuary. But perhaps the expression rather means, that they should celebrate the glorious excellencies of God's holy character, which render him the perfection of beauty, and the meet object of the most absolute love, confidence, and delight of all his rational creatures; especially, as "his mercy, which endureth for ever," is displayed in perfect harmony with his more awful attributes. (Notes, vi. 13. vii. 1-3. 1 Chr. xvi. 28, 29. Ps. l. 1, 2. xc. 13-17.)

V. 22-25. Some commentators, both ancient and modern, think that angels were employed on this occasion, who came on the invaders by surprise, as from an ambushment, and slew some of them: and that the survivors supposed themselves assaulted by their confederates; and so retaliated, till they fell into utter confusion, and entirely destroyed one another.—But perhaps the Lord only left the several nations to a natural distrust and jealousy of each other: and thus some of them formed ambushments against the rest, which issued in their mutual destruction. Or, perhaps, the ambushments placed against the Jews, fell by mistake on their own allies. This, however, fulfilled God's purpose, as effectually as if he had placed the ambushments, or they had acted in obedience to his commandments. The slaughter was universal, and the spoil immense; so that this invasion served exceedingly to enrich Jehoshaphat and his kingdom. (Notes, xxiii. 27-29. Rom. vii. 35-39.)

V. 26-28. "Berachah" signifies blessing. Having previously sought deliverance, by fasting and prayer, and received the assurance of it with grateful joy, Jehoshaphat and his army returned immediate and most fervent thanks and praise to the Lord, who had in so wonderful a manner performed his promise. The whole forms a most remarkable and instructive history: and no undertaking, recorded in Scripture, was entered on, conducted, and concluded in a more unexceptionable manner.

V. 29, 30. When the surrounding nations perceived, how wonderfully the Lord had destroyed this powerful armament, they dared not to attack Jehoshaphat any more; and thus God gave him rest round about, which continued during the remainder of his reign. (Note, xvii. 10.)

V. 31-34. (Notes, xvii. 3. 2 Sam. xxii. 21-23. 1 Kings xxii. 41-46.) The minds of the people were not suitably prepared for the regular and cordial worship of God at Jerusalem; so that Jehoshaphat either did not dare to attempt, or was not able to effect, an entire and abiding suppression of all those high places where God was irregularly worshipped. (Notes, xvii. 6. xix. 2-4. Marg. Ref.)

V. 35-37. Jehoshaphat's affinity with Ahab's family drew him in to join in this traffic with wicked Ahaziah, for which he was rebuked and chastened; and afterwards he refused to join with him. Ahaziah died within less than two years after Ahab, and Jehoshaphat survived him for a considerable time. (Notes, 1 Kings xxii. 28, 29. 2 Kings i. 1-17. viii. 16, 17.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

29 And "the fear of God was on all the kingdoms of those countries, when "they had heard that the LORD fought against the enemies of Israel.

30 So the realm of Jehoshaphat was quiet: for "his God gave him rest round about.

31 ¶ And "Jehoshaphat reigned over Judah: he was thirty and five years old when he began to reign, and he reigned twenty and five years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Azubah, the daughter of Shilhi.

32 And "he walked in "the way of Asa his father, and "departed not from it, doing that which was right in the sight of the LORD.

33 Howbeit, "the high places were not taken away: for as yet the people "had not prepared their hearts unto the God of their fathers.

34 Now "the rest of the acts of Jehoshaphat, first and last, behold, they are written in the "book of "Jehu the son of Hanani, who is "mentioned in the book of the kings of Israel.

35 ¶ And after this "did Jehoshaphat king of Judah join himself with Ahaziah king of Israel, "who did very wickedly:

36 And he joined himself with him to make ships to go to "Tarshish: and they made the ships in "Ezion-gaber.

37 Then Eliezer the son of Dodavah of Mareshah, prophesied against Jehoshaphat, saying, "Because thou hast joined thyself with Ahaziah, "the LORD hath broken thy works. And the ships were broken, that they were not able to go to Tarshish.

the more exasperated by our zeal to promote it; our own miscarriages require rebukes; trials are needful to repress pride; and difficulties form the proper exercise and discovery of our faith, love, patience, and hope in God. Thus his honour, the edification of others, the good of our own souls, and our situation in the midst of ungodly men, all require that "in the world we should have tribulation."—In calamities or dangers, public or personal, our first business should be to seek help from the Lord. When two or three agree in doing this, that concurrence adds energy to their supplications; how much more, then, when multitudes with one accord pour out their fervent supplications for the same common blessing! Hence the advantage of days appointed for national fasting and prayer. Such seasons remind the remnant of believers to unite in the same requests, as with one heart and one voice: and even the cries of unconverted men for outward mercies, form an honourable acknowledgment of God, and of man's entire dependence on him, and frequently receive a gracious answer. It is therefore commendable in christian princes to call their people to these solemn services, and, indeed, a most important part of their duty and true wisdom, but it can scarcely be supposed that the mere appointment is sufficient, unless their own example proves that they are in earnest in the sacred service, let who will be formal. It is also the duty of every individual, according to his station in the community, to concur in such pious measures, and to stir up himself, and those around him, to engage cordially in them, that good impressions may be made, fixed, or revived, in the minds of men in every place.—What then shall we think of those who call themselves Christians and patriots, yet not only neglect, but ridicule or revile, this scriptural method of seeking help in danger from our almighty Friend, after an example so honoured by God himself? or of those who give occasion to such reproach and contempt by their absurd and manifest hypocrisy in these observances?—The fear of wrath, when united with a hope of mercy, excites sinners to seek the Lord in good earnest; and is often useful to quicken the believer, when his love has subsided, and he is grown slothful in the concerns of his soul. We must, therefore, first approach the holy majesty of our God, with humiliation for our sin, justifying him in all we suffer or fear, and confiding only in his mercy for acceptance, and in his power for protection. And, in all ages of the church, fasting has been deemed an expedient attendant upon such exercises, on particular occasions, personal and public; being expressive of a mind abstracted from earthly things; conscious of having forfeited every enjoyment by sin; and attentive only to obtain the great objects which the soul is then pursuing.—All believers are sons of Abraham, and "friends of God:" with such persons the everlasting covenant is established, and to them every promise belongs. (Notes, Gen. xii. 1-3. John xv. 12-16. Rom. v. 1, 2.) Even in those distresses, which are intended for the correction of their sins, when they cry unto the Lord, he will hear and help them. Their enemies are his enemies; and when they are rewarded with evil for good, He will appear for them, and plead their cause. When they are the most indisposed to avenge themselves, and least able to ward off injuries, their dependence on God will become more unreserved, and their prayers more fervent; and he will no more forsake those who know not what to do, but look up to him for help, than a fond mother will desert her helpless infant that clings to her bosom, and knows and seeks no other refuge. Indeed, this is the very frame of mind to which he designs to form his people. The covenant is made with believers "for the good of their children after them;" and they should bring them, and the "dominion of Judah, "and made themselves a king.

9 Then Jehoram went forth with his princes, and all his chariots with him: and he rose up by night, and smote the Edomites which compassed him in, and the captains of the chariots.

10 So the Edomites revolted from under the hand of Judah unto this day. The same time also did "Libnah revolt from under his hand; "because he had forsaken the LORD God of his fathers.

11 Moreover "he made high places in the mountains of Judah, and "caused the inhabitants of Jerusalem to commit "fornication, and "compelled Judah thereto.

12 ¶ And there came "a writing to him from "Elijah the prophet, saying, Thus saith the LORD God of David thy father, Because thou hast not walked "in the ways of Jehoshaphat thy father, nor "in the ways of Asa king of Judah, the rest of their families, as soon as possible, to the ordinances of God, that they may be trained up in his house, and become truly a part of his family.

V. 14-35. The Lord will surely speak peace to those who seek him in a due manner; and when his word banishes our fears and calms our spirits, our prayers are answered in good measure, even previously to those providential deliverances of which we have received a blessed pledge.—If our sins be pardoned, "God is for us;" and "if He be for us, who can be against us?" We need not be dismayed at the number and power of our enemies, or on account of our own weakness; "the battle is the LORD's," and the victory is sure. We have only to observe his word of command, whether he call us to labour, to wrestle, and strive; or whether it become our part to "stand still, and to see the salvation of the LORD." When vigorous faith receives the promises, their accomplishment is anticipated with humble gratitude. The Christian soldier may sing his songs of triumph when marching to the field, or conflicting in his spiritual battles, being assured that he shall be made more than conqueror, through the Saviour who hath loved him:—"and thus, the joy and praise of the church militant emulate and anticipate those of the church triumphant.—But, alas! our faith is apt to waver, and then our joys decline. Believers need frequent exhortations to persevering faith and hope in God; and it becomes the strong trust to animate the weak.—As we cannot know the truth and promises of God, except by his prophets and apostles, how can we believe in him, unless we firmly credit their infallible testimony, as recorded in the sacred Scriptures? In proportion as we expect protection in this way from God, in obedient faith, we shall be established, and prosper, and adore the beauty of the Divine holiness, and the everlasting mercy of God in Christ Jesus, with thankful hearts; and the more generally this is done, the greater stability and success will attend the affairs of the nation. When we proceed in this manner, our enemies will fall before us; our trials will prove our gain; and our very sorrows will enrich our souls with more abundant rejoicing. The advantage will be all our own, but the whole glory will be ascribed to the Lord.—We should always render our tribute of praise and gratitude for mercies received, when our hearts are impressed with a lively sense of the loving-kindness of God, as thanksgivings for public or private benefits grow rapid by delay. But, alas! we find very few who are so prompt to return thanks for favours vouchsafed, as they were to cry for relief in the hour of distress. (Note, Luke xvii. 11-19.) Blessed be God, there are some honourable exceptions, whose example proves very useful.—Mercy thus sought and improved will be durable; and if God give us rest, none will dare to molest us.—But the best of men seldom shine so bright in prosperity, as in adversity: and even relapses into sin may be noticed in very valuable characters, which the Lord will mark with rebukes and chastenings. Many things must also remain imperfect in the church on earth; for there are many desirable regulations which the greatest reformers have not ventured to attempt, or have not been able to accomplish: and, indeed, except men's "hearts are prepared to seek the LORD," magistrates and ministers can do nothing effectual. The zealous, however, will never labour in vain. Much good will be done, though not all which they desire. God will graciously accept their endeavours; and in heaven they will be associated with the spirits of just men made perfect, and made like them in holiness and felicity.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXI. V. 2. The second Azariah, in the original, is called Azariahu. V. 3. Perhaps Jehoram had acted the hypocrite during his father's lifetime; but, if he shewed his evil disposition, Jehoshaphat, having no command from God, did not think it proper to set him aside; otherwise his brethren were better than he, more wise, and more righteous. (Note, 13.) The succession of so vile a king as Jehoram to pious Jehoshaphat, was a just judgment on the men of Judah for "not having prepared their hearts unto the God of their fathers," during the preceding reigns. (Note, xx. 33.)

V. 4. On one pretence or another, Jehoram cruelly slew all his brethren, from a jealous ambition, lest they should supplant him in his authority; which was probably increased by their reputation and favour with the people, and the affluence and authority to which Jehoshaphat had raised them. (Note, Judg. ix. 4-6.) He slew some of the princes also, who, perhaps, had favoured them. Some think these were the magistrates whom Jehoshaphat had appointed. (xix. 5-11.)

V. 5-7. (Notes, xviii. 1. 1 Kings xvi. 25-33. 2 Kings viii. 16-19. xiii. 4-12. 2 Sam. vii. 12-16. 1 Kings xi. 11-13. 36. Is. ix. 6, 7. Jer. xxiii. 5, 6, xxxiii. 14-26. Ez. xxxvii. 24, 25.)

V. 8-11. (Note, 2 Kings viii. 20-24.) Jehoram obtained some advantages over the Edomites, but could not re-establish his dominion.—Libnah seems to have revolted, because they would not submit to his idolatrous impositions.—The inhabitants of Jerusalem were induced by his persuasions to fall in with his idolatry; but the other parts of Judah were compelled to it by persecution.—All kinds of licentious and unnatural practices, to the extreme disgrace of human nature, were encouraged, and even held sacred, in the worship of these abominable idols, as may undeniably be proved even from pagan authors.

V. 12. If the account of Elijah's translation be given, according to the order of time in which it occurred, it happened before Jehoram reigned alone. (Notes, 2 Kings ii. 11-18. iii. 11, 12.) But the spirit of prophecy might direct Elijah, to prepare this writing before his translation, in the foresight of Jehoram's crimes; it might be left to Elisha, or some other prophet, to transmit it to him; and coming in that extraordinary manner, it would have a peculiarly awful energy.—Some, however, have not improbably conjectured, that Elisha, and not Elijah, is intended.—The opinion, found in Josephus, the Septuagint, and elsewhere, that this letter was sent by Elijah from heaven, only shews, that the papists have not the honour of being the first inventors of such legendary tales. (Acts ix. 35.)

V. 13. Better. Jehoram's brethren seem to have been pious persons, and hated for the same cause as Abel was hated by Cain. (Notes, Gen. iv. 6-9. 1 John iii. 11, 12.)

V. 14, 15. Many of the people had concurred in Jehoram's idolatry, and some of them must have been instruments in his base unnatural murders. They were therefore joined in his punishment, and he suffered by losing his subjects. (Note, 18-20.)

17 And they came up into Judah, and brake into it, and ⁸carried away all the substance that was found in the king's house, and ¹¹his sons also, and his wives; so that there was never a son left him, save ¹²"Jehoahaz, the youngest of his sons.

18 ¶ And after all this the LORD smote him in his bowels with ¹⁹"an incurable disease.

19 And it came to pass, that in process of time, after the end of two years, his bowels fell out by reason of his sickness: so he died of sore diseases: and his people ²⁰"made no burning for him, like the burning of his fathers.

20 ²¹"Thirty and two years old was he when he began to reign, and he reigned in Jerusalem eight years, and departed without ²²"being desired. Howbeit they buried him in the city of David, but not in the sepulchres of the kings.

CHAP. XXII.

Ahaziah succeeds Jehoram, reigns wickedly, joins Jehoram king of Israel, and is slain by Jehu, 1-9. Athaliah murders the seed royal, and usurps the throne, 10. Joash is preserved by Jehoshabeath, 11, 12.

AND ¹"the inhabitants of Jerusalem made ²"Ahaziah his youngest son king in his stead: for the band of men that came with the Arabians to the camp had ³"slain all the eldest. So Ahaziah the son of Jehoram king of Judah reigned.

2 ⁴"Forty and two years old was Ahaziah when he began to reign, and he reigned one year in Jerusalem. His mother's name also was ⁵"Athaliah the daughter of Omri.

3 He also walked in the ways of the house of Ahab: for ⁶"his mother was ⁷"his counsellor to do wickedly.

4 Wherefore he did evil in the sight of the LORD, like the house of Ahab: for ⁸"they were his counsellors, after the death of his father, to his destruction.

5 He ⁹"walked also after their counsel, and ¹⁰"went with Jehoram the son of Ahab king of Israel, to war

V. 16, 17. The spirit of these invaders was stirred up against Jehoram, and they do not seem to have done any great mischief to the country or to Jerusalem. Having taken captive all his sons, except Jehoahaz or Ahaziah, (names of similar meaning,) they put them to death. (Note, xxii. 1.)—Athaliah, the daughter of Ahab, was left, to be a still further curse to the family of Jehoram. It is probable that she concealed herself and her youngest son.

V. 18-20. Jehoram lived to witness the fulfilment of the other most afflictive particulars of Elijah's prophecy; and then he was seized with the predicted malady. (12-15. Notes, Deut. xxviii. 61. Acts xii. 20-23.) He was a young man, yet he could get no relief from the most painful and loathsome disease; and "he departed without being desired." No one regretted his death, as none had desired his recovery: but the idolaters, and even his dependents, were glad to be relieved from his tyranny: they therefore burnt no sweet spices in honour of him, and refused to bury him among their former kings. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The effects of sin may be very dreadful and durable, even when it doth not prove finally destructive to him who committed it.—No means can ensure divine grace to our children; but connexions with atrocious sinners almost render their ungodliness certain.—We are reminded to bless God for equitable rulers, a mild administration, and a well-poised constitution; and to pray for a continuance of these blessings: for, notwithstanding the most prudent regulations, we may be suddenly and irreparably bereaved of them, unless God mercifully protect us.—Ambition, envy, and jealousy destroy natural affection, and convert men into savage monsters; when they have got power in possession, and are afraid of losing it, and when "there is no fear of God before their eyes." In the mystery of providence, such persons prosper for a time, and murder much wiser and better men than themselves: but the Lord hath righteous purposes in permitting these events; part of which may now be discerned, and all the rest will be discovered by the light of the eternal world.—The vilest characters are, in some way, connected in the great chain of causes and effects: and are reserved to be undesignedly instrumental in carrying on the purposes of God, and in fulfilling his promises to his church and servants: or they are spared a while, for the sake of their relation to those, whom "he delighteth to honour." But his plan will not long require them; their measure of iniquities will speedily be full, and then all their prosperity will end in ruin and despair.—The Lord, by one means or another, reminds offenders of their guilt, and warns them of their danger: and they, who despise these admonitions, will experience the truth of them when it is too late; for, if neither judgments nor respite bring men to repentance, destruction cannot be far distant.—The dreadful torments and deaths of some murderers, persecutors, and other naughty criminals, who defy human justice, proclaim, that "verily there is a God that judgeth the world," and shew what all such enemies of God and man may expect, in the day of wrath and righteous vengeance. None need lament the departure of those who were plagues and tempters whilst they lived: and it may be right, in some cases, to withhold customary respect from them after their death; that other tyrants, whilst surrounded by sycophants who flatter them in their crimes, may understand how they are despised and abhorred in the general sentiments of mankind. May the Lord enable us so to live, that we may have hope and comfort in the approach and agonies of death, and a joyful entrance into glory; and that our survivors may have to bless God for the benefit which they have received from us, and to regret our removal! Of this we should be ambitious; and such honour have all the saints of God.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXII. V. 1. The Arabians seem to have taken Jehoram's family captive, in the prospect of obtaining a ransom: but some band of men in their camp slew them, and thus defeated their purpose, but accomplished that of God. (Note, xxi. 16, 17.)

V. 2-4. Forty-two. (2.) As Jehoram was under forty years old when he died, it must be granted that this is an error of the transcribers, and that it should be twenty-two, as in Kings, (2 Kings viii. 26,) and in some ancient versions.—Ahaziah was born when his father was eighteen years of age, yet he had several elder brethren: so that Jehoram must have been married to Athaliah when he was very young; and this circumstance rendered Jehoshaphat's conduct in this alliance still more blameable. (Notes, xviii. 1. xxi. 5-7.)

V. 5. "Ahaziah would not imitate his grandfather in that which was good:—yet he followed his bad example, in joining with Ahab's son, as Jehoshaphat had with Ahab." (Bp. Patrick.)—This propensity in human nature, not only to copy bad examples, but even to select the bad part of good characters for imitation, is an awful and conclusive proof of deep depravity.

V. 6. The name given the king of Judah in this verse, though in the translation it varies only in a single letter, is more different in the original, and seems to have been a distinct name by which he was known.—It signifies the help of the Lord.

V. 7-9. (Notes, 2 Kings ix. 12-28. x. 13, 14.) The Lord was pleased to commission Jehu, at this crisis, in order that Ahaziah might be involved in the righteous judgment which was executed upon the house of Ahab.—Ahaziah lay concealed in the kingdom of Samaria, though not in the city so called. When he had seen Jehoram slain, he fled, and endeavoured to conceal himself in some part of that country: but Jehu ordered him to be pursued, and at length he was taken at Megiddo, and brought to Jehu, who caused him to be put to death. His servants were permitted, however, to carry his corpse to Jerusalem, and bury him, out of respect to the memory of Jehoshaphat his grandfather; whilst Jehoram was left unburied, in detestation of his father Ahab's enormous wickedness.

V. 10-12. (Notes, 2 Kings xi. 1-3.)

CHAP. XXIII.

Jehoiada takes proper measures, and makes Joash king, 1—11. Athaliah is slain, 12—15. Jehoiada subverts idolatry: restores the worship of God, and places Joash on the throne, to the great joy of the people, 16—21.

AND in the seventh year Jehoiada strengthened himself, and took the captains of hundreds, Azariah the son of Jeroham, and Ishmael the son of Jehohanan, and Azariah the son of Obed, and Maaseiah the son of Adaiah, and Elishaphat the son of Zichri, into covenant with him.

2 And they went about in Judah, and gathered the Levites out of all the cities of Judah, and the chief of the fathers of Israel, and they came to Jerusalem.

3 And all the congregation made a covenant with the king in the house of God. And he said unto them, Behold, the king's son shall reign, as the LORD hath said of the sons of David.

4 This is the thing that ye shall do: A third part of you entering on the sabbath, of the priests and of the Levites, shall be porters of the doors;

5 And a third part shall be at the king's house; and a third part at the gate of the foundation: and all the people shall be in the courts of the house of the LORD.

6 But let none come into the house of the LORD save the priests, and they that minister of the Levites; they shall go in, for they are holy: but all the people shall keep the watch of the LORD.

7 And the Levites shall compass the king round about, every man with his weapons in his hand; and whosoever else cometh into the house, he shall be put to death: but be ye with the king when he cometh in, and when he goeth out.

8 So the Levites and all Judah did according to all things that Jehoiada the priest had commanded, and took every man his men that were to come in on the sabbath, with them that were to go out on the sabbath: for Jehoiada the priest dismissed not the courses.

9 Moreover Jehoiada the priest delivered to the captains of hundreds spears, and bucklers, and shields, that had been king David's, which were in the house of God.

10 And he set all the people, every man having his weapon in his hand, from the right side of the temple to the left side of the temple, along by the altar and the temple, by the king round about.

CHAP. XXIV.

Joash reigns well during Jehoiada's life; and zealously repairs the temple, 1-14. Jehoiada dies, and is honourably buried, 15, 16. Joash, seduced by his princes, turns aside to idolatry; and causes Zechariah, Jehoiada's son, to be stoned, for reproving him in the name of God, 15-21. Zechariah's dying prediction, 22. Joash is plundered by the Syrians, left sick, and then slain by his own servants, 23-26. Amaziah succeeds him, 27.

JOASH^a was seven years old when he began to reign, and he reigned forty years in Jerusalem. His mother's name also was Zibiah of Beer-sheba.

2 And ^bJoash did that which was right in the sight of the LORD ^call the days of Jehoiada the priest.

3 And Jehoiada ^dtook for him ^etwo wives; and he begat sons and daughters.

4 ¶ And it came to pass after this, that Joash was minded to ^frepair the house of the LORD.

5 And he gathered together the priests and the Levites, and said to them, Go out unto the cities of Judah, and ^ggather of all Israel money to repair the house of your God from year to year, and see that ye hasten the matter. ^hHowbeit the Levites hastened it not.

6 And the king called for Jehoiada the chief, and said unto him, ⁱWhy hast thou not required of the Levites, ^jthe collection, according to the commandment of Moses the servant of the LORD, and of the congregation of Israel, for the ^ktabernacle of witness?

7 For the ^lsons of Athaliah, ^mthat wicked woman, had broken up the house of God; and also all the dedicated things of the house of the LORD ⁿdid they bestow upon Baalim.

8 And ^oat the king's commandment they made a chest, and set it without at the gate of the house of the LORD.

9 And they made a ^pproclamation through Judah and Jerusalem, to bring in to the LORD ^qthe collection that Moses the servant of God ^rlaid upon Israel in the wilderness.

10 And all the princes and all the people ^srejoiced, and brought in, and cast into the chest, until they had made an end.

11 Now it came to pass, that ^tat what time the chest was brought unto the king's office by the hand of the Levites, and when they saw that ^uthere was much money, the king's scribe and the high priest's officer came and emptied the chest, and took it, and joy in their advancement; they should remember to terminate all in thanksgivings and praises unto God. This is peculiarly becoming, when persecuting tyrants and usurpers are removed, and equitable rulers come in their places: the work is the Lord's, whatever instruments he is pleased to employ. Such national mercies should be acknowledged by public reformation; and by a concurrence of all ranks, in solemnly yielding themselves up to be the Lord's people, and in establishing his worship and ordinances according to his word. Where this is neglected, the joy and singing, which takes place upon great deliverances, or the accession of kings to the throne, will commonly be shortlived, and will terminate in complaints, discords, and calamities.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIV. V. 1-3. (Note, 2 Kings xii. 2, 3.)—Took, &c. (3.) The Jewish expositors are of opinion, that Jehoiada took these two wives for himself, not for Joash: and they consider this as inconsistent with the character of the high priest. But it is most obvious to understand the words, for him, of Joash.—It is not indeed expressly said that Jehoiada was high priest, but the way in which he is distinguished from the other priests, and the authority which he exercised, seem to put it beyond all reasonable doubt, that he was.

V. 4-14. (Notes, 2 Kings xii. 4-16. Marg. Ref.)—And they offered, &c. (14.) It appears from this, that the daily offering, morning and evening, had been intermitted, previously; and that it was neglected after the death of Jehoiada. (Notes, xxiii. 18, 19, Ex. xxix. 38-41. Dan. viii. 9-12. xi. 31. iii. 11-13.)

V. 15, 16. Jehoiada was born in the reign of Solomon, and had lived through six successive reigns, besides Athaliah's usurpation; (namely, those of Rehoboam, Abijah, Asa, Jehoshaphat, Jehoram, and Ahaziah.) He was honourably interred among the kings of Judah: but the reason assigned for this extraordinary respect was much more honourable; and perhaps it was inscribed on his monument: "He has done good in Israel, both towards God, and towards his house." He had eminently promoted true religion, and promoted the regular worship of God, and the repairs of the temple; in which the best interests of carried it to his place again. Thus they did day by day, and gathered money in abundance.

12 And the king and Jehoiada ^agave it to such as did the work of the service of the house of the LORD, and hired ^bmasons and carpenters to repair the house of the LORD, and also such as wrought iron and brass to mend the house of the LORD.

13 So the workmen wrought, and ^cthe work was perfected by them, and they set the house of God ^din his state, and strengthened it.

14 And when they had finished it, they brought the rest of the money before the king and Jehoiada, whereof were made ^evessels for the house of the LORD, ^feven ^gvessels to minister, and ^hto offer ⁱwithal, and spoons, and vessels of gold and silver. And they ^joffered burnt-offerings in the house of the LORD continually, ^kall the days of Jehoiada.

15 ¶ But Jehoiada waxed old, and was ^lfull of days when he died; ^man hundred and thirty years old was he when he died.

16 And they buried him ⁿin the city of David among the kings, ^obecause he had done good in Israel, both toward God, and toward his house.

17 ¶ Now ^pafter the death of Jehoiada came ^qthe princes of Judah, and made obeisance to the king. Then the king hearkened unto them.

18 And ^rthey left the house of the LORD God of their fathers, and served groves and idols: and ^swrath came upon Judah and Jerusalem for this their trespass.

19 Yet ^the sent prophets to them, to bring them again unto the LORD; and they testified against them: but they would not ^ugive ear.

20 And ^vthe Spirit of God ^wcame upon Zechariah, ^xthe son of Jehoiada the priest, which stood above the people, and said unto them, Thus saith God, ^yWhy transgress ye the commandments of the LORD, that ye cannot prosper? ^zbecause ye have forsaken the LORD, he hath also forsaken you.

21 And they ^aconspired against him, and ^bstoned him with stones at the commandment of the king, in the court of the house of the LORD.

22 Thus Joash the king ^cremembered not the kindness which Jehoiada his father had done to him, but slew his son. And when he died, he said, ^d"The LORD look upon it, and require it."

the people were greatly concerned. He had also been exceedingly useful in preserving the line of David in the person of Joash, and in terminating Athaliah's wicked usurpation. (Note, xxxi. 20, 21.)—Israel, the general name of the whole nation, is sometimes used when the kingdom of Judah is meant.

V. 17, 18. Jehoiada had acquired his influence over Joash during his childhood: and his near relation to the king, and the vast obligations which he had conferred upon him, concurred with his age, gravity, reputation, piety, and wisdom, to support him in authority. So that, whilst he lived, neither Joash, nor his courtiers, ventured to follow, or even to declare, their inclinations to idolatry, but externally conformed to Jehoiada's regulations. As soon, however, as he was removed, they threw off the mask; and the nobles paid court to Joash, and perhaps flattered him, as at length freed from priestly dominion, tuition, grave lectures, and restraints, and as now a king indeed; and intimated, that he would have no objection to relax the rigour of Jehoiada's administration, in matters of religion. Perhaps, they only proposed, that he should tolerate their sacrificing upon the high places, as more convenient and agreeable to them, than always coming to Jerusalem: but he, being won by their homage, as well as induced by his own inclinations, joined with them even in more avowed idolatry; in consequence of which, they soon experienced some tokens of the Divine displeasure. (Note, 2 Kings xii. 17, 18.)

V. 19-22. (Marg. Ref.) Both the king and his courtiers seem to have entirely disregarded the warnings of the prophets first sent to them, so that they did not honour them with hatred or persecution. But, at length, when they were assembled on account of some festival, (for the temple was not utterly forsaken,) the Spirit of God directed Zechariah to expostulate with them respecting their idolatry. Being the son of Jehoiada, a near relation to Joash, a chief priest, if not the high priest, he seemed to be the most unexceptionable person, who could possibly have been selected for the service; while his piety, and the meekness and reasonableness of his plain address and warning, concurred to procure him a favourable hearing, and evidenced his admonition to be seasonable. But all this was in vain; the enraged apostate, who hated reproof, 23 ¶ And it came to pass "at the end of the year, that "the host of Syria came up against him: and they came to Judah and Jerusalem, and destroyed "all the princes of the people from among the people, and sent all the spoil of them unto the king of "Damascus.

24 For the army of the Syrians "came with a small company of men, and the LORD "delivered a very great host into their hand, because they had forsaken the LORD God of their fathers. "So they executed judgment against Joash.

25 And when they were departed from him, (for they left him in "great diseases,) "his own servants conspired against him, "for the blood of the sons of Jehoiada the priest, and slew him on his bed, and he died: and they buried him in the city of David, but they buried him "not in the sepulchres of the kings.

26 And these are they that conspired against him; "Zabad the son of Shimeath, an Ammonitess, and Jehozabad the son of "Shimrith, a Moabitess.

27 ¶ Now concerning his sons, and the greatness of the "burdens laid upon him, and the "repairing of the house of God, behold, they are written in the "story of the book of the Kings. And "Amaziah his son reigned in his stead.

ordered him to be stoned; and the wretched multitude with one accord executed the unrighteous sentence, even in the court of the temple! xlii. 14, 15. (Note, 2 Kings xi. 13—16.)—It is scarcely possible that a murder could contain more aggravated injustice and impiety; but the ingratitude of Joash is peculiarly noticed. Many, who have cast off all fear of God, retain some regard to their earthly benefactors; but this base man was lost to every thing which had the least semblance of good in it.—Zechariah's dying words would be best rendered, "The Lord will look upon it and require it," as a prophecy, and not a prayer. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Matt. xxiii. 29—36.) The event soon verified this prediction, and the judgment of God seems to have singled out the most guilty persons.—"Though Zechariah spoke by the Spirit of God, he only applied the prediction of Moses to the present time, (Deut. xxxi. 16, 17;) that they might learn to have a greater regard to Moses, and to continually meditate in his law; unto which, if they had attended, they would easily have discerned, who were the true prophets, and who were false." (Bp. Patrick.)

V. 25, 26. Joash seems to have murdered some other sons of Jehoiada, perhaps lest they should avenge the death of Zechariah.—Whether the conspirators intended to punish Joash for this murder, or were actuated by private resentment or ambition, God was pleased to use them as executioners of his righteous vengeance. They were both born of foreign women: the idolatrous kings, perhaps, encouraged such forbidden marriages; but, in this case, they proved fatal to Joash. (Notes, 2 Kings xii. 17—21. Marg. Ref.)

V. 27. Burdens, &c. Either the tribute demanded by the victor, or the judgments denounced and inflicted by the Lord.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—16. The best education, the most scriptural instructions, and the brightest examples, are insufficient of themselves to convert the soul: they are, however, the general means by which the Lord works; and even, when not eventually successful to change the sinner's heart, they commonly produce effects salutary to the community.—Hypocrites may shew extraordinary zeal for externals, but they foolishly neglect the heart.—The reluctance of men to part with their money for pious and charitable uses, is increased by the avarice of many through whose hands it should pass, and who basely intercept it; but, exact fidelity and punctuality, in shewing that it has been, or will be, expended for the end proposed, go far towards inducing men to contribute liberally in a good cause; and this alone can afford comfort upon reflection, or bring honour upon a man's character.—If we live to the glory of God, and endeavour to do good to men, especially in the great concerns of salvation, we may be satisfied that we have lived long enough, though we should die young; or we may be willing to linger out many years in infirm old age, if the Lord has any thing for us to do. But, whenever, or however, we pass from time into eternity, may we leave such a testimony in the consciences of our survivors, that if they were required to make an inscription for our tomb, they might be constrained to write, "He did good to Israel, both towards God, and towards his house." It is true, that many who are overawed by the personal qualities, the rank, or the reputation of eminent men, secretly hate their piety, and are weary of their authority. But, a good conscience, the assurance of usefulness, and the approbation of God, may enable a man to disregard these painful effects of superior excellency.

V. 17—27. The authority or influence of parents, ministers, and pious friends, joined with transient serious impressions, and other incidental circumstances, may produce, and long maintain, a plausible profession of religion; but the lamp will go out when it is wanted, unless supplied from the oil in the vessel, the grace of God possessing the heart.—When a man is under the power of pride and worldly passions, he disrelishes those counsels from which he has received the most important temporal advantage, and which tend to his eternal good; and then flattery, licentious liberty, arbitrary authority, and the most Amaziah at first reigns well, and justly punishes his father's murderers, 1—4. He gathers a great army, and hires, for a hundred talents, a hundred thousand Israelites against Edom: but, losing the money, he dismisses them at the word of a prophet; and they depart in great anger, 5—10. He smites the Edomites, and exercises great cruelty, 11, 12. The Israelites, on their return, spoil the cities of Judah, 13. Amaziah serves the gods of Edom, and rejects the admonitions of a prophet, 14—16. He challenges Joash, who in vain warns him; he is vanquished, and Jerusalem spoiled, 17—24. The rest of his reign, 25, 26. He is slain by a conspiracy, 27, 28.

AMAZIAH was "twenty and five years old when he began to reign, and he reigned twenty and nine years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Jehoaddan of Jerusalem.

2 And he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD, "but not with a perfect heart.

3 ¶ Now it came to pass, when the kingdom was "established to him, that "he slew his servants that had killed the king his father.

4 But he slew not their children, but did "as it is written in the law in the book of Moses, where the LORD commanded, saying, The fathers shall not die for the children, neither shall the children die for the fathers, but every man shall die for his own sin.

5 ¶ Moreover Amaziah gathered Judah together, and made them "captains over thousands, and captains over hundreds, according to the houses of their fathers, throughout all Judah and Benjamin: and he numbered them "from twenty years old and above, and found them three hundred thousand choice men, able impious proposals, will be more welcome, because congenial to his judgment and affections. But he who has not sense to direct his own conduct, and is too proud to take good advice, will soon be proved a fool, let who will flatter his wisdom.—"This is the love of God, to keep his commandments, and his commandments are not grievous." But the yoke of external obedience is very uneasy to the carnal mind; and, in this case, men will secretly rejoice, and, perhaps, openly congratulate one another, upon the death of pious monitors, or even parents. But impiety will bring wrath, especially when consequent to apostasy, on such as cast off the fear of God.—No caution, tenderness, or gentleness, consistent with faithfulness; no respectability of character, eminent services, or personal obligations, can secure the ministers of God from persecution, if they rouse the dormant conscience, contradict the haughty spirit, or excite disquietude in sin: and, except their word be accompanied with the converging grace of God, the sinner will rage, in proportion to his power, pride, or impiety.—Some regard to justice, decency, and gratitude, may be expected from ignorant and profligate characters, and from infidels and gentiles: but the rage of an apostate bursts all obligations and restraints; for he has so done violence to his conscience, that it has lost all its energy; and, except he be restrained by human laws, every thing desperate may be expected from his resentment. The testimony of faithful ministers will, however, be accepted by God, when rejected by men; and he will recompense to them all their losses and sufferings for his sake.—They, who transgress the commandments of the Lord, cannot prosper, whatever they suppose; and when they forsake God, he will forsake them. Without the spirit of prophecy, we may confidently foretell that the Lord will look upon, and require all the persecutions, slanders, mockeries, and ill-usage, which his servants meet with, except their prayers be answered, and he give their persecutors repentance, and better minds.—The Lord can soon find such as will, for their own purposes, execute judgment upon murderers, and other atrocious criminals, however exalted; nor can any power avail against those into whose hands he delivers his enemies to be punished. Then, superiority in station only ensures precedence in suffering: and how dreadful is it when a painful and miserable death transmits the impenitent rebel to a more miserable eternity! God help us to be in earnest, to take warning, to be upright in heart, and to persevere unto the end! and grant that we "may die the death of the righteous, and that our latter end may be like his!"

NOTES.

CHAP. XXV. V. 1, 2. (Notes, 14—16. xxvi. 4. 2 Kings xiv. 1—4.)

V. 3, 4. (Notes, xxiv. 25, 26.) Even if the conspirators against Joash intended to avenge upon him the murder of Zechariah, they acted without a commission from that God "to whom vengeance belongeth;" and were justly put to death for treason and murder. (Note, 2 Kings xiv. 5, 6.)

V. 5. Nearly four times as many soldiers had been numbered in the days of Jehoshaphat. (Note, xvii. 13—19.) The inhabitants of the land must have vastly decreased during the late reigns, in consequence of their wickedness, and as a punishment of it. But, perhaps numbers were unwilling to enlist under Amaziah; and either he did not attempt to force them, or they found means to evade his enquiries. His army, however, seems to have been sufficiently numerous to reduce the revolted Edomites.

V. 6—10. If Amaziah had previously consulted God, the painful consequences of this measure would have been prevented.—As the hundred talents would not divide above eight shillings apiece, among one hundred thousand men; we may suppose that it was only an earnest of their pay, or that they expected to be enriched with the plunder of the Edomites.—The kingdom of Israel was openly idolatrous, and the Lord would not have Judah join alliance with them. Perhaps the army which Amaziah had hired, was chiefly of the tribe of Ephraim; or that tribe, being the most considerable in the kingdom of to go forth to war, that could handle spear and shield.

6 He hired also an hundred thousand mighty men of valour out of ¹Israel, for an hundred talents of silver.

7 But there came ²a man of God to him, saying, O king, let not the army of Israel go with thee; ³for the LORD is not with Israel, ⁴to wit, with all the children of Ephraim.

8 But if thou wilt go, do it, ⁵be strong for the battle: God shall make thee fall before the enemy; for ⁶God hath power to help, and to cast down.

9 And Amaziah said to the man of God, But what shall we do for the hundred talents, which I have given to the ⁷army of Israel? And the man of God answered, ⁸The LORD is able to give thee much more than this.

10 Then ⁹Amaziah separated them, ¹⁰to wit, the army that was come to him out of Ephraim, to go ¹¹home again: wherefore their anger was greatly kindled against Judah, and they returned home in ¹²great anger.

11 ¶ And Amaziah strengthened himself, and led forth his people, and went to the ¹³valley of salt, and smote of the children of Seir ten thousand.

12 And ¹⁴other ten thousand left alive did the children of Judah carry away captive, and brought them unto the top of the rock, and ¹⁵cast them down from the top of the rock, that they all were ¹⁶broken in pieces.

13 ¶ But the ¹⁷soldiers of the army which Amaziah sent back, that they should not go with him to battle, fell upon the cities of Judah, from ¹⁸Samaria even unto ¹⁹Beth-horon, and smote three thousand of them, and took much spoil.

14 ¶ Now it came to pass, after that Amaziah was come from the slaughter of the Edomites, that he brought the gods of the children of Seir, and set them up to ²⁰be ²¹his gods, and bowed down himself before them, and burned incense unto them.

15 Wherefore the anger of the LORD was kindled against Amaziah, and he sent unto him ²²a prophet, which said unto him, ²³Why hast thou sought after ²⁴the gods of the people, ²⁵which could not deliver their own people out of thine hand?

16 And it came to pass, as he talked with him, that ²⁶the king said unto him, ²⁷Art thou made of the king's counsel? ²⁸forbear; why shouldst thou be smitten? Then the prophet forbore, and said, I know that God ¹hath ²determined to destroy thee, because thou hast done this, and hast not hearkened unto my counsel.

17 ¶ Then ³Amaziah king of Judah took advice, and sent to Joash, the son of Jehoahaz, the son of Jehu, king of Israel, saying, Come, ⁴let us see one another in the face.

18 And Joash king of Israel sent to Amaziah king of Judah, saying, The ⁵thistle that ⁶was in Lebanon sent to the cedar that ⁷was in Lebanon, saying, Give thy daughter to my son to wife: and there passed by ⁸a wild beast that ⁹was in Lebanon, and trode down the thistle.

19 Thou sayest, Lo, thou hast smitten the Edomites; and ¹⁰thine heart lifteth thee up ¹¹to boast: abide now at home; ¹²why shouldst thou meddle to ¹³thine hurt, that thou shouldst fall, ¹⁴even thou, and Judah with thee?

20 But Amaziah would not hear: for ¹⁵it came of God, that he might deliver them into the hand of ¹⁶their enemies, because they sought after the gods of Edom.

21 So Joash the king of Israel went up, and they saw one another in the face, ¹⁷both he and Amaziah king of Judah, at ¹⁸Beth-shemesh, which ¹⁹belongeth to Judah.

22 And Judah was ²⁰put to the worse before Israel, and they ²¹fled every man to his tent.

23 And Joash the king of Israel ²²took Amaziah king of Judah, the son of Joash, the son of ²³Jehoahaz, at Beth-shemesh, and brought him to Jerusalem, and brake down the wall of Jerusalem, from the ²⁴gate of Ephraim to the ²⁵corner-gate, four hundred cubits.

24 And ²⁶he took ²⁷all the gold and the silver, and all the vessels that were found in the house of God, with Obed-edom, and the treasures of the king's house, the hostages also, and returned to Samaria.

25 ¶ And Amaziah, the son of Joash king of Judah, lived after the death of ²⁸Joash, son of Jehoahaz king of Israel, fifteen years.

26 Now the ²⁹rest of the acts of Amaziah, first and last, behold, ³⁰are they not written in the book of the kings of Judah and Israel?

27 ¶ Now after the time that Amaziah did turn away ³¹from following the LORD, they ³²made a conspiracy against him in Jerusalem; and he fled to ³³Lachish: but they sent to Lachish after him, and slew him there.

28 And they brought him upon horses, and buried him with his fathers in ³⁴the city of Judah.

Israel, is put for the whole.—As the Lord was not with the men of Ephraim, he declared by his prophet that he would not prosper Amaziah, if he employed them: and if, after this prohibition, he would persist in taking them with him, he was warned, that God would make him fall before the enemy: for he could help him without the aid of idolaters; and he could cast him down, though he thus made himself “strong for the battle.” (Notes, Is. viii. 9, 10. Joel iii. 9—17.) And as for the hundred talents, which he had given to the Israelites, and could not recover, and which he was unwilling to lose; the Lord was able to give him much more than that.—Amaziah, though destitute of true faith, paid so much regard to the Lord's message, that he discharged the hired army: and they were exceedingly offended at the affront put upon them, in being sent away as the enemies of God; and perhaps also by the disappointment of their avaricious or ambitious expectations.

V. 11, 12. (Note, 2 Kings xiv. 7. Marg. Ref.)

V. 13. The Israelites seem to have returned home, when discharged by Amaziah, as his powerful army deterred them from attempting revenge at that time: but when he was engaged with the Edomites, they took the opportunity, marched from Samaria, and plundered all the cities till they came to Beth-horon, where they slew three thousand of the inhabitants.—Amaziah had indeed dismissed these auxiliaries, in obedience to God; but his savage cruelty to the prisoners of Edom, and his subsequent idolatry, (14—16,) proved that he acted by constraint or terror, when he was obedient: he therefore received for his complicated misconduct just reuke. Had he broken the idols to pieces, and treated the prisoners with clemency; he might have expected comfort in his success, and not experienced such painful effects from dismissing the Israelites.—Perhaps the cities, which were destroyed on this occasion, being in the vicinity of Israel, were infected with idolatry.

V. 14—16. Ahaz, who worshipped the idols of Syria by whom he was vanquished, was not so senseless as Amaziah, who sought unto the gods of the people, which could not deliver them from his cruelty. (Note, xxviii. 22, 23.) But Amaziah, who had borne with the prophet, who spoke to him concerning dismissing the Israelites, by which he lost one hundred talents, was so mad upon his idols, that he would not endure that subject to be insisted on.—He seems to have menaced the prophet with Zechariah's doom; and thus he made himself a sharer in the guilt of that atrocious murder. (Note, xxiv. 19—22.) The prophet was a counsellor, whom the Lord had appointed him: and none of those, whom he had chosen for himself, gave him such honest, wise, and salutary counsel. But, as he would not hearken to it, the prophet desisted, having warned him that the Lord had counsellor to destroy him. (Marg. Notes, Deut. ii. 30. 1 Kings xxii. 19—23. Luke xxii. 21—23. Acts ii. 22—24.)

17. 24. Took advice, &c. (17.) Amaziah having rejected the counsel of God, advised with his flatterers; and they counselled him to make a foolish challenge, which paved the way for his ruin, to which he had been doomed for his obstinate idolatry. (Notes, 2 Kings xiv. 8—14.)—To boast. (19.) “Glory of this.”—Of God, &c. (20.) The people had joined in Amaziah's idolatry; and therefore suffered through his folly and vain glory. (Notes, 14—16. 2 Sam. xxiv. 1, 2. 2 Kings xxiii. 26, 27.)—Obed-edom, (24.) Perhaps a descendant of him who received the ark in the days of David, had the charge of these treasures in the house of God. (2 Chr. xiii. 13, 14.)

V. 25—27. (Note, 2 Kings xiv. 17—20.) We find no evidences of Amaziah's repentance, during the whole space of the Lord's long-suffering. Probably, he added tyranny and oppression to his idolatry; and this, with his imprudent administration, rendered him so odious, that he was slain, as it appears, by the general consent of his subjects, and nobody was called to account for his death.—He was, however, buried with the other kings of Judah. (Notes, xxi. 18—20. xxiv. 15, 16.)

CHAP. XXVI.

Uzziah succeeds Amaziah, reigns well for a time, and is greatly prospered, 1—8. His buildings, husbandry, army, and engines of war, 9—15. Being lifted up in pride he attempts to burn incense in the temple, is opposed by the priests, and smitten with leprosy by God, 16—21. He dies, and is succeeded by Jotham, 22, 23.

THEN all the people of Judah took Uzziah, who was sixteen years old, and made him king in the room of his father Amaziah.

2 He built Eloth, and restored it to Judah, after that the king slept with his fathers.

3 Sixteen years old was Uzziah when he began to reign, and he reigned fifty and two years in Jerusalem. His mother's name also was Jecoliah of Jerusalem.

4 And he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD, according to all that his father Amaziah did.

5 And he sought God in the days of Zechariah, who had understanding in the visions of God: and, as long as he sought the LORD, God made him to prosper.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—10. Many favour and support religion from motives of policy, who either do not appear, or who only appear, to be religious; but the Lord has no pleasure in dissemblers.—Traitors and murderers are sometimes so powerful, as, for a time, to set justice at defiance; but they will at length find those, who are able to execute righteous vengeance upon them. In every case, however, the law of God should be adhered to, as our perfect rule of duty.—As unrepented sin will inevitably and finally ruin those who continue in it; so, it will infallibly enfeeble those nations where it prevails, and diminish their prosperity and consequence. Princes and statesmen professing Christianity, when forming alliances, or stipulating succours from foreign courts, seldom enquire, whether “the Lord be with them” or not. Indeed, the very question would excite general ridicule and disgust: and yet, this will be found of far greater efficacy, in the success of wars, and the prosperity of kingdoms, than the most sagacious ungodly devices. It is indeed certain, that no enterprise, public or private, should be engaged in, without seeking to know the will of God concerning it; if we would avoid those distressing consequences, which often follow from politic measures. But none are such dangerous confederates, as apostates.—Success cannot reasonably be expected by those, who act in defiance of the Divine commands: they may be “strong for the battle,” or for the business; but, if God is pleased to make them fall, their strength will avail them nothing; for he has power to help, and to cast down: and if men prosper in presumptuous wickedness, their success is the prelude of their ruin.—Convinced sinners, who have not true faith, or a spiritual mind, always object to self-denying obedience: and seem to say, “But, what shall we do for the hundred talents?” “What shall we do, if, by hallowing the sabbath, we lose so many good customers? What shall we do, if we quit this illegal traffic and exorbitant profit, to compensate so important a loss? What shall we do, if we affront our friends, balk our preferment, or lose the friendship of the world? How shall we maintain our families? “What shall we eat? or what shall we drink? or wherewithal shall we be clothed?” Penury and distress face us in the way which you point out to us: we are almost persuaded it is the road to heaven; but what shall we do about the expenses of the journey? Here many stumble and turn aside, or endeavour to quiet their conscience in a vain pretence, that such and such practices are necessary in their case; that the precept must be dispensed with; that by them, circumstanced as they are, both God and Mammon may be served; and that they may be Christ's disciples without “denying themselves, taking up the cross, and forsaking all for him.” But the answer to such objections is obvious: “The Lord is able to give thee much more than this,” and he hath promised to “add all other things” to those, “who seek first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness:” yea, to make up a hundred-fold, even in this present world, all that hath been conscientiously renounced for his sake and the gospel: and we are compassed about with an innumerable cloud of witnesses of his faithfulness to this promise. Unbelief, however, will trust the Lord no further, than it can understand in what way he will fulfil his word: but faith approves the security, and gives him full credit for his truth, power, and love; and makes every sacrifice, and ventures every consequence, in dependence on his word, and in obedience to his command. He, who in this way is reduced to poverty, is enriched for ever; and he may set down his largest losses as his most certain gains, assured that “no good thing will the Lord withhold from those, who thus walk uprightly.”—Yet, a single instance of self-denying obedience, performed on a sudden, under some vehement impression, does not always prove that a man has true faith. A person, on a sudden emotion, might cut off his hand, in any cause, and upon reflection repent of it ever after: but, the deliberate daily renouncing of the world, and opposing our strongest sinful inclinations, (though as painful to part with as a right hand, or a right eye,) for the sake of the gospel, and in obedience to the Saviour, forms the constant evidence of an interest in him, and all his precious promises, (Notes, Phil. iii. 7—10;) and to some measure of this temper and conduct every true believer hath attained. But, the behaviour of the mere professor will frequently detect the hypocrisy of his obedience in some instances, and justify God in punishing his other crimes, by the very consequences of that obedience.

V. 11—28. They, who are evidently and consciously irreligious, are yet often much offended with being treated as such; an affronted pride, united with disappointed rapacity, kindles a resentment, from which the most fatal effects may be expected.—Abused mercies occasion man's most aggravated wickedness, and accelerate his ruin: so that, when we are prospered by Providence, we should be peculiarly careful what return we make for God's goodness, and what use we make of his bounty.—“The tender mercies of the wicked are cruel;” and none are so imperious and inhuman towards those who oppose their will, as they who dare to bid defiance to the authority of the Almighty.—The absurdities of superstition and idolatry, to which the human race has in all ages shewn so strange a propensity, are as disgraceful to the understanding as to the heart: and if we did but consider how unavailing those worldly objects, which we are apt to idolize, have always proved, to the peace, safety, and happiness of their possessors; the reflection must check our eager pursuit of wealth, honour, or sensual pleasure; or at least shew them to be as irrational, as the worship of useless helpless idols.—They, who are mad upon their lusts, will not bear control or counsel: and he, who would expostulate with them for their good, may expect to be treated as impertinent, intermeddling, or insolent: especially, if an inferior venture to admonish, in the name of the Lord, sinners of superior rank and station. These, indeed, seem generally to claim it as their prerogative, to walk unmolested in the broad way that leadeth to destruction; and ridicule, or menaces, will be the recompense of him, who dares to warn them that it is a dangerous road. But, after all the contempt and obloquy, to which such counsellors are exposed, the event demonstrates that princes generally hearken to those that are much worse: and, though assuming churchmen have often disgraced their profession; yet, no man, from the throne to the almshouse, will have cause to repent attending to the warnings, instructions, and counsel, of the few, who honestly declare the truth and will of God, without courting the favour, fearing the frown, or respecting the person, of any man. If, however, mild, serious, rational, and scriptural reproof is proudly rejected and resented, we are not required further to urge our admonitions, but must desist, by plainly giving men to understand the consequence.—When the remonstrances of conscience are silenced, and the ministers of God are rejected and menaced, it is to be feared that he hath determined upon the sinner's destruction: and if he also says, “Let him alone,” “My Spirit shall not always strive with him;” he will be given up to strong delusion, to increasing vain-confidence, inflated projects, rash intermeddling, and obstinate perseverance in a course of folly, till the measure of his wickedness is filled up, and “destruction from the Almighty” comes upon him. Thus a man's pride shall bring him low; his ruin may be dated from his turning away from the Lord; and the longer he is spared, the more will he “treasure up wrath against the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God, who shall render to every man according to his works.” May the Lord preserve us from this dreadful doom, and prepare our hearts to receive his truth, to welcome his counsels and reproofs, and obediently to submit to his authority, and do his will!

NOTES.

CHAP. XXVI. V. 1—3. (Notes, 2 Kings xiv. 21, 22. xv. 1—7.)

V. 4. Uzziah, or Azariah, began his reign much better than he ended it, as Amaziah had done. But he seems to have supported the worship of God all his days; and he is never charged with idolatry, or any kind of immorality. (Notes, xxv. 14—16. 2 Kings xiv. 3, 4.) His reign must therefore have been very happy for his people, and favourable to the interests of religion; though the close of it proved disgraceful to himself.

V. 5. It is not known of what tribe, or family, this Zechariah was; though some conjecture, that he was the son of that Zechariah whom Joash murdered. This, however, would be a singular instance in Scripture, of a son called by his father's name.—He was perhaps endued with a peculiar gift in distinguishing between those who were actually favoured with prophetic visions, and those who only pretended to be so. (1 Cor. xii. 10.) At least he was well acquainted with divine things, an intelligent, prudent, pious, and heavenly-minded man; and an instructor, or counsellor, to Uzziah, who prospered by hearkening to his admonitions: whilst Amaziah, who had scorned to be counselled by a prophet, followed advice which brought him to destruction. (Notes, xxv. 14—24.) Had Zechariah been spared, he might perhaps have dissuaded Uzziah from that fatal attempt, which he afterwards made. (Note, 16—23.)

V. 6—9. These verses contain some particulars, in which Uzziah, by the special help and blessing of God, was prospered, while he adhered strictly to the worship of God according to the law.—In the days of his father, the wall of Jerusalem had been broken down “to the corner-gate;” (xxv. 23;) and Uzziah not only repaired it, but added towers and fortifications to secure it.

V. 10. Towers. These towers seem to have been built in the desert, for the 11 ¶ Moreover Uzziah had an host of fighting men, that went out to war by bands, according to the number of their account, by the hand of Jeiel the scribe, and Maseiah the ruler, under the hand of Hananiah, one of the king's captains.

12 The whole number of the chief of the fathers of the mighty men of valour were two thousand and six hundred.

13 And under their hand was an army, three hundred thousand and seven thousand and five hundred, that made war with mighty power, to help the king against the enemy.

14 And Uzziah prepared for them throughout all the host, shields, and spears, and helmets, and habergeons, and bows, and slings to cast stones.

15 And he made in Jerusalem engines, invented by cunning men, to be on the towers, and upon the bulwarks, to shoot arrows and great stones withal: and his name spread far abroad; for he was marvellously helped till he was strong.

16 ¶ But when he was strong, his heart was lifted up to his destruction; for he transgressed against the Lord his God, and went into the temple of the Lord to burn incense upon the altar of incense.

17 And Azariah the priest went in after him, and with him fourscore priests of the Lord, that were valiant men;

18 And they withstood Uzziah the king, and said protection of Uzziah's shepherds and flocks, from the depredations of the Arabian freebooters and others, upon whom he seems to have retaliated. (11.)—A prince can hardly have a more rational, inoffensive, and indeed useful, recreation from public business, than these rural occupations. (Notes, 1 Kings iv. 7—19. 1 Chr. xxvii. 25—31.)

V. 10—15. (Notes, xiv. 6—8. xvii. 13—19. xxv. 5. Marg. Ref.)

V. 16—23. Uzziah had been remarkably prospered in every thing; but pride, instead of gratitude, was fostered by it: so that, deeming himself at least as much favoured as the priests were, he thought it a reproach to him to be excluded from any part of the temple or the worship of God.—Burning incense was the most honourable part of the sacerdotal office, and of that he became ambitious. (Note, Lev. x. 1, 2.) The law had forbidden any, but the priests of the family of Aaron, to enter the sanctuary, or to burn incense; and the fate of Korah and his company, was an awful example upon record, of the consequences to be expected from violating that statute. (Notes, Num. xvi. xvii.) But, perhaps, Uzziah was tempted to disbelieve these ancient records; imagining that they had been falsified by the priests to keep up their own consequence; or that the law was now become obsolete: and he might be confirmed in this, by considering that nothing of the kind had taken place for many centuries. Thus "his heart was lifted up to his destruction;" his crime exposed him to eternal destruction; as well as present death; and though he was respited, yet his remaining days were spent, as it were, in a lingering ignominious execution.—None of the former kings of Judah had attempted to burn incense in the temple; perhaps, none to invade the sacerdotal office in any way: though many of them had offended by forsaking the worship of God. Had Uzziah contented himself with imitating David, Solomon, Jehoshaphat, &c., in instructing, and praying with and for his people, he would have done commendably.—The idolatrous kings indeed burned incense to their idols, and it seems he took them for his pattern in this instance, though he would not forsake the God of Israel. (Note, 1 Kings xiii. 1.)—Azariah and the other priests behaved nobly on this occasion: they opposed the king's design, not with violence or reproachful language, but with plain scriptural remonstrances, precepts, and counsels; and by warning him, that his attempt would expose him to disgrace from the Lord God. (Note, 1 Chr. vi. 4—15.) But, he was insensible to their arguments, and enraged by their faithful opposition: and Josephus writes, that he threatened them with death, when an extraordinary earthquake preceded his being smitten with leprosy. (Notes, Amos i. 1. Zech. xiv. 5.) But, however that might be, when he found that this divine judgment was inflicted upon him, and was conspicuous in his forehead, he became sensible of his sin and danger, and hastily yielded to the priests, who hurried him out of the sanctuary. It pleased God to continue this stigma upon him during the remainder of his life, though we know not how long he lived afterwards: and, in consequence, he was excluded from the precincts of the temple: from society, except that of the priests into whose office he had intruded; and from the exercise of his regal authority. Thus, by aspiring after that honour which did not belong to him, he lost all his dignity and reputation, and was, in some sense, degraded beneath the meanest of his subjects: and even after his death, notwithstanding his good and prosperous reign, he was, as a leper, excluded from the sepulchres of the kings.—But the long-suffering of God gave him space for repentance: and his patient and quiet submission to this severe rebuke, and to all its most painful consequences, (as they must have been to so honourable and prosperous a monarch,) forms no inconsiderable proof of his repentance; and gives a confidence that his retirement was well improved, and his death happy.

unto him, It appertaineth not unto thee, Uzziah, to burn incense unto the LORD, but to the priests the sons of Aaron, that are consecrated to burn incense: go out of the sanctuary; for thou hast trespassed; neither shall it be for thine honour from the LORD God.

19 Then Uzziah was wroth, and had a censer in his hand to burn incense; and while he was wroth with the priests, the leprosy even rose up in his forehead, before the priests in the house of the LORD, from beside the incense-altar.

20 And Azariah the chief priest, and all the priests, looked upon him, and, behold, he was leprous in his forehead, and they thrust him out from thence; yea, himself hastened also to go out, because the LORD had smitten him.

21 And Uzziah the king was a leper unto the day of his death, and dwelt in a several house, being a leper; for he was cut off from the house of the LORD: and Jotham his son was over the king's house, judging the people of the land.

22 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Uzziah, first and last, did Isaiah the prophet, the son of Amoz, write.

23 So Uzziah slept with his fathers, and they buried him with his fathers in the field of the burial which belonged to the kings; for they said, He is a leper: and Jotham his son reigned in his stead.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—15. Wise and pious instructors are an invaluable treasure to young people; especially to those who are advanced to exalted stations, and who are generally poisoned with the flattery of interested sycophants and dependents. Yet, unless they seek and serve God from an inward principle of piety; they will at length lose, or shake off, their preceptors and their religion together.—Many have experienced, and some have confessed, that, when they paid regard to the service of God, they prospered; but that every thing went wrong, from the time they grew negligent in religion. Indeed, external prosperity does not now so uniformly attend godliness, as it did in the case of Israel; yet, every undertaking will succeed with the true Christian, as far as it is good for him; and God will help and prosper him in his spiritual warfare, in proportion to the simplicity of his dependence and obedience.—No lawful business will be worse managed, or prove less pleasant to any man, on account of his diligence in the service of God, if he have learned to arrange his temporal and spiritual concerns in due order.—It would be happy for mankind, if able and powerful monarchs took more delight, and spent more leisure hours, in rural occupations, which are manly, useful, and truly honourable: but hitherto man's chief ambition, exertion, and ingenuity have been directed to the destruction of his own species! If, however, it must be a part of his occupation to invent and forge instruments of destruction, and of shortening the already contracted duration of human life; surely these should be used only in self-defence, or in awing the turbulent spirits of those public depredators, who cannot otherwise be prevented from disturbing the world!

V. 16—23. It is written as with a sunbeam, that prosperity is most dangerous to fallen man. Some are "lifted up" by it "to their destruction," others to their deep disgrace and lasting distress: and we have all more cause to pray to be preserved from its fascinating influence, than from the depth of poverty, or from the anguish of disappointment.—The narrow way is one and straight; but the paths of transgression are numerous and various; and new ones are continually struck out, by the perverse ingenuity and presumption of rebellious man. Extremes are on every side. To avoid enthusiasm and credulity, men become profane and infidel; and, in shunning infidelity, they rush into superstition. They, who are not chargeable with immorality or gross profaneness, may yet provoke the Lord by their hypocrisy or self-righteous pride. We are not indeed, at present, kept at that awful distance from sacred things which God's people formerly were: yet let us not suppose that we are in no danger of offending in this way. The sacred ministry may be intruded into with a presumption and impiety, bordering upon sacrilege and blasphemy; whilst mercenary and ungodly men make those professions, engagements, and protestations, in the presence of God, for filthy lucre's sake, which they deride as enthusiastic or superstitious! The Lord's table may be approached in hypocrisy, pride, unbelief, and impenitency, or even as a step to preferment, by infidels and debauchees who are the slaves to every lust! and in many ways men may be guilty of most awful profanations. Against these abuses the ministers of God must caution all persons, however wealthy, honourable, or powerful, with plain declarations of the truths and precepts of Scripture, and solemn warnings respecting the consequences of transgression. Yet, alas! few are found who are valiant men, that dare, in meekness and faithfulness, oppose the powerful who attempt such scandalous profanations; and venture all the consequences of their displeasure in refusing to concur in them. But the Lord will assuredly stand by those few, and mark their opposers with evident tokens of his anger.—No wonder that ungodly men are so enraged at opposition from the ministers of God; for even believers at some times cannot endure it. But his rebuke brings them to

CHAP. XXVIII.

Ahaz reigns very wickedly. 1-4. He is defeated with vast slaughter by the kings of Syria and Israel. 5-7. The Israelites lead to Samaria an immense number of captives. 8. The people are induced, by the remonstrance of a prophet, and the interference of the princes, to treat them kindly and send them home. 9-15. Ahaz, attacked by the Edomites and Philistines, sends to the king of Assyria, but receives no benefit from his assistance. 16-21. In his distress he adds to his idolatries, 22-25. He dies, and is succeeded by Hezekiah, 26, 27.

AHAZ was twenty years old when he began to reign; and he reigned sixteen years in Jerusalem: but he did not that which was right in the sight of the LORD, like David his father.

2 For ^ahe walked in the ways of the kings of Israel, and made also ^bmolten images for ^cBaalim.

3 Moreover he ^dburnt incense in ^ethe valley of the son of Hinnom, and ^fburnt his children in the fire, ^gafter the abominations of the heathen, whom the LORD had cast out before the children of Israel.

4 He ^hsacrificed also, and burnt incense in the high places, and on the hills, and under every green tree.

5 Wherefore the LORD ⁱhis God ^jdelivered him into the hand of the king of Syria; and they smote him, and carried away a great multitude of them captives, and brought ^kthem to ^lDamascus; and he was also delivered into the hand of the king of Israel, who smote him with a great slaughter.

6 ¶ For ^mPekah the son of Remaliah slew in Judah ⁿan hundred and twenty thousand in one day, ^owhich were all ^pvaliant men: ^qbecause they had forsaken the LORD God of their fathers.

7 And Zichri, a mighty man of Ephraim, slew Maaseiah the king's son, and Azrikam the governor of the house, and Elkanah ^rthat was ^snext to the king.

8 And the children of Israel ^tcarried away captive of their ^ubrethren, two hundred thousand, women, sons, and daughters, and took also away much spoil from them, and brought the spoil to Samaria.

themselves, and they then make haste to renounce their wayward purposes; submit patiently to his severest corrections; and are humbled for the pride of their hearts. And, whatever humiliating or disgraceful events take place; however we may be excluded from the earthly courts of the Lord, 'the communion of his saints,' and the comforts of society; if we are brought to true repentance, and at length obtain eternal life, we shall bless God for the whole. But the Lord always resists the proud; and contempt, either on earth or in hell, is the never-failing consequence of self-confidence and arrogance. When, however, the Lord sees good to throw prosperous and useful men aside, as a broken vessel; if he raises up their children, or other able persons, to fill their places, that the community be not losers; they may rejoice in renouncing all worldly concerns, and in employing the remnant of their days in preparing for death and heaven.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXVII. V. 1, 2. (Marg. Ref.) Entered. (2.) Jotham imitated his father in the best part of his conduct; but did not attempt to enter the temple, or to burn incense, as Uzziah had done. (Notes, xxvi. 4. 16-23.)

V. 3. Ophel. This seems to have been a cliff, or high rock, where a tower and wall were built, to fortify the city. These Jotham greatly strengthened and improved.

V. 5. (Marg. Ref.) It is probable that at the end of three years, the Ammonites recovered strength, and refused to pay the tribute.

V. 6. It has been observed, that most, if not all, the pious kings of Judah, have some evil thing laid to their charge: but Jotham has not; except as "the people did corruptly," and the high places were not demolished.

V. 7. It is supposed, that Jotham's deeds so attracted attention, that they were recorded in the chronicles of Israel, as well as in those of Judah: though but little has been transmitted to us concerning him.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The severest judgments of God have mercy connected with them, either to the persons themselves, or to others, who thence learn caution and circumspection.—It ought to be the constant aim of every one of us, to imitate the faith, piety, equity, kindness, self-denial, patience, and meekness, of those servants of God with whom we have acquaintance; and carefully to avoid their failings, and the sins into which they have been betrayed: but the reverse of this is general, and natural to mankind.—If we would attain to eminency in godliness, or usefulness, we must diligently "prepare our ways before the Lord our God;" acting habitually as under his inspection, and depending on his assistance and merciful acceptance, from love to his name and zeal for his glory.—Many pious men have not fortitude or vigour to combat the difficulties, which must be expected by those, who attempt reformation, in opposition to inveterate prejudices, errors, superstitions, and immoralities; yet, all in public stations should remember, that this is incumbent upon them, and forms that improvement of their talents, which God requires. They should therefore "arise, and be doing," according to the duties of their situations, "and the Lord will be with them for good."—But even when the most unexceptionable example is united to the most strenuous and persevering endeavours, the success of pious reformers will not answer their desires and expectations. Many of the people will still do corruptly: and, in righteous displeasure against those, who hate to be reformed, the Lord often prematurely removes wise, prosperous, and pious rulers in church or state; and sends others, whose follies and vices severely punish a people, who did not value their mercies till they were withdrawn from them.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXVIII. V. 1-4 (Notes, 2 Kings xvi. 1-4. Matt. v. 21, 22. Marg. Ref.)

V. 5. The Lord was 'the God of Ahaz,' as his creator, upholder, and governor; as Ahaz was born among God's professing and covenant-people, dedicated to him by circumcision, and educated in a religious manner; as he reigned over Judah, where alone the worship of God was instituted; and as he was bound by every obligation to serve and obey him. But he was not 'the God of Ahaz,' as he is the God of true believers, according to the covenant of grace; he was not Ahaz's portion and salvation: nor was Ahaz the Lord's servant and worshipper, for he was a vile apostate and idolater. In short, he had not the privilege of having "the Lord for his God," his shield, and exceeding great reward; but he had the guilt of violating the strongest obligations to his service; and of continuing impenitent and ungodly, in the midst of every advantage and means of grace. Had he been born and educated a heathen, he might perhaps have escaped remarkable judgments: but, as he was an apostate, "the Lord his God" delivered him, to be punished, into the hands of the Syrians and Israelites. (Notes, 2 Kings xvi. 5-9.) His people also were involved in the same guilt, and in the same punishment. They did corruptly under pious Jotham: for their correction Jotham was removed, and wicked Ahaz succeeded; and his idolatry and enormous crimes were punished by dreadful havoc made among his subjects. Thus, the sins and sufferings of kings and people resemble the case of the human body; in which the head must share the sufferings of the members, and the members those of the head, by reason of that unity which subsists between them. (Note, 2 Sam. xxiv. 1, 2. P. O. 1-9.)

V. 6-8. This is the greatest slaughter of the men of Judah that we read of. (xlii. 17.) And, as they were all valiant men, and Israel was not in a very prosperous state, it must be ascribed to some supernatural terror, or confusion. Ahaz escaped the massacre; but he had a son, and two of his chief officers, slain, one of whom was next under him in authority; and an immense spoil, and a vast number of prisoners, were collected from the defenceless country by the rapacious victors: it does not appear, however, that Jerusalem was taken by them. (Notes, Is. vii. 1-9.)

V. 9-11. The Lord, provoked with Judah's idolatries, had delivered them into the hands of their still more idolatrous brethren, who had shewn the most exorbitant rage and cruelty in destroying them; and, as if this had been a small thing, they proceeded to gratify their inhuman avarice, by seizing all the name was Oded; and he went out before the host that came to Samaria, and said unto them, Behold, because the LORD God of your fathers was wroth with Judah, he hath delivered them into your hand, and ye have slain them in a rage that reacheth up unto heaven.

10 And now ye purpose to keep under the children of Judah and Jerusalem for bondmen and bondwomen unto you: but are there not with you, even with you, sins against the LORD your God?

11 Now hear me therefore, and deliver the captives again, which ye have taken captive of your brethren: for the fierce wrath of the LORD is upon you.

12 Then certain of the heads of the children of Ephraim, Azariah the son of Johanan, Berechiah the son of Meshillemoth, and Jehizkiah the son of Shallum, and Amasa the son of Hadlai, stood up against them that came from the war, 13 And said unto them, Ye shall not bring in the captives hither: for whereas we have offended against the LORD already, ye intend to add more to our sins and to our trespass: for our trespass is great, and there is fierce wrath against Israel.

14 So the armed men left the captives and the spoil before the princes and all the congregation.

women and children, to sell them, or to keep them for slaves. But if the Lord had so severely punished their offending brethren of Judah, could the men of Israel expect to escape his fierce indignation? Were there no sins among them, to provoke his displeasure? Rather, were they not already sufficient, without augmenting them by this iniquitous and cruel treatment of the women and children, who had never injured them? Or, could they hope for the mercy of God, if they neither shewed mercy nor justice to their brethren? They were therefore required to set the captives at liberty; because they themselves were exposed to the fierce wrath of God. This was the Lord's message to the conquerors by his prophet; and it naturally leads us to consider some questions concerning slavery.—Let it then be remembered, that there do not at present subsist any such distinctions between nations, as God for wise reasons was pleased, for a time, to establish between Israel and the Gentiles; but every man is now our neighbour, and in one sense our brother; our fellow-man, if not our fellow-Christian.—Perhaps they attempt too much who argue that slavery, in all cases, is contrary to scriptural principles; and this has given its advocates some advantage in the controversy. But no man, well acquainted with the word of God, needs fear to maintain that the modern slave-trade stands in diametrical opposition to both the law and the gospel, as well as to the true interests of mankind. Who can possibly hold his unoffending brother in bondage for his own gain, without violating the rule of doing to others, as he would that they should do unto him? and as he might fairly expect that they should do unto him? (Note, Matt. vii. 12.) Suppose that an African should kidnap the son of an English merchant, carry him to Africa, and, pretending property in him, should sell him for a slave; and so he should be sold from one to another for life, and his children after him. Suppose that Africans gave such prices for Englishmen as encouraged them to steal and sell one another, till it became a regular trade; would not free-born Britons execrate buyers, sellers, stealers, and all concerned in such a traffic? They who have forfeited their lives by crimes against the state, have also forfeited their natural right to liberty, and might justly be sold for slaves, by public authority, declaring the crimes for which they were thus punished. Some other criminals, and some kind of fraudulent debtors, might be sold for a limited time, consistently with equity. Perhaps, some prisoners taken in battle in those wars which are evidently undertaken, by all concerned, in avarice and cruelty, might thus be punished, without transgressing the law of God; for the policy of it forms quite a distinct question. But to seize, enslave, and sell a fellow-creature, who has by no criminality known to us, or cognizable by us, merited so severe a treatment, must, in all cases, be contrary to the law of "loving our neighbour as ourselves." The poor Africans cannot be proved to be either criminals, debtors, or prisoners taken in rapacious or revengeful wars: but they appear generally to be persons who have been kidnapped from their relatives, or bought of them; or taken prisoners in wars, excited on purpose to supply that infamous market. If any of them be criminals, the European merchants know it not: they have no authority from either God or man to be their executioners; and their descendants certainly are not criminals. Were it indeed true, that if not bought by the Europeans, they would be slain by the conquerors, we need only answer, "You must not do evil, that good may come." "If you have no other way of rescuing them, you had better leave them to fight their own battles, and treat their captives as they please, without interfering; and you certainly would do so, if avarice were no more concerned in the business than humanity is." It is true that the Scripture throughout speaks of slavery as actually existing; but the judicial law was very distinct from the moral law, as hath before been shewn. (Note, Ex. xxi. 1—6.) Like other municipal laws, it aimed to prevent those evils which originated from abuses and human passions, and which could not be terminated except by con-

15 And the men which were expressed by name rose up, and took the captives, and with the spoil clothed all that were naked among them, and arrayed them, and shod them, and gave them to eat and to drink, and anointed them, and carried all the feeble of them upon asses, and brought them to Jericho, the city of palm-trees, to their brethren: then they returned to Samaria.

16 ¶ At that time did king Ahaz send unto the kings of Assyria to help him.

17 For again the Edomites had come and smitten Judah, and carried away captives.

18 The Philistines also had invaded the cities of the low country, and of the south of Judah, and had taken Beth-shemesh, and Ajalon, and Gederoth, and Shochu with the villages thereof, and Timnah with the villages thereof, Gimzo also and the villages thereof: and they dwelt there.

19 For the LORD brought Judah low, because of Ahaz king of Israel; for he made Judah naked, and transgressed sore against the LORD.

20 And Tiglath-pileser king of Assyria came unto him, and distressed him, but strengthened him not.

21 For Ahaz took away a portion out of the house of the LORD, and out of the house of the king, and of stant miracle, as in the case of divorces. The apostles and evangelists were preachers, not legislators; they were not empowered to subvert the foundations of civil government throughout the world; and they found slavery, universally and inseparably, interwoven with them. Every one must therefore perceive what confusion, what reproach, and what additional enmity to Christianity, must have been occasioned by such an attempt. They, indeed, laid down the principles, which, when reduced to practice, will infallibly annihilate slavery; and, taking things as they then stood in civil society, they taught all Christians how to accommodate themselves to their stations, consistently with their profession, even if they were slaves, and slaves in a heathen family.—The question is, therefore, to be decided, not by facts, but by the Moral Law of God, and the tendency of the Gospel. The practice could not then be regularly opposed, without creating convulsions in society; nor can it ever be successfully rectified by preachers; it is the work of enlightened, humane, and pious legislators.—Individual believers under both dispensations possessed slaves; they took matters as they were, and treated their slaves with such equity and humanity, as rendered it a kindness to them to take them out of ungodly families. And a pious West Indian, who laments the enormities which he cannot but witness, arising from this unnatural trade, and who sincerely wishes and prays for its entire abolition, may, in the mean time, deem it better quietly to set his neighbours an example of treating slaves with brotherly lenity and kindness, conducive to their real happiness, than indiscriminately to liberate them; when, perhaps, it might occasion fatal effects upon the minds of the other planters, and their slaves, if this were done by an individual, in opposition to all his neighbours, and without the interference of legal authority. When strangers are brought so far from home, and are not able to return, a truly pious and humane man may render the yoke tolerable to them. But, who had a right, by compulsion, to bring his unoffending brethren so far from their native land? And what proportion do pious and humane persons, in most communities, bear to those of an opposite character? A succession of very wise and good kings, if that could be ensured, might render even absolute government a blessing. But, whilst mankind are what they are, men of reflection, and lovers of their brethren, will never be friends to despotism in kingdoms, or in families; and absolute monarchs and slave-holders will ever be justly exposed to the determined opposition of mankind, even when they do not merit detestation by any abuse of power.

V. 12—15. It is remarkable that Pekah is not mentioned in this transaction concerning the prisoners; but, probably, he was at the head of the army, when the prophet addressed them. (6.)—The courage of these princes, who ventured to oppose the whole army, insolent with victory, and enriched with booty, was admirable and commendable, and their arguments were cogent, and coincided with the message of the prophet. The apostasy, idolatry, and recent cruelty of Israel, rendered their trespass very great; and if they reduced the captives to slavery, it would add more to their sins, and hasten the execution of the fierce wrath of God upon them.—The compliance of the army in leaving both the captives and the spoil to the disposal of the princes, was very wonderful; and the humane treatment, and the carrying back of the captives to their brethren, deserves all possible applause.—The prophet's remonstrance had for the time its full effect: but, alas! both princes and people still cleaved to their idols, and went on in their other sins. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 16—18. Before the time of Pul, we read nothing of the Assyrian monarchy, which grew by degrees to its greatness from small beginnings. If their large empire had been of long standing, we should in all probability have heard of them before this time, as we do often afterwards. (Bp. Patrick. Note, 2 Kings xv. 19, 20.)

V. 19. Naked. The Lord himself was the glory and defence of Judah; but Ahaz, by seducing his subjects from his worship and service, had degraded the princes, and gave it unto the king of Assyria: but he helped him not.

22 ¶ And in the time of his distress did he trespass yet more against the LORD: ^bthis is that king Ahaz.

23 For ^che sacrificed unto the gods of ^dDamascus, which smote him; and he said, ^e"Because the gods of the kings of Syria help them, ^ftherefore will I ^g'sacrifice to them, that they may help me. But ^hthey were the ruin of him, and of all Israel.

24 And Ahaz gathered together the vessels of the house of God, and ⁱcut in pieces the vessels of the house of God, and ^jshut up the doors of the house of the LORD; and ^khe made him altars in every corner of Jerusalem.

25 And in every several city of Judah he made high places to ^lburn incense unto other gods, and provoked to anger the LORD God of his fathers.

26 ¶ Now ^mthe rest of his acts, and of all his ways, first and last, behold, they are written in the book of the kings of Judah and Israel.

27 And Ahaz slept with his fathers, and they buried him in the city, ⁿeven in Jerusalem: but ^othey brought him not into the sepulchres of the kings of Israel: and Hezekiah his son reigned in his stead.

CHAP. XXIX.

Hezekiah reigns well, opens the doors of the temple, and exhorts the priests and Levites to prepare every thing for the worship of God, 1-11. They sanctify themselves, and cleanse the temple, 12-19. Hezekiah offers solemn sacrifices; and the Levites shew more zeal than the priests, 20-34.

HEZEKIAH began to reign when he was five and twenty years old, and he reigned nine and twenty years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Abijah, the daughter of ^aZechariah.

2 And he ^bdid that which was right in the sight of the LORD, according to all that David his father had done.

3 ¶ He, ^cin the first year of his reign, in the first month, ^dopened the doors of the house of the LORD, and repaired them.

4 And he brought in the priests and the Levites, and gathered them together into the ^eeast-street,

5 And said unto them, ^fHear me, ye Levites; Sanctify now yourselves, and ^gsanctify the house of the LORD God of your fathers, and carry forth the filthiness out of the holy place.

6 For ^hour fathers have trespassed, and done that which was evil in the eyes of the LORD our God, and ⁱhave forsaken him, and have ^jturned away their faces from the habitation of the LORD, and ^kturned their backs.

them, stripped them of all their ornament, deprived them of all their protection, and left them defenceless and contemptible in the hands of their feeblest enemies. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 20, 21. (Note, 2 Kings xvi. 7-9.)

V. 22, 23. This, &c. 'This is that notorious offender, who grew more outrageous in his idolatry and impiety, amidst his distresses! That abandoned prince, who disgraced the house of David, and accelerated the ruin of Judah! who foolishly sacrificed to the gods of his enemies, supposing that they had smitten him; instead of humbling himself before the Lord, who had used the Syrians as his instruments for his correction! that Ahaz, who acted in a manner which tended to ruin himself, his family, and his kingdom; and persevered in it so obstinately, that he provoked the Lord to cut him off by a premature death, in the full career of his wickedness!' (Note, xxv. 14-16).

V. 24-27. (Notes, xxi. 18-20. xxix. 3-7. 2 Kings xvi. 12-20.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-8. They, who succeed eminently wise and pious men in the same important station, seldom enter into their views or imitate their conduct, in "doing that which is right in the sight of the Lord;" nay, frequently they seem ambitious of being as opposite to them as possible; especially when they run into wickedness, after having received a pious education. (Note, 2 Kings xxi. 3.)—When sinners "like not to retain God in their knowledge," he gives them up to the lusts of their own hearts, to perpetrate every thing horrible and unnatural: and if such monsters of iniquity are advanced to thrones, the Lord intends by them to punish a guilty land, by involving their subjects in the consequences of their crimes and follies. They, therefore, who are groaning under the oppression of cruel tyrants, or suffering from the effects of their infatuated counsels, are called on to humble themselves before God for their own sins, to submit to his justice, and to seek deliverance from his mercy. On the other hand, if we are governed with equity and clemency, and live in peace and prosperity, through the prudent and successful administration of our rulers, we should bless God for his mercies, and shew forth our gratitude in our daily conduct: and it is the constant duty of us all to pray for those who are, or shall be placed over us, that they may be the instruments of God's goodness to us, and not of his wrath.—Tempters and examples of iniquity are often employed as scourges; and the sentence, which God righteously denounces, man may unrighteously execute.—It is a lamentable reflection, that so many thousands of lives are sacrificed to the mad passions of potent individuals, who themselves escape: but they that thus are cut off, are sinners, and are punished for having forsaken or offended God.—The combined effects of several depraved passions is very dreadful: when revenge is satiated, avarice or ambition may take the reins; and if power be not wanting, the widow, the orphan, the stranger, and the helpless, will be oppressed, crushed, and enslaved without redress; while the oppressor will rejoice in growing rich by these detestable measures. But, the Lord beholds and disapproves: and in one way or another, he will plead or avenge the cause of the oppressed.

V. 9-27. It is happy, when the authority of God's word, or the expostulations of his ministers, deter men from persisting in mercenary cruelties; or excite legislators and princes to put a stop to such iniquity. If the oppressed have provoked God, to deliver them up into the hand of their oppressors; should not these remember, that "there are with them also sins against the Lord?" Even rigorous justice towards an offending brother, is a grievous offence, in one that only lives and hopes through the mercy of God. (Notes, Matt. xviii. 23-35.) But for such persons to injure and cruelly treat their unoffending brethren, must "add exceedingly to the fierce wrath of the Lord that is upon them." If "he shall have judgment without mercy, who hath shewed no mercy;" what will be his doom, who hath been guilty of the most flagrant injustice to the inoffensive stranger, merely because he had it in his power to oppress him! Surely, in such a case, whilst the ministers of the gospel, warn, exhort, and beseech the oppressors to deliver the captives up, whom they have taken of their brethren: the legislators and rulers of every state should peremptorily refuse admission into their dominions, to those bond-slaves, whom men have so unjustly reduced under their subjection. For we have offended against the Lord already, and this connivance will add still more to our sin and to our trespass, till fierce wrath come upon the nation. Nay, if the poor captives, who have been violently torn from their native country, and who have no power to return to their beloved relatives, could, when dismissed and kindly treated, be carried back again to them, it would be a conduct becoming the disciples of Christ; it might tend to render the name of Christian respectable in those distant regions, where the cruelty, treachery, and avarice of those who bear it, have rendered it odious; and thus at length prepare the way for the propagation of the gospel among these poor benighted heathens. And, instead of injuring the interests of the community, or of any individuals, (except the most atrocious of the oppressors, who have no right to be considered;) we may venture, upon general scriptural principles, to foretell, that, above all other measures, it would tend the most effectually to the lengthening of our tranquillity and prosperity. (Note, Dan. ix. 27.)—But if they, who commiserate their oppressed fellow-creatures, long to see their grievous servitude terminated, they must unite in prayer for the Divine blessing upon the exertions of those, who honourably stand forth in this benevolent cause. For, except the Lord touch the hearts of those who are to decide upon it, every exertion will be in vain.—When sinners are left to their own hearts' lusts, they grow more and more callous, and desperate in wickedness; and trespass yet more and more in their distress, as if in defiance of God; seeking redress in their miseries, from those sins whence all their sufferings spring, and which will terminate in their ruin, and that of all who adhere to them. For when God casts down, none can raise up; and all helpers will increase distress, instead of affording deliverance.—The progress of wickedness and misery is often rapid; and it is awful to reflect upon a sinner's being "driven away in his wickedness," into the eternal world. (Note, Prov. xiv. 32.) Yet, this apparent severity of God against the ringleaders in iniquity, proves mercy to thousands, when righteous and useful persons are raised up in their stead.

V. 3-5. It seems that the public worship at the temple was entirely suppressed and prohibited, during the latter years of king Ahaz. (7.) The only reason advanced for a contrary opinion, is this: it is not said, that the sacred fire on the altar of burnt-offering was extinguished, or that it was rekindled by fire from heaven, as at the dedication of the temple. If, however, the service was not totally put a stop to, the people in general were shut out from attending.—Hezekiah must have witnessed this impiety of his father, with deep regret and indignation: but immediately upon his succession to the throne, he threw open the doors of the temple, and proceeded to re-establish the worship there, as in the days of David. Yet the priests and Levites delayed to do their duty, till excited to it by the king. Perhaps Urijah was still the high priest; (Note, 2 Kings xvi. 10-16;) the chief priests were infected with idolatry, and disaffected to the service of God; and their inferiors, even if well disposed, might be held back by the authority of the leading men, till authorized by Hezekiah.—Sanctify, &c. (5.)

Personal repentance, and purification from legal and moral defilements, were requisite in the priests and Levites, before they could according to order proceed to purify the temple. (Marg. Ref.)—Much rubbish, dirt, and rust would be contracted, through disuse and neglect, in the temple, the courts, and the sacred vessels: but the idolatry with which they had been polluted, and the altar, made after the model of one which Ahaz saw at Damascus, formed by far the worst filthiness from which they needed to be cleansed. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 6, 7. Our fathers, &c. (xxviii. 24.) When the honour of God was concerned, Hezekiah did not hesitate to criminate those who had gone before. He

7 Also "they have shut up the doors of the porch, and put out the lamps, and have not burned incense, nor offered burnt-offerings in the holy place unto the God of Israel.

8 "Wherefore the wrath of the LORD was upon Judah and Jerusalem, and he hath delivered them to 'trouble, 'to astonishment, and to hissing, as ye see with your eyes.

9 For, lo, 'our fathers have fallen by the sword, and our sons and our daughters and our wives are in captivity for this.

10 Now 'it is in mine heart 'to make a covenant with the LORD God of Israel, 'that his fierce wrath may turn away from us.

11 My sons, be not now 'negligent: for 'the LORD hath chosen you to stand before him, to serve him, and that ye should minister unto him, and 'burn incense.

12 ¶ Then the Levites arose, Mahath the son of Amasai, and Joel the son of Azariah, of the sons of the 'Kohathites: and 'of the sons of Merari: Kish the son of Abdi, and Azariah the son of Jehalelel: and 'of the Gershonites; Joah the son of Zimmah, and Eden the son of Joah:

13 And of the sons of 'Elizaphan; Shimri, and Jeiel: and of the sons of 'Asaph; Zechariah, and Mattaniah:

14 And of the sons of 'Heman; Jehiel, and Shimei: and of the sons of 'Jeduthun; Shemaiah, and Uzziel.

15 And they gathered their brethren, and 'sanctified themselves, and came, according to the commandment of the king, 'by the words of the LORD, 'to cleanse the house of the LORD.

16 And the priests went into 'the inner part of the house of the LORD, to cleanse it, and brought out 'all the uncleanness that they found in the temple of the LORD, into the court of the house of the LORD. And the Levites took it, to carry it out abroad into the brook 'Kidron.

17 Now they began on the first day of the first month to sanctify, and on the eighth day of the month came they to 'the porch of the LORD: so they sanctified the house of the LORD in eight days: and in 'the sixteenth day of the first month they made an end.

18 Then they went in to Hezekiah the king, and said, We have cleansed all the house of the LORD, and 'the altar of burnt-offering, with all the vessels thereof, and 'the shew-bread table, with all the vessels thereof.

did not directly mention Ahaz, his father, because that was not needful; and the neglect and base compliances of the priests and Levites, had greatly contributed to the wickedness of the king and his nobles. (Notes, Matt. x. 37—39. 2 Cor. v. 16. 1 Pet. i. P. O. 17—21.)

V. 8, 9. The defeat and dreadful slaughter recorded in the foregoing chapter seem here referred to, as the effect of some extraordinary terror from God on the minds of the Jews; and the Edomites and Philistines had been successful, because God had employed them as the weapons of his indignation. (Note, xxviii. 6—8. 16—19.)

V. 10, 11. (Notes, 2 Sam. vii. 1, 2. 1 Kings viii. 15—21. 1 Chr. xxviii. 2.)—Hezekiah attempted to prevail with the priests and Levites to attend to their duty, by argument and affectionate exhortation, and not by compulsion. This condescending address assured them of his readiness to support and protect them, as a father would do his obedient children. He warned them, not to be deceived, (so some render the word,) for God would certainly call them to a strict account, if they neglected the work to which he had chosen them: or he exhorted them not to be remiss, when extraordinary exertions were become absolutely necessary.

V. 12—19. (Marg. Ref.) All these leaders in the work were Levites; not the chief in rank, but the most eminent for zeal and diligence. The high priest is not mentioned. Some of the other priests concurred, and cleansed the inside of the sanctuary, whither the Levites might not enter.—When the ark was to be removed, and on other necessary occasions, the priests might enter the holy of holies, though not at other times. (Note, Num. iv. 5.)—Ahaz died about the close of the year; and Hezekiah had given timely orders to the priests and Levites, for them to begin this work with the new year.

g Ez. xxxv. 29. Matt. xxiii. 27.

h xv. 16. 2 Kings xxiii. 4—6. John xviii. 1. Cedron.

19 Moreover, "all the vessels, which king Ahaz in his reign did cast away in his transgression, have we prepared and sanctified; and, behold, they are before the altar of the LORD.

20 ¶ Then Hezekiah the king "rose early, and gathered the rulers of the city, and went up to the house of the LORD.

21 And they brought "seven bullocks, and seven rams, and seven lambs, and seven he-goats, for "a sin-offering for the kingdom, and for the sanctuary, and for Judah. And he commanded the priests the sons of Aaron to offer them on the altar of the LORD.

22 So they killed the bullocks, and the priests received the blood, and "sprinkled it on the altar: likewise, when they had killed the rams, they sprinkled the blood upon the altar: they killed also the lambs, and they sprinkled the blood upon the altar.

23 And they brought "forth the he-goats for the sin-offering before the king and the congregation: and "they laid their hands upon them:

24 And the priests killed them, and they made "reconciliation with their blood upon the altar, to make an atonement for all Israel: for the king commanded that the burnt-offering and "the sin-offering should be made for all Israel.

25 And "he set the Levites in the house of the LORD with cymbals, with psalteries, and with harps, "according to the commandment of David, and of "Gad the king's seer, and "Nathan the prophet: "for so was the commandment 'of the LORD by his prophets.

26 And the Levites stood with "the instruments of David, and "the priests with the trumpets.

27 And Hezekiah commanded to offer the burnt-offering upon the altar. And "when the burnt-offering began, "the song of the LORD began also with the trumpets, and with "the instruments ordained by David king of Israel.

28 And "all the congregation worshipped, and "the singers sang, and the trumpeters sounded: and all this continued until the burnt-offering was finished.

29 And when they had made an end of offering, the king and all that were "present with him "bowed themselves and worshipped.

30 Moreover, Hezekiah the king and the princes commanded the Levites to sing praise unto the LORD, "with the words of David, and of Asaph the seer. And "they sang praises with gladness, and they bowed their heads and worshipped.

V. 20. Perhaps Hezekiah arose earlier on that day than common, that he might set the people an example of earnestness in the service of God. He would not lose a day, nor an hour, after the temple was ready, before he opened the solemn worship of God, by sin-offerings and other sacrifices. (Notes, Ps. cxix. 57—63. Matt. vi. 33, 34.)

V. 21—24. (Note, Lev. i. 5—9. Marg. Ref.)—One bullock was appointed for a sin-offering for the whole congregation; but on this extraordinary occasion, when so many and great enormities had been committed, multiplied atoning sacrifices were offered. (Note, Lev. iv. 13—21.) The ceremony of the king, and the congregation, laying their hands upon the head of the goats, expressed their confession of guilt, and the substitution of the guiltless animal to suffer in their stead; which prefigured Him "who bare our sins in his own body on the tree." (Note, Lev. i. 4.)—The word here rendered he-goats, is not used in scripture till after the captivity, and learned men think that this is one proof that Ezra compiled these books.—The burnt-offering, and the sin-offerings were presented, not only in behalf of the kingdom of Judah, but for all Israel, even the ten tribes, which were at this time governed by Hoshea. Hezekiah seems in this to have had respect to the plan which he afterwards proposed, and which is recorded in the ensuing chapter; namely, of uniting the whole nation of Israel in celebrating the passover, and in the worship of God.

V. 25—30. The temple-psalmody was regulated with the concurrence of these other prophets, as well as by the appointment of David. (Notes, vi. 11—13. xxi. 13. Num. x. 1—10. 1 Chr. ix. 22. xv. 16. xvi. 4—6. xxv. 1—8. Ezra iii. 8—11. Ps. xlii. 2, 3. lxxxi. 1—5. xcv. 1—6. cl.)

V. 31, 32. As the burnt sacrifices were wholly consumed on the altar, the 31 Then Hezekiah answered, and said, Now ye have [†]consecrated yourselves unto the LORD, come near, and bring [†]sacrifices and [†]thank-offerings into the house of the LORD. And the congregation brought in sacrifices, and thank-offerings; and [†]as many as were of a free heart, burnt-offerings.

32 And [†]the number of the burnt-offerings, which the congregation brought, was threescore and ten bullocks, an hundred rams, and two hundred lambs: all these were for a burnt-offering to the LORD.

33 And the [†]consecrated things were six hundred oxen, and three thousand sheep.

34 But [†]the priests were too few, so that they could not flay all the burnt-offerings: wherefore [†]their brethren the Levites [†]did help them, till the work was ended, and until the [†]other priests had sanctified themselves: [†]for the Levites were more [†]upright in heart to sanctify themselves than the priests.

35 And also [†]the burnt-offerings were in abundance, with [†]the fat of the peace-offerings, and [†]the drink-offerings for every burnt-offering. [†]So the service of the house of the LORD was set in order.

offering of them evinced greater zeal and liberality, than the oblation of peace-offerings, a great part of which was eaten by the offerer and his friends. (Notes, Lev. i. iii.)—Comparing the sacrifices offered on this occasion, with those of Solomon when the temple was dedicated; (though here it is said the burnt-offerings were in abundance;) we may form some idea, how greatly the riches and prosperity of the kingdom of Judah were diminished; or, how greatly the general spirit of piety had declined. (vii. 5—10. xxx. 24.)

V. 33. It is probable, that the consecrated things denote the peace-offerings and thank-offerings.

V. 34. The priests, &c. It does not appear that any idolatrous priests were punished: but perhaps some were disgraced and excluded from attendance; whilst many neglected to sanctify themselves, being averse to the sacred service. It was therefore deemed more proper, that upright and duly sanctified Levites should flay the sacrifices, than unclean or profane priests. This is considered by many as irregular, but it is no where prohibited. Indeed, before the Levites were given to the sons of Aaron, it is probable, that they, who brought the sacrifice, both slaughtered and flayed it; (Note, Lev. i. 5—9:) but afterwards these services seem to have formed a part of the ministry assigned to the Levites, at the will of the priests: but at length it became customary for the priests to perform them. The Levites might not in any case sprinkle the blood, burn the fat and flesh, or approach the altar.

V. 36. The great and sudden change produced in the conduct of the people; and the alacrity with which they concurred in measures, to which much opposition had been expected, evidence that God had prepared them: and Hezekiah and all the people rejoiced in it, as a token that he would prosper them in endeavouring a more complete reformation. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—19. The removal of a single individual of very bad character, from any public situation, and the succession of a wise and pious person in his stead, may be productive of most important and extensive good consequences: for, authority, influence, and example, give such efficacy to the attempts of princes and nobles, that the consequences of their conduct are beyond calculation. What an honour is it to be employed, in diffusing piety and felicity through whole kingdoms! But how dreadful will be the condemnation of those, who spread guilt and misery in so extensive a manner!—Whether a godly man inherit a kingdom, or an estate; whether he change his station in society or his place of abode, or be removed to a new situation in the church, his first actions will be of considerable importance, and often leave an abiding impression: and regulations may frequently be then made without difficulty, before different habits and expectations have been formed, which would afterward become almost impracticable.—Even in that nation, in which God had appointed that apostates and idolaters should be punished with death, the most effectual revivals of true religion were produced by example, exhortation, and encouragement: and if it were in the hearts of kings and rulers, thus to join themselves in covenant with the Lord, and zealously to stir up all orders of people to do their duty, by earnest persuasions and affectionate expostulations, without using violence, or imposing on men's consciences; many would be excited willingly to concur in their pious designs, and to “come according to the commandment of the king, by the words of the Lord.” (Note, xxx. 12.) Happy and honourable they will be, who shall thus become “nursing fathers” to the church, not by bribes and preferments, but by countenancing those, who zealously labour to promote acknowledged truth and practical godliness, even though not all exactly in the same way!

V. 20—36. The nominal ministers of religion have, in all ages, been lamentably backward, in labouring, and venturing to promote the cause of God: and the higher their dignities, and the greater their emoluments, the more evident, sometimes, has been their aversion to the work of the ministry. Too generally indeed the infidelity and impiety of all orders in the community are justly chargeable upon the vices, the supineness, or the insufficiency, of the stated ministers. Instead of exhorting all others to do their duty, no exhortations have been found effectual, to induce them to attend to their own: nay, they have often been found disposed to over-awe and browbeat their inferior brethren, CHAP. XXX.

Hezekiah proclaims a solemn passover to be kept in the second month, and calls both Judah and Israel to unite in celebrating it, 1—5. His message to them, and the reception with which it met, 6—12. A great multitude, having destroyed the altars for idolatry in Jerusalem, prepare to keep the feast, 13—16. Hezekiah prays for those who are not ceremonially clean, and is graciously answered, 17—20. They keep the feast fourteen days with great joy, 21—26. The priests bless the people, 27.

AND Hezekiah sent [†]to all Israel and Judah, and wrote letters [†]also to Ephraim and Manasseh, that they should come [†]to the house of the LORD at Jerusalem, [†]to keep the passover unto the LORD God of Israel.

2 For [†]the king had taken counsel, and his princes, and all the congregation in Jerusalem, to keep the passover [†]in the second month.

3 For they could not keep it [†]at that time, [†]because the priests had not sanctified themselves sufficiently, neither had the people gathered themselves together to Jerusalem.

4 And the thing [†]pleased the king and all the congregation.

who were willing to “labour in the word and doctrine,” and to supply their lack of service, that immortal souls might not perish for want of instruction. But if the honour of a parent is not to be regarded, where the glory of God is concerned, such clergymen must not expect to be treated with respect, when the very existence of true religion is at stake: and the reputation of the clerical function must be supported by the holy lives, superior knowledge in divine things, and unwearied labours of the clergy; or else it must sink into neglect and contempt. The true minister of Christ, however, should take heed first to himself, and then to his ministry. His own conscience, heart, and life must first be purified, by repentance, and faith in the Divine Saviour; and then he may hope to prosper in endeavouring to convert others also, and to promote the pure and spiritual worship of God.—In all reformation, personal or public, we must first be convinced, in what particulars we have done wrong, and then consider how we may do better. Neglect of God and omission of duty lead to more direct impiety and iniquity; and our own transgressions prepare us to become tempters and seducers of others. Thus religion is run down, and the wrath of the Lord comes on apostate professors of the gospel, and on apostate nations. In returning to him, therefore, we must renounce our sins, and begin to practise neglected duties, to use the means of grace, and to watch against the wickedness of the heart. We, indeed, have no occasion for multiplied sacrifices; as the one atonement of Christ is sufficient for all who rely on it: but we need repeated confessions of guilt, constant humiliation before God, and application to the Saviour's blood, for forgiveness and acceptance: we need to maintain daily communion with our reconciled Father through Christ, and to receive continual communications from him: and we should present our spiritual sacrifices of praise and thanksgiving, and devote our time, talents, and substance, yea, our bodies and souls, with a free heart, as sacrifices acceptable to the Father through the Redeemer's name. To these things we are encouraged by the joyful sound of his gospel: when we abound in these sacred exercises, according to the commandment of the holy prophets and apostles of Christ, we shall be enabled, though in ourselves most miserable sinners, to rejoice in the Lord, and to glory in his salvation. Those ministers, who are most diligent in preparing for their work, and in performing it, will eventually be most employed and honoured, even though inferior in external distinctions; and slothful disqualification will never excuse any man's negligence before God. But he alone can prepare the heart of man for vital godliness: when much real good is effected in a little time, the glory must be ascribed to him; and all who love him, or the souls of men, will rejoice. If we would have such blessings, we must make it our constant prayer to him, thus to prepare our hearts and those of others; for when he works, great things may suddenly be effected. The Lord grant, that none called ministers may be negligent; but that they may all act as chosen by him, to stand before him, and to serve him; and zealously do his will, that his wrath may be turned from them, and from others on every side, by his blessing upon their labours!

NOTES.

CHAP. XXX. V. 1. The other tribes of Israel were as much bound to obey the law of Moses, as Judah and Benjamin were; but Hezekiah had no authority over them. Yet, the circumstances, in which they were placed, encouraged him to address them by letters, with an amicable and pious invitation; which implied, that they might attend at the temple with perfect safety, though they were not his subjects. (Notes, 1 Kings xii. 26—29. 2 Kings xviii. 9, 10.)—Ephraim and Manasseh, as principal tribes, seem to be put for the whole kingdom of Israel.

V. 4—4. Hezekiah and his counsellors justly concluded, that the regulation of the fourteenth day of the second month, which had been made for individuals, who were hindered from eating the passover at the appointed season, might, in their present circumstances, be extended to the whole congregation. (Notes, Num. ix. 6—14.)—A sufficient number of the priests had not been duly sanctified, to prepare the temple for that ordinance at the stated time, or to officiate in it; the people, long disused from attendance, were not generally assembled; they, who were present, seemed well disposed to celebrate that solemn and significant ordinance: and it might have an abiding good effect, if

5 So they established a decree^k to make proclamation throughout all Israel, 'from Beer-sheba even to Dan, that they should come to keep the passover unto the LORD God of Israel at Jerusalem: "for they had not done it of a long time in such sort as it was written.

6 So the posts went with the letters from the king and his princes, throughout all Israel and Judah, and according to the commandment of the king, saying, Ye children of Israel, turn again unto the LORD God of Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, and he will return to the remnant of you, that are escaped out of the hand of the kings of Assyria.

7 And be not ye ^{as}like your fathers, and like your brethren, which trespassed against the LORD God of their fathers, who therefore gave them up to desolation, ^{as} ye see.

8 Now, ¹be ye not stiff-necked as your fathers were, but ²yield yourselves unto the LORD, and ³enter into his sanctuary, ⁴which he hath sanctified for ever: and ⁵serve the LORD your God, that ⁶the fierceness of his wrath may turn away from you.

9 For if ye turn again unto the LORD, your brethren and your children shall find compassion before them that lead them captive, ^{so} that they shall come again into this land: for ^athe LORD your God is gracious and merciful, and ^bwill not ^cturn away his face from you, if ye return unto him.

10 So ⁴the posts passed from city to city through the country of Ephraim and Manasseh, even unto Zebulun: but ⁵they laughed them to scorn, and mocked them.

11 Nevertheless, 'divers of Asher, and Manasseh, the favourable opportunity were seized. (Notes, xxxv. 1—19. Ex. xii. 3—37.) For these reasons, it was determined to summon the people to attend, and to keep the passover in the second month.

V. 5. As it was written. It is probable, that the passover and the other solemn feasts were sometimes totally omitted for several years together; at other times very carelessly attended, and by very few persons, compared with what the law required: and the ten tribes had never been accustomed to repair to Jerusalem, since the division of the kingdom. (Notes, xi. 1 Kings xii. 26—32.)

V. 6—9. Hoshea was king of Israel at this time, and it does not appear that he attempted to hinder his subjects from resorting to Jerusalem to worship, if they chose it. (Note, 2 Kings xvii. 2.)—In the preceding reign, Israel had made a dreadful slaughter of the men of Judah; yet, Hezekiah considered the Israelites as brethren, and greatly desired to bring them back, by kind treatment, to the religion of their fathers; therefore he sent his proclamation, or letters, into the parts of the land belonging to the ten tribes, as well as through out his own dominions.—The word rendered “posts” signifies runners: for men were then, and still are in many places, trained, and kept on purpose, to convey despatches speedily by running.—Even then, the Israelites were but a remnant, which had escaped from the ravages of Pul and Tiglath-pileser: and far heavier judgments awaited them for their apostasy and idolatry; which could not be averted, except by turning again to the God of their fathers. Hezekiah, however, most affectionately and plainly, cautioned them, not to copy the crimes of their fathers and brethren, whose miseries they had witnessed: he warned them not to be “stiff-necked,” or, obstinate in rebellion. (Note, Deut. x. 16.) and he exhorted them to “yield themselves unto the Lord;” that is, to yield the victory to him, to submit to his authority, to lay down their rebellious arms, to implore mercy, and to become his servants. (Note, Rom. vi. 12, 13.) He intreated them also to “enter into his sanctuary, which he had sanctified for ever” that is, to renounce their idolatries and self-invented worship, and to resort with their sacrifices to the temple at Jerusalem, and there to keep the solemn feasts.—The temple was not only the centre of God’s worship, and the pledge of his gracious presence with his people; but likewise the type of those spiritual blessings, which are from everlasting to everlasting upon all true believers.—Hezekiah also encouraged those whom he addressed, to hope, from the mercy and grace of God to the penitent, that if thus they turned to him, the fierceness of his wrath would be turned away from them; and that they might expect the restoration of their brethren and children, who were already in captivity; for God, having all hearts in his hand, could and would make the enemies of those who pleased him to be at peace with them, and to shew them compassion. In this, he evidently referred to the promises contained in the books of Moses. (Marg. Ref.)—It is observable, that these letters carefully avoided all mention of the claim of David’s family to dominion over all Israel; and of former injuries and quarrels, or whatever could give any shadow of offence, either to the prince or his subjects, except in the immediate concerns of religion.

V. 10, 11. The nation of Israel was almost ripe for destruction ; and it is by no means wonderful, that most of them insulted and mocked the messengers, who conveyed these invitations : indeed we may rather wonder, that they met with no harsher treatment. Some, however, out of the several tribes were prevailed on ; and, humbling themselves for former sins, resorted to Jerusalem ; so that, Hezekiah's pious design was not ineffectual, though not so successful as he had wished it to be.

V. 12. The language of this verse is entitled to special attention. "The commandment of the king and his princes, by the word of the LORD," must be with ready and general obedience from the men of Judah; because "the hand of God was to give them one heart to do it." If the rulers had commanded anything contrary to the word of the LORD, or beyond it, in affairs of religion, it would have been a misapplication of their authority: but, as they required nothing but what God had expressly enjoined, they duly improved their talent; and the people, by the grace of God, knew and performed their duty.—It does not appear, to me at least, that Christianity has at all altered the duty either of rulers or subjects in this respect.

V. 13. The emphatical language here used fully proves, that the concourse of people to celebrate this passover, was exceedingly great, compared with all other instances with which the writer was acquainted. (Note, xxxv. 18.)

V. 14. The people assembled at Jerusalem some days before the passover ; and they employed the intermediate time, in clearing the city of altars for idolatry, and from other abominations. This was an excellent preparation for the solemn ordinance, which they were about to celebrate. (Notes, 2 Kings xxiii. 4—23)

V. 15. The zeal and earnestness of the king, the princes, and the people in general, made the priests and Levites ashamed of their supineness, and stirred them up to prepare themselves, and attend on their work. "The hand of God" was in this also, or they would have been the more irritated. (Notes, xii. Matt. xxi. 14—16. 23—27.)

V. 16—20. (Marg. Ref.) Either the Levites, or the offerers, might receive the blood of the victims; but the priests alone might sprinkle it.—It is evident from this passage, that in ordinary cases, the persons who brought the paschal lambs slew them; or this exception would not have been stated: and it is at least probable, that the case was at first the same with other sacrifices. (Notes, xxix. 34. Lev. i. 5—9.)—But many of the ten tribes, having come at a short warning, and being destitute of instruction, were ceremonially unclean, and therefore not regularly prepared to eat the passover. (Notes, Num. ix. 6—19.) But it would have greatly discouraged them, had they been excluded from that sacred ordinance, to which they had been invited: they appeared sincere and earnest in returning to the Lord, and there was a prospect of important usefulness. They were therefore allowed to eat the passover, when the Levites had killed it for them, notwithstanding their ceremonial disqualification: and Hezekiah, sensible that there was danger in this deviation, earnestly prayed to the good and merciful LORD, “to pardon every one that prepared his heart to seek—the LORD,—though not cleansed according to the purification of the congregation a thousand bullocks, and seven thousand sheep: and the princes gave to the congregation a thousand bullocks, and ten thousand sheep: and a great number of priests sanctified themselves.

25 And all the congregation of Judah, with the priests and the Levites, and all the congregation that came out of Israel, and the strangers that came out of the land of Israel, and that dwelt in Judah, rejoiced.

26 So there was great joy in Jerusalem: for since the time of Solomon the son of David king of Israel, there was not the like in Jerusalem.

27 ¶ Then the priests the Levites arose, and blessed the people: and their voice was heard, and their prayer came up to his holy dwelling place, even unto heaven.

sanctuary." (Marg. Ref.) To this prayer the Lord granted a favourable answer, "and healed the people." Perhaps he had visited them with some sickness for their irregular attendance, which he then graciously healed. (Note, 1 Cor. xi. 29-34.) Or, he gave peace to their consciences, and healed their souls.

V. 21, 22. The sacrifices, psalmody, and supplications of the people, were accompanied by the reading and expounding of the law: some of the Levites were thus employed in instructing the people, in the good, the profitable, and pleasant knowledge of the Lord: (Note, 1 Chr. xxviii. 9.) and the king peculiarly noticed and encouraged them in this useful work, which was very much wanted. (Notes, xv. 2-6. xvii. 7-9. Deut. xxxi. 10-13. Ezra vi. 6-10. Neh. viii. 1-9, ix. 1-3. xlii. 1-3.) This would excite others to apply themselves to the study of the law, that they too might be qualified for this service.—By "making confession," may be meant, either confessing their sins, or acknowledging the unmerited goodness of the Lord.

V. 23-25. (Marg. Ref. Note, xxix. 31, 32.) This passover must have been nearly about the time of harvest: but the hearts of the people were so enlarged with holy affections, that they were neither weary of the sacred service, nor in haste to return to their secular business. (Notes, Ex. xxiii. 14-18. Lev. xxiii. 10-21. Deut. xvi. 9. 1 Kings viii. 63-65.)

V. 26, 27. The observance of this passover, and the solemnities that attended it, were crowned with a peculiar blessing: many of the priests and people were brought to a serious sense of religion, and an important revival was introduced among them; even superior to any, that had taken place since the days of Solomon. (Note, 1 Kings viii. 61.)—As this occurred in the first year of Hezekiah's reign, and he reigned twenty-nine years, we may be sure that he witnessed the effects of so good a beginning, to the end of his life. It was done suddenly, but, by the grace of God, it was done effectually.—Doubtless, the passovers and other solemn feasts were kept up, and attended to, during this reign, though not in so remarkable a manner, as this first passover.—Arose, &c. (27.) This seems to have closed the solemnity, in a most suitable and impressive manner; and the fervent prayer of the priests was heard and accepted. (Notes, Num. vi. 23-27.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-12. Favourable opportunities of fixing good impressions ought by no means to be neglected: and it is better that circumstantial irregularities should be admitted, than that divine ordinances should not be observed, or substantial usefulness prevented.—When duties have been long omitted, the time ought to be more carefully redeemed, that no further delays may be occasioned: former negligence, though it cannot be excused, may be forgiven; but persevering ungodliness will infallibly end in destruction.—We ought to embrace every proper opportunity of addressing men upon their eternal concerns, and of engaging as many as possible in the service of God: and we may employ arguments and persuasions with those, over whom we claim authority. Injuries or enmities, however many or great, should not render us indifferent about the salvation of any man: no expense or labour ought to be regarded in our endeavours to do good: nor should we be discouraged by the prospect of the neglect, contempt, or even rage, of the very persons, whose happiness we are seeking. Numbers may, and will, "laugh us to scorn:" but several will be humbled and benefited; and perhaps, where success was least expected, where impiety and profligacy were most notorious, and among those who appeared ripe for destruction. Such attempts should be made in plainness, meekness, and affection; all reproaches and upbraidings, and every thing assuming or needlessly offensive, should be avoided; important and undeniable truths and duties should chiefly be insisted upon; and the conscience and passions, especially hope and fear, should be vigorously addressed. The consequences of continuing in sin, and of returning to God, should be contrasted; and the whole enforced, by arguments deduced from fact and experience. Addresses to this effect are peculiarly seasonable, while men are suffering for their crimes; and still deeper miseries present themselves to their view, from which they have no prospect of deliverance, but by the merciful interposition of God. And when, among their acquaintance and relatives, the prosperity of eminently pious persons can be compared with the misery of those who are notoriously profligate; the argument thence deduced, for repentance and returning to God, will have peculiar energy. For even the irreligious must see the absurdity of copying the wicked examples of fathers or brethren, who have been evidently ruined by their vices. But the rich mercy of God forms the grand argument, by which to enforce repentance on the sinner's conscience. There is forgiveness with him, and plenteous redemption in the Saviour's blood; and we are under a dispensation of mercy. Nothing but stiff-necked, obstinate, impenitent wickedness can ruin us. The vilest of sinners, "who yield themselves to the LORD," shall certainly be saved. Let therefore sinners trust in his mercy, attend upon his ordinances, and join themselves to his people, that they may serve him; and then the fierceness of his wrath will turn away from them; but not otherwise. To this "we should exhort one another daily, lest any of us be hardened, through the deceitfulness of sin:" to this we may invite and persuade the chief of sinners; for "him that cometh to the Saviour," "he will in no wise cast out;" but "will grant" unto all who believe in him, "that being delivered from the hand of their enemies, they may serve him without fear, in righteousness and true holiness, before him, all the days of their life;" and the covenant made with them will prove for the good of their children and brethren also.—Oh! that messengers were sent forth to carry these invitations to every city and village, through every land!—It is true, the Lord alone can render them effectual; but he works by the word of his ministers, and also by the commandment of kings and princes.—Faith comes by hearing; and true religion hath uniformly flourished, in proportion to the measure in which faithful scriptural preaching hath abounded. In general, persons of wealth or authority might be instrumental in promoting this faithful preaching of the word of God, if they had the inclination, and were willing to bear the expense of it: nor can superior rank enjoy a higher privilege. All who are employed in such a work, should do it with their might; and neither be discouraged, nor exasperated, by opposition or reproach; and they will find that "their labour was not in vain in the Lord."

V. 13-27. When we are humbled for our transgressions, and declare war against all our idols, expecting and seeking forgiveness and salvation only through the atonement of Christ, we become welcome guests at the Lord's table. The unhumiliated and impenitent indeed; the man who lives in known sin, and he who comes 'trusting in his own righteousness, instead of God's manifold and great mercies,' may presume to commemorate the death of Christ; but he is an intruder, who comes to the marriage-feast without the wedding-garment. (Note, Matt. xxii. 11-14.) Yet when the sinner has indeed begun to prepare his heart to seek the Lord; though his views be feeble, obscure, and in many things erroneous, and his approach be not exactly regular; he must not be discouraged, despised, or treated with harshness. Our blessed Advocate, who "breaketh not the bruised reed," will intercede for him; we too ought to pray for and encourage him, and "the good Lord" will pardon every one who bears this character. No trembling believer, therefore, who desires to trust in the Redeemer, and to shew his gratitude by obeying his plain command, needs to be alarmed, lest he should fail in that exactness, which he supposes is required in this ordinance: for the good Lord lays no snares in the way of humble upright enquirers.—Previous preparation is indeed profitable; but the true believer is habitually ready, and ought not to retire for want of actual preparation. Yet every defect is sin, and needs forgiveness; and should be matter of humiliation, though not of discouragement. (1 Cor. xi. P. O. 23-34.)—Man's authority cannot disannul or alter divinely instituted externals, in the worship of God: yet these may be idolized; and the Lord will, on some occasions, approve the conduct of those, who prefer the spirit to the letter of an instituted observance, where both cannot possibly be attained; and who seize an opportunity of glorifying him, in seeking the conversion and salvation of souls, by postponing, or relaxing in, the exact observance of an external regulation. Much allowance should be made for those, who are newly brought forth out of very ignorant places; yet, they must not be left in their mistakes. The ministers of God must diligently "teach them the good knowledge of the Lord," of his perfections, mysteries, ordinances, and precepts, that they may proceed with increasing understanding and alacrity. They, who labour in this important work, should be encouraged and counselled by all that are able; for it is very arduous, and brings a man into many perplexities.—When the chief of sinners humble themselves before God, they may in due time expect great gladness in his ordinances. Their confessions of sin will be made pleasant by the hope of forgiveness, and by that peace and joy which are the sweet fruits of the sanctifying Spirit. They, who taste this happiness in the worship of God, will not speedily grow weary of it, but will be glad to prolong the delightful employment, and must be, as it were, torn away, to return to their secular occupations.—When the ignorant, the mean, and the profligate, as well as those of superior stations, become earnest in God's service, Pharisees will either be exasperated or ashamed: and it is happy for themselves, and for others, when they are at length brought to true repentance and fall in with, and help forward, the work of God in their several places. And if numbers of ministers, that have been ungodly and mercenary, become obedient to the faith, we may be sure, that God is powerfully at work, and has much more to do. (Note, Acts vi. 7.)—True godliness will be attended with proportionable joy; and numbers met together, to whom the Lord hath given one heart to delight in his ordinances,

CHAP. XXXI.

The people destroy the idols, and their temples and altars, throughout Judah and Israel. 1. Hezekiah orders the courses of the priests and Levites, and provides for their maintenance, as well as for their stated sacrifices, 2-4. The people readily bring their first-fruits and tithes, 5-10. Hezekiah appoints officers to dispose of these oblations, 11-19. A high commendation of his zeal and integrity, 20, 21.

NOW "when all this was finished, ^aall Israel that were ^bpresent went out to the cities of Judah, and ^cbrake the ^dimages in pieces, and cut down the groves, and threw down the high places and the altars, out of all Judah and Benjamin, ^ein Ephraim also and Manasseh, ^funtil they had utterly destroyed them all. Then all the children of Israel returned, every man to his possession, into their own cities.

2 ¶ And Hezekiah appointed ^gthe courses of the priests, and the Levites after their courses, every man according to his service, the priests and Levites for burnt-offerings, and for peace-offerings, to minister, and ^hto give thanks, and to praise in the gates of the tents of the LORD.

3 He appointed also ⁱthe king's portion of his substance for the burnt-offerings, ^jto wit, ^kfor the morning and evening burnt-offerings, and ^lthe burnt-offerings for the sabbaths, and ^mfor the new-moons, and for ⁿthe set feasts, as ^oit is written in the law of the LORD.

4 Moreover he commanded the people, that dwell in Jerusalem, to give ^pthe portion of the priests and the Levites, ^qthat they might be encouraged in ^rthe law of the LORD.

5 ¶ And ^sas soon as the commandment ^tcame abroad, the children of Israel brought in abundance ^uthe first-fruits of corn, wine, and oil, and ^vhoney, and of all the increase of the field; and the tithe of all ^wthings brought they in abundantly.

6 And concerning ^xthe children of Israel and Judah, that dwell in the cities of Judah, they also brought in ^ythe tithe of oxen and sheep, and the tithe of holy things which were consecrated unto the LORD their God, and laid ^zthem by ^{aa}heaps.

7 In ^{ab}the third month they began to lay the foundation of the heaps, and finished ^{ac}them in the seventh month.

8 And when Hezekiah and the princes came and saw the heaps, they ^{ad}blessed the LORD, ^{ae}and his people Israel.

will share and augment each other's rejoicing. But, such seasons on earth are transient: trials and conflicts await us after our choicest consolations; yet these are beneficial to us.—The benedictions and prayers of the Lord's ministers, by which the people are dismissed from solemn ordinances, are not to be slighted: though spoken on earth, they are heard in heaven, the holy dwelling place of our reconciled God. The intercession of our great High Priest, however, is chiefly to be valued: he never fails to plead for every believer, and he never pleads in vain. A few more interruptions of our joy, by conflicts and temptations, (whilst in him we still have peace,) and we shall soon be with him to behold his glory: then, our worship, our love, and rejoicing, will be uninterrupted, unalloyed, and eternal.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXI. V. 1. (Note, xxx. 14.) Either this destruction of the appendages of idolatry in Israel was confined to those cities and villages, which had come under the dominion of the kings of Judah, or to those places whence the Israelites came, who resorted to Jerusalem to keep the passover: or else, Hoshea not objecting to it, the people, in their zeal for the honour of the God of Israel, went through the whole land, for this purpose; whilst the idolaters were intimidated from making any opposition. (Notes, xxxiv. 3-7, 2 Kings xxiii. 15-20.) When this was done, they returned home: and it is probable that some of the Israelites, who had been at the feast, retired into the land of Judah, during the ravages of Salmanser, and so escaped the general ruin.

V. 2. (Marg. Ref. Note, xxiii. 18, 19.) The tents, &c. The buildings which surrounded the temple, in which the priests and Levites were stationed, resembled the tents in which soldiers are regularly encamped.

V. 3, 4. The public sacrifices were generally purchased by contributions from the people; but Hezekiah, at this time, chose to be at the expense of them out of his stated revenue; (Es. xiv. 27;) that the people might be the more ready to obey his commandment, in bringing their tithes and first-fruits, according to the law of God, for the maintenance of the priests and Levites. This was intended to encourage the priests and Levites, to apply themselves entirely to 20 ¶ And thus did Hezekiah throughout all Judah, and wrought that which was good, and right, and truth, before the LORD his God.

21 And in every work, that he began in the service of the house of God, and in the law, and in the commandments, to seek his God, ¹he did it with all his heart, and ²prospered.

CHAP. XXXII.

Sennacherib invades Judah; and Hezekiah fortifies Jerusalem, and encourages the people, 1-8. Sennacherib's blasphemous messages and letters, 9-19. Hezekiah and Isaiah pray for deliverance: an angel destroys the Assyrian army, and their king returning home is slain by his sons, 20-22. Hezekiah prospers, and is renowned, 23. In his sickness he prays, and is miraculously recovered: his heart is lifted up, but he afterwards humbly himself, 24-26. His riches and works, 27-30. His misconduct in respect of the ambassadors from the king of Babylon, 31. He dies, his memory is honoured; and Manasseh succeeds him, 32, 33.

AFTER these things, and the establishment thereof, Sennacherib king of Assyria came, and entered into Judah, and encamped against the fenced cities, and thought to win them for himself.

2 And when Hezekiah saw that Sennacherib was come, and that he was purposed to fight against Jerusalem,

3 He took counsel with his princes and his mighty of the priests and Levites, and a proportionable allowance was assigned them: as also to those, who were excluded, or excused from attendance; and for all of those who were absent from the temple, employed as magistrates and teachers, in their several districts. Thus none appropriated an exorbitant proportion, and none wanted a suitable provision: "for in their set office, they sanctified themselves in holiness;" they separated themselves from other employments, and devoted themselves to serve God in their proper office, in a holy and believing expectation that he would provide for them; (for so the words seem to mean:) nor were they disappointed. And this regular provision kept them from the temptation of entangling themselves in worldly cares, to the neglect of their ministry. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Neh. xiii. 10-13. 2 Tim. ii. 3-7.)

V. 20, 21. The conduct of Hezekiah was good in itself; he acted with equity and impartiality towards all his subjects, in these regulations; his heart was upright in the sight of God; and in all that he attempted, to establish the worship of the Lord, and to obey, and enforce the observance of his law, seeking his favour and glory, he was earnest and hearty, and single in his aim and dependence; and he was prospered accordingly. What a commendation was this, as given by God himself! what a happy instrument was this pious king, of good to his people! and what an encouraging and worthy example is this for princes, magistrates, ministers, and Christians to imitate!

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-10. The finishing of one duty should form an introduction to another; and he, who "delights greatly in God's commandments," will not complain of this as a weariness.—Public ordinances and divine consolations should stir us up to cleanse our hearts, houses, or shops, and every thing in which we are concerned, from the filthiness of sin, and the idolatry of covetousness; and to exhort and excite others to do the same, by every method, consistent with relative duties and the peace of society.—The subsequent improvement of solemn ordinances, is of the greatest importance to personal, family, and public religion. It is then our business to meditate on, and reduce to practice, what we have learned; to express our pious affections in every kind of good work; and to take care that the vigour of them do not subside, through unwatchfulness, neglect of prayer, or worldly indulgences. Inattention to these duties renders the private conversation and behaviour of most who profess the gospel, inconsistent with their public profession, and apparently religious affections: their growth in grace is thus prevented, and religion does not appear so venerable by far as it otherwise would do.—Examples should concur with exhortations or injunctions, whether men act as magistrates or ministers: and this will give them greater effect, in many cases, than menaces, coercive measures, or severe rebukes. They who would have others expend their wealth in useful works, ought to take the lead: nay, the easiest method of enforcing the laws, and prevailing with others to pay their dues, is often found to be by receding from personal claims, and joining liberality with justice, in the magistrate's own conduct.—The proper use of superior riches is, to do superior good with them: and if this were generally understood, and believed, the most blessed effects would be produced.—Every exercise of human authority in the church of God must be regulated and bounded by his law, and must enforce obedience to it, and not make additions to it, or alterations in it.—Whilst ministers ought to attend upon their proper work, in their several places; they should be encouraged in it, and not constrained or tempted to neglect it, by the want of a suitable maintenance for their families; or made uneasy and distressed in attending on it: nor should any excuse be afforded to those, who by choice leave the word of God for secular engagements.—A man is never impoverished by prudent liberality, in works of piety and charity; indeed, this is the way to ensure the blessing of God on his substance and his labours. men, ⁴to stop the waters of the fountains which were without the city: and they did help him.

4 So there was gathered much people together, who stopped all the fountains, and ⁵the brook that ran through the midst of the land, saying, Why should the kings of Assyria come, and ⁶find much water?

5 Also ⁷he strengthened himself, and built up all the wall that was broken, and raised it up to the towers, and ⁸another wall without, and repaired ⁹Millo in the city of David, and made ¹⁰darts and shields in abundance.

6 And ¹¹he set captains of war over the people, and gathered them together to him ¹²in the street of the gate of the city, and spake ¹³comfortably to them, saying,

7 Be ¹⁴strong and courageous, ¹⁵be not afraid nor dismayed for the king of Assyria, nor for all the multitude that is with him: ¹⁶for there be more with us than with him:

8 With him is ¹⁷an arm of flesh; but ¹⁸with us is the LORD our God, to help us, and ¹⁹to fight our battles. And the people ²⁰rested themselves upon the words of Hezekiah king of Judah.

portion, which is due to the ministers of religion and to the poor is conscientiously rendered to them, it shall be recompensed as if it were a free-will offering.

V. 11-21. A proper use of authority, joined with a good example and convincing arguments, will induce many to do their duty in those things, in which they before were entirely negligent; but, whatever means are used, when men abound in good works, we should bless the Lord for it: though due commendation should not be withheld from them.—Disinterestedness, impartiality, and frugality, are requisite in those who have the management of public charities, or other public funds; for when proper care is taken of the sums already contributed, and evidently expended for the sole purpose intended, encouragement is given to further contributions.—It would tend greatly to the welfare of the church, if ministers were provided for, with some degree of equality, proportioned to their diligence, their families, and their necessary expenses: and it is a shameful abuse, that funds anciently appropriated for the maintenance of the clergy, are in a great measure applied to aggrandize those who do very little for them; whilst the real labourers in the vineyard are scarcely kept from starving, and leave no provision for their families when taken from them. Legislators should rectify such abuses. But the faithful servant of God needs not to be discouraged: let him study to live and to preach according to the word of truth, and "give himself wholly" to his work; and let him do it in faith, and the Lord will not suffer him to want; yea, he will provide for his children after him. But all pious men are notable to go on comfortably in this manner; and it is a grievous thing, that their spirits should be depressed, and their hands weakened, in their work, on this account; and it is still worse, however, when they are tempted to leave their proper employment, to earn a morsel of bread for their wives and children. May the Lord raise up in every nation zealous men, who in such matters, and in all other, "will work that which is good, and right, and truth, before the Lord;" and who will do their utmost, "with all their hearts, in the service of the house of God, and in the law, and in the commandments," to seek the honour of the Lord!—Whether we have few or many talents, may we thus improve them, and encourage others to do the same: we shall then assuredly be prospered in some measure; and shall obtain that "honour that cometh from God," being graciously accosted by him with, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXII. V. 1. Most of the transactions, recorded in the preceding chapters, took place in the first year of Hezekiah's reign: and from that time he proceeded to establish and complete his reformation, without any very memorable occurrences, till his fourteenth year, in which Sennacherib's first invasion occurred. (Note, 2 Kings xviii. 13-16. Marg. Ref.)

V. 3, 4. (Marg. Ref.) The brook here mentioned, is supposed to have been Kidron, or Cedron, called also "the upper watercourse of Gihon." (36.) Through subterraneous, or concealed, channels, Hezekiah brought the waters of this rivulet into the city, to supply certain pools there formed for the use of the inhabitants. Or, by some means he turned or concealed the course of it, in order that the Assyrians might be distressed for water, if they undertook the siege of Jerusalem.—"The kings of Assyria" had, during several successions, been formidable enemies to Israel and Judah: and this measure was intended, not only for a present defence against Sennacherib, but also as a security against future sieges of him or his successors. (Note, Is. xxii. 8-14.)

V. 6-8. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 2 Kings vi. 15-17. 1 John iv. 4-6.) Rested, &c. (8.) These measures seem to have been adopted at the approach of Sennacherib's first invasion: and the people in general had a strong confidence, that the Lord would deliver them according to the word of Hezekiah; though others confided rather in their fortifications.—Yet, Hezekiah himself was afterwards send his servants to Jerusalem, (but he himself laid siege against Lachish, and all his power with him,) unto Hezekiah king of Judah, and unto all Judah that were at Jerusalem, saying,

10 Thus saith Sennacherib king of Assyria, Whereon do ye trust, that ye abide in the siege in Jerusalem?

11 Doth not Hezekiah persuade you to give over yourselves to die by famine and by thirst, saying, The LORD our God shall deliver us out of the hand of the king of Assyria?

12 Hath not the same Hezekiah taken away his high places and his altars, and commanded Judah and Jerusalem, saying, 'Ye shall worship before one altar, and burn incense upon it?

13 Know ye not what I and my fathers have done unto all the people of other lands? were the gods of the nations of those lands any ways able to deliver their lands out of mine hand?

14 Who was there among all the gods of those nations, that my fathers utterly destroyed, that could deliver his people out of mine hand, that your God should be able to deliver you out of mine hand?

15 Now therefore let not Hezekiah deceive you, nor persuade you on this manner, neither yet believe him: for no god of any nation or kingdom was able to deliver his people out of mine hand, and out of the hand of my fathers: how much less shall your God deliver you out of mine hand?

16 And his servants spake yet more against the LORD God, and against his servant Hezekiah.

17 He wrote also letters to rail on the LORD God of Israel, and to speak against him, saying, As the gods of the nations of other lands have not delivered their people out of mine hand, so shall not the God of Hezekiah deliver his people out of mine hand.

18 Then they cried with a loud voice in the Jews' speech unto the people of Jerusalem that were on the wall, to affright them, and to trouble them; that they might take the city.

19 And they spoke against the God of Jerusalem as against the gods of the people of the earth, which were the work of the hands of man.

20 And for this cause Hezekiah the king, and the prophet Isaiah the son of Amoz, prayed and cried to heaven.

21 ¶ And the LORD sent an angel, which cut off all the mighty men of valour, and the leaders and captains, in the camp of the king of Assyria: so he returned with shame of face to his own land. And when he was come into the house of his god, they induced to submit to Sennacherib, and pay him tribute; on this he departed but not long after he renewed his attempts. (Note, 2 Kings xviii. 13–16.)

V. 9–16. (Notes, 2 Kings xviii. 17–37.) How much less, &c. (13.) This haughty conqueror supposed that JEHOVAH was even inferior to the gods of the nations! Probably, he grounded this notion on the inferiority of Judah, in extent and population, to many of the kingdoms which he had subdued; especially as he was almost master of the whole land already.

V. 17–22. (2 Kings xix.—God of Jerusalem. (19.) Sennacherib called JEHOVAH "the God of Jerusalem," either because that city alone remained in the hands of his worshippers; or because Hezekiah, by abolishing the high places, seemed to have confined to Jerusalem alone, the worship of his God, which before had been spread over the land.

V. 23. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Is. ix. 4–9.)

V. 24–26. (Notes, 2 Kings xx. Is. xxxviii. xxxix.) These events are supposed, by many learned men, to have been previous to Sennacherib's first invasion, as evidently occurring in the fourteenth year of Hezekiah's reign. (Note, 2 Kings xviii. 13.)—The princes and people of Judah, as well as the king, had been very faulty: and when "he was humbled for the pride of his heart," and had received Isaiah's alarming message, it is probable he made open confession of his offence, and called upon the people to join with him in solemn that came forth of his own bowels, slew him there with the sword.

22 Thus the LORD saved Hezekiah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem from the hand of Sennacherib the king of Assyria, and from the hand of all other, and guided them on every side:

23 And many brought gifts unto the LORD to Jerusalem, and presents to Hezekiah king of Judah: so that he was magnified in the sight of all nations from thenceforth.

24 ¶ In those days Hezekiah was sick to the death, and prayed unto the LORD: and he spake unto him, and he gave him a sign.

25 But Hezekiah rendered not again according to the benefit done unto him; for his heart was lifted up: therefore there was wrath upon him, and upon Judah and Jerusalem.

26 Notwithstanding Hezekiah humbled himself for the pride of his heart, both he and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, so that the wrath of the LORD came not upon them in the days of Hezekiah.

27 ¶ And Hezekiah had exceeding much riches and honour: and he made himself treasuries for silver, and for gold, and for precious stones, and for spices, and for shields, and for all manner of pleasant jewels;

28 Storehouses also for the increase of corn, and wine, and oil; and stalls for all manner of beasts, and cotes for flocks.

29 Moreover he provided him cities, and possessions of flocks and herds in abundance: for God had given him substance very much.

30 This same Hezekiah also stopped the upper watercourse of Gihon, and brought it straight down to the west side of the city of David. And Hezekiah prospered in all his works.

31 ¶ Howbeit in the business of the ambassadors of the princes of Babylon, who sent unto him to enquire of the wonder that was done in the land, God left him to try him, that he might know all that was in his heart.

32 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Hezekiah, and his goodness, behold, they are written in the vision of Isaiah the prophet, the son of Amoz, and in the book of the kings of Judah and Israel.

33 And Hezekiah slept with his fathers, and they buried him in the chiefest of the sepulchres of the sons of David: and all Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem did him honour at his death. And Manasseh his son reigned in his stead.

humiliation and prayer on that account.—The Lord would not let Sennacherib prevail against his servant: but perhaps it was at this crisis, that Hezekiah's confidence so failed him, that he hired Sennacherib's departure, with those treasures which he had ostentatiously displayed. (Note, 2 Kings, xviii. 14–16.)—This chapter is in great measure an abridgment of those chapters in the Second of Kings, and in the prophecy of Isaiah, which are referred to.

V. 27–29. The riches, here spoken of, seem to have arisen, in great measure from the immense spoil found in the Assyrian camp. (Notes, Is. xxxiii. 1–6, 23, 24.) Storehouses, &c. (Notes, xxvi. 10. 1 Chr. xxvii. 25–31. Job. i. 3. xlii. Prov. xxvii. 23–27. Ec. v. 9–12.)

V. 30–33. (Marg. Ref. Note, 4.—2 Kings xx. 20, 21.)—The princes, &c. (31.) "The princes of Babylon sent to enquire of the wonder that had been done in the land:" but it is not certain, that the Chaldeans observed any change in the motion of the heavenly bodies. The report of the miracles which attended Hezekiah's recovery, might suffice for that purpose. Yet, in Isaiah it is said, "The sun returned," &c.—The Lord on this occasion withdrew from Hezekiah the immediate efficacy of his grace, and left him to follow the dictates of his own natural propensity, "to try him, that he might know all that was in his heart." The omniscient God before knew the whole; but, having by the trial made the case evident, he pointed it out to Hezekiah and to all suc-

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 24—33. Alas! how seldom do we in any tolerable degree render to the Lord according to his benefits! None, who know themselves, and watch over their own hearts, will venture to cast a stone at Hezekiah; but they will all, one by one, depart convicted in their consciences of similar guilt, and crying out, "God be merciful to me a sinner!"—If we be not left to expose our foolish and wicked pride before the world, the Lord sees and abhors the risings of it in our hearts, and might justly pour out his wrath upon us: yet, if humbled for this pride of our heart, he will forgive us, and continue to bless us. But we ought to watch and pray always, that we may not enter into temptation, and that God would not leave us to ourselves: we ought to repress every vain-glorious thought, and to welcome even afflictions and severe rebukes, when they keep us from being exalted above measure. Blessed be God, death will soon end the believer's conflict; then every sin will be abolished, and he may safely be trusted with the most glorious exaltation and uninterrupted felicity: and will no more, to all eternity, be tempted to intercept the least mite of that revenue of praise, which belongs to the God of his salvation.—While we are here, we ought to

V. 12, 13. When Manasseh was deprived of his authority and liberty, and secluded from his evil counsellors and companions, and from all his pleasures ; in chains, and in a prison ; without any other prospect, than of ending his days in that wretched situation ; he had leisure to reflect on what had passed. He 13 And prayed unto him; and "he was intreated of him, and heard his supplication, and "brought him again to Jerusalem into his kingdom. Then Manasseh "knew that the LORD he was God.

14 ¶ Now after this "he built a wall without the city of David, on the west side of "Gihon, in the valley, even to the entering in at "the fish-gate, and compassed about "Ophel, and raised it up a very great height, and "put captains of war in all the fenced cities of Judah.

15 And "he took away the strange gods, and the idol out of the house of the LORD, and all the altars that he had built in the mount of the house of the LORD, and in Jerusalem, and cast them out of the city.

16 And he "repaired the altar of the LORD, and sacrificed thereon "peace-offerings, and "thank-offerings, and "commanded Judah to serve the LORD God of Israel.

17 Nevertheless "the people did sacrifice still in the high places, yet unto the LORD their God only.

18 ¶ Now "the rest of the acts of Manasseh, and "his prayer unto his God, and the words of "the seers that spake to him in the name of the LORD God of would then, no doubt, recollect the honour, prosperity, and deliverances, with which his father had been favoured; his own good education, with the instructions and warnings of the prophets; and his atrocious, multiplied, and daring crimes: and he would remember that his miseries had been foretold by his faithful monitors. Thus, by the special grace of God, his solitude and affliction brought him to view his own conduct and character in another light than before; and he began to cry for mercy and deliverance, "humbling himself greatly before the God of his fathers." (Note, Luke xv. 17—19.) He confessed his sins, condemned himself, and was covered with shame before God, abhorring his crimes, and loathing himself for them, as guilty of most aggravated ingratitude, impiety, and iniquity; yet still hoping to be pardoned, through the abundant mercy of the Lord, who had always, in the days of his ancestors, shewn himself ready to forgive repenting rebels. These humble supplications the Lord graciously accepted: and he inclined the king of Assyria to liberate his prisoner, and to reinstate him in his authority. "Then Manasseh knew that the LORD he was God," alone able to punish, or to deliver: he likewise became acquainted with him as a God of salvation; and learned to fear, trust, love, and obey him.

V. 14. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 15—17. It is evident, that Manasseh, on his return from Babylon, entirely renounced all idolatry; and set himself to suppress it in his kingdom, to revive the worship of God at the temple, and by his example and authority to prevail with the people to attend on it. These were "fruits meet for repentance."—It has, however, been asserted, that his public reformation was very imperfect, and that he did not shew the zeal and vigour which a true penitent ought to have done. It does not, however, appear, from this short account, that he was remarkably deficient. He would have done better, if he had demolished the idols, instead of casting them out of the city. But he totally suppressed all open idolatry: and it might arise from other causes than Manasseh's want of zeal, that the high places were not removed. The inveterate habits of the people; the powerful opposition of that party, which had concurred in his former idolatries, and of the nation in general; and the weakness of his authority, through ill success, and the power of the Assyrian monarch, would occasion obstacles which he might not be able to overcome. (Notes, xiv. 2—5. xvii. 6. xx. 33. 1 Kings xv. 14.) But there is not the most remote intimation, that God did not accept his endeavours. Yet the opposition, or hypocrisy, of the people, who had readily concurred in his iniquities, but refused to imitate his repentance, prevented it from being a national blessing; as his crimes had formed, and occasioned, a load of national sin, "which the LORD would not pardon." (Notes, 2 Kings xxiii. 26, 27. Jer. xv. 2—4.)

V. 18, 19. The repeated mention of Manasseh's prayer, and of his being humbled, are well worthy of our notice. This humble supplicating frame of mind forms, as it were, a crisis in the sinner's case; and from the moment that he is brought into it, he enters upon a new state, and commences a new life, however vile he before hath been. (Marg. Ref.) The prayer, contained in the Apocrypha, and ascribed to Manasseh, probably was made long after: but no doubt he prayed continually and fervently, for all the blessings and mercies, which so atrocious a sinner needed; and with particular confessions of his sins, and with all that unstudied copiousness, which a burdened conscience, a broken heart, trembling fears, wavering hopes, and fervent desires, will invariably dictate. (Notes, Job xxxiii. 19—30. Acts ix. 10—14.) Instead of "the seers," the marginal reading is Hosai, whom some suppose to have been a prophet in those days.

V. 21—25. (Note, 2 Kings xxi. 19—25.) As soon as Manasseh was dead, Amon re-established all his father's idolatries; either bringing back those images which had been thrown aside, or forming others of the same kind. Per-

Israel, behold, they are written "in the book of the kings of Israel.

19 "His prayer also, and how God was intreated of him, and "all his sins, and his trespass, and the places wherein he built high places, and set up groves and graven images, "before he was humbled: behold, they are written among the sayings of the "seers.

20 ¶ So "Manasseh slept with his fathers, and they buried him in his own house: and "Amon his son reigned in his stead.

21 ¶ Amon was two and twenty years old when he began to reign, and reigned "two years in Jerusalem.

22 But he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, "as did Manasseh his father: for Amon sacrificed unto all the carved images which Manasseh his father had made, and served them;

23 And "humbled not himself before the LORD, as Manasseh his father had humbled himself; but Amon "trespassed more and more.

24 And "his servants conspired against him, and slew him in his own house.

25 ¶ But the people of the land "slew all them that had conspired against king Amon: and "the people of the land made "Josiah his son king in his stead.

haps he flattered himself, that he too should live many years; and should repent in his old age, if that were necessary, and so at last be saved, as his father was supposed to have been. But whatever warnings or convictions he had, he never "humbled himself" in true repentance; but trespassed more and more. He was therefore soon cut off in his sins, and made an example of just severity; and placed as a beacon, to warn all men, not to draw perverse conclusions from the example of the Lord's patience and mercy to Manasseh, and thus encourage themselves in impenitent wickedness. (Note, Luke xxiii. 39—43.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—10. It would be extremely distressing to pious parents, magistrates, or ministers, if they could foresee the consequences of their removal, in the conduct of their children or people, and in the subversion of their most important regulations. Yet good instructions and examples may remain, like seed under the ground, for a long time unperceived, and at length spring up and bring forth much fruit. Without disquieting ourselves about futurity, we may therefore cheerfully commit our families, and our endeavours to do good, as well as our souls and bodies, into the hand of God, assured that our labours will not prove wholly ineffectual. (Note, Ec. ix. 1—3.)—The tendency of human nature to evil is so strong, that nothing but divine grace can give it a contrary bias: and when that power is suspended, or withheld, men return to evil, as a stone falls downwards; and run with rapid and accelerated motion, further and further, into transgression continually. But the Lord notices both the number, the variety, and the aggravations of our offences: mercies and opportunities ungratefully abused, the truth held in unrighteousness, the seduction or compulsion of others to sin, warnings slighted or despised, and mischief extensively committed, add exceedingly to the heinousness of men's offences. (Note, Luke vii. 40—43.) Yet, "where sin hath abounded, grace hath" often "much more abounded;" and some of every description of sinners shall be brought to repentance and salvation, to prove that "with God nothing is impossible." (Note, Rom. v. 20, 21.)

V. 11—25. When the objects of the Lord's special love disregard the rebukes of his word, he will let them feel his chastening rod; and they may truly say, "Before I was afflicted, I went astray; but now have I kept thy word." Adversity, solitude, and sequestration from gay companions, and scenes of pleasure and dissipation, connected with present sufferings and the prospect of death and eternity, cause many to reflect, who in prosperity were careless and presumptuous. The effects of a pious education, or of solid religious instructions, often shew themselves in affliction; the troubles themselves verify the warnings of pious relatives or teachers; and worse things arise before the mind, as the consequence of continuing in sin. Yet all this would not have an abiding effect, if afflictions were not a "means of grace," which God himself uses and blesses, as evidently, as he doth those which he commands us to employ for ourselves and for each other. When men are left to themselves, "in their distress, they trespass yet more against the Lord." But when he gives the blessing, the hardest, stoutest, and proudest heart softens, and becomes broken and contrite. His hand should therefore be noticed in all our afflictions; and our prayers presented that they may be sanctified, and converted into blessings to our souls.—They, who have been most daring in rebellion against God, are sometimes the most cowardly, when assaulted by their fellow-creatures. "In the fear of the Lord, there is strong confidence:" but guilt appeals the sinner, and his courage fails him in the hour of danger. There is, however, no possibility of fleeing, or hiding ourselves, from God: our only hope consists in humbling ourselves before him; and if our distresses and perils induce us to this, they will prove the most effectual means of promoting our felicity.—"The Lord is rich in mercy; with him there is plenteous redemption;" and he so delights in pardoning and saving transgressors, that he permits the vilest to

CHAP. XXXIV.

Josiah reigns well, and destroys idolatry both in Judah and Israel, 1-7. He provides for the repair of the temple, 8-13. Hilkiah finds the book of the law, and reads it before the king, who is alarmed, and enquires of God by the prophetess Huldah, 14-22. Huldah predicts the destruction of Jerusalem, but not till after Josiah's death, 23-28. He causes the law to be read in a solemn assembly, and renews the covenant between God and the people, 29-33.

JOSIAH was eight years old when he began to reign, and he reigned in Jerusalem one and thirty years.

2 And he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD, and walked in the ways of David his father, and declined neither to the right hand nor to the left.

3 ¶ For in the eighth year of his reign, while he was yet young, he began to seek after the God of David his father: and in the twelfth year he began to purge Judah and Jerusalem from the high places, and the groves, and the carved images, and the molten images.

4 And they brake down the altars of Baalim in his presence: and the images that were on high above them he cut down; and the groves, and the carved images, and the molten images, he brake in pieces, and made dust of them, and strowed it upon the graves of them that had sacrificed upon them.

5 And he burnt the bones of the priests upon their altars, and cleansed Judah and Jerusalem.

6 And so did he in the cities of Manasseh, and Ephraim, and Simeon, even unto Naphtali, with their mattocks round about.

7 And when he had broken down the altars and the groves, and had beaten the graven images into powder, and cut down all the idols throughout all the land of Israel, he returned to Jerusalem.

8 ¶ Now in the eighteenth year of his reign, when he had purged the land, and the house, he sent Shaphan the son of Azaliah, and Maaseiah the governor of the city, and Joah the son of Joahaz the recorder, to repair the house of the LORD his God.

9 And when they came to Hilkiah the high priest,

10 And they put it in the hand of the workmen that had the oversight of the house of the LORD, and they gave it to the workmen that wrought in the house of the LORD, to repair and amend the house:

11 Even to the artificers and builders gave they it, to buy hewn stone, and timber for couplings, and to floor the houses which the kings of Judah had destroyed.

12 And the men did the work faithfully: and the overseers of them were Jahath and Obadiah, the Levites, of the sons of Merari; and Zechariah and Meshullam, of the sons of the Kohathites, to set it forward; and other of the Levites, all that could skill of instruments of music.

13 Also they were over the bearers of burdens, and were overseers of all that wrought the work in any manner of service: and of the Levites there were scribes, and officers, and porters.

14 ¶ And when they brought out the money that was brought into the house of the LORD, Hilkiah the priest found a book of the law of the LORD given by Moses.

† Heb. poured out, or melted.

come to his throne of grace. Wherever there is a sinner of whom it can truly be said, "Behold he prayeth," there will the Lord be found a God that heareth prayer. There is indeed immense difficulty in bringing the wicked thus to seek the Lord; but none in prevailing with him, to hear and forgive the returning penitent who calls upon him in truth. (Notes, Is. lv. 7-9.) He often answers the mere cry of distress with temporal deliverances; while relapses into former crimes, and perseverance in them, prove that the supplicants were never truly humbled or penitent. But when a sinner in his affliction beseeches the Lord, and humbles himself greatly before him; when he condemns himself, ingenuously confesses his sins, and is covered with shame, and melted into godly sorrow; when he renounces all hope but in free mercy, and every plea but in the Redeemer's name, and seeks forgiveness and salvation before all other things: he will assuredly find access and acceptance; and his future life will evince, that his repentance, faith, and love, have united in bringing him to hate and renounce all his sins, and to walk henceforth in newness of life. If it were possible, he would undo his former wicked works, and lead into the ways of truth and peace all those, whom he had before seduced into the paths of sin and ruin: if his former life hath been profane or immoral, his future conduct will appear a perfect contrast to it; and he will make a quite contrary use of his wealth, abilities, or influence after "he is humbled" and hath begun to pray, to what he did before. (Compare 3-5. 9. with 15, 16.) Sincere piety, and love to the truths, ordinances, and commandments of God, will be manifest in his consequent conduct; and he will desire and aim at more than he can accomplish, both in serving God himself, and in attempting to prevail with others to do the same. The blood of Christ cleanse such penitents from all sin: their afflictions will either be sanctified and counterbalanced with comfort, or removed; in due time the Lord will extricate them from all the difficulties, in which their former sins had involved them; and he will be greatly glorified in their repentance, future conduct, and eternal salvation. Let sinners then be willing to know the worst of their case; for it is by no means desperate: let them consider all their pains and sorrows as so many calls to humble themselves before God, to call upon him, and to "acquaint themselves with him, that they may be at peace." And let not the hearts of those, who are thus seeking him, yield to discouragement; but let them humble themselves yet more and more, and "pray always and not faint."—Let pardoned sinners exert themselves to evidence their gratitude, and to glorify the God of their salvation; and let them walk humbly before him, and hope, pray for, and endeavour the conversion of their fellow-sinners, not excepting the very vilest: "for the things, that are impossible with man, are possible with God."—Let those, who take encouragement from the gospel, presumptuously to expect salvation, without repentance and newness of life; read in Manasseh's deep humiliation, earnest prayers, and consequent newness of life, their own fatal and horrible delusion, who practically say, "Let us sin on, that grace may abound." Let those who trifle and procrastinate, because a merciful God hath long borne with a few most notorious rebels, and at length granted them repentance and forgiveness of sins, meditate upon the example of Amon; and tremble, lest he should make them monuments of his righteous vengeance.—But we have all sinned: let us all then enquire seriously, whether we have been and are deeply humbled, or not? and whether we are pouring out our prayers before the mercy-seat of a forgiving God, day by day, in this self-abased frame of mind? Whether we have experienced a change in our judgment, disposition, aim, and general conduct? Or whether we still continue unhumiliated, impenitent, trespassing still more and more, and imitating the wickedness, and only the wickedness, of those that are gone before us? The two characters are easily distinguished: and they comprise all mankind, and distinguish between those who are now in the broad road to destruction, and those who are in the narrow way of eternal life. May God help us to be honest to ourselves, and to form a just conclusion concerning our own characters, before death (which perhaps may come sooner than we expect,) fixes us for ever in an unchangeable state!

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXIV. V. 1, 2. (Note, 2 Kings xxii. 1, 2.)

V. 3-7. This passage seems a compendious account of Josiah's reformation, perhaps without much respect to the order of time. He began seriously to attend to religious subjects, in the eighth year of his reign. Something was attempted in the twelfth year (which was before Jeremiah began to prophesy;) but probably not much was effected till the eighteenth. (Notes, 2 Kings xxii. 3-7. xxiii. 4-23. Jer. i. 1-3.) Yet the land was purged from its grosser abominations, before the repairing of the temple; but it is uncertain whether this extended to the land of Israel, or whether that be spoken of by anticipation.

V. 8-13. (Notes, 2 Kings xii. 4-16. xxii. 3-7.) They returned, &c. (9.) These Levites seem to have gone through the land, soliciting contributions for repairing the temple, even from "the remnant of Israel;" and they returned to Jerusalem when they had completed that business.—The temple began to go to decay during the idolatries of Manasseh: and the wicked reign of Amon, and the long minority of Josiah, rendered it much in need of a thorough repair.

18 Then Shaphan the scribe told the king, saying, Hilkiah the priest hath given me a book. "And Shaphan read it before the king.

19 And it came to pass, when the king had heard the words of the law, that he rent his clothes.

20 And the king commanded Hilkiah, and Ahikam the son of Shaphan, and Abdon the son of Micah, and Shaphan the scribe, and Asaiah a servant of the king's, saying,

21 Go, enquire of the LORD for me, and for them that are left in Israel and in Judah, concerning the words of the book that is found; for great is the wrath of the LORD that is poured out upon us, because our fathers have not kept the word of the LORD, to do after all that is written in this book.

22 And Hilkiah, and they that the king had appointed, went to Huldah the prophetess, the wife of Shallum the son of Tikvath, the son of Hasrah, keeper of the wardrobe; (now she dwelt in Jerusalem in the college;) and they spake to her to that effect.

23 ¶ And she answered them, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Tell ye the man that sent you to me,

24 Thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will bring evil upon this place, and upon the inhabitants thereof, even all the curses that are written in the book which they have read before the king of Judah:

25 Because they have forsaken me, and have burned incense unto other gods, that they might provoke me to anger with all the works of their hands; therefore my wrath shall be poured out upon this place, and shall not be quenched.

26 And as for the king of Judah, who sent you to enquire of the LORD, so shall ye say unto him, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel concerning the words which thou hast heard;

27 Because thine heart was tender, and thou didst humble thyself before God, when thou heardest his words against this place, and against the inhabitants thereof, and humbledst thyself before me, and didst rend thy clothes, and weep before me; I have even heard thee also, saith the LORD.

28 Behold, I will gather thee to thy fathers, and thou shalt be gathered to thy grave in peace, neither shall thine eye see all the evil that I will bring upon this place, and upon the inhabitants of the same.

So they brought the king word again.

29 ¶ Then the king sent, and gathered together all the elders of Judah and Jerusalem.

30 And the king went up into the house of the LORD, and all the men of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and the priests, and the Levites, and all the people, great and small: and he read in their ears all the words of the book of the covenant that was found in the house of the LORD.

31 And the king stood in his place, and made a covenant before the LORD, to walk after the LORD, and to keep his commandments, and his testimonies, and his statutes, with all his heart, and with all his soul, to perform the words of the covenant which are written in this book.

32 And he caused all that were present in Jerusalem and Benjamin to stand to it. And the inhabitants of Jerusalem did according to the covenant of God, the God of their fathers.

33 And Josiah took away all the abominations out of all the countries that pertained to the children of Israel, and made all that were present in Israel to serve, even to serve the LORD their God: And all his days they departed not from following the LORD, the God of their fathers.

CHAP. XXXV.

Josiah causes a solemn passover to be celebrated, i.—19. He is slain in battle against Pharaoh-necho, 20—24. Great lamentations are made for him, 25. His acts and goodness, 26, 27.

MOREOVER Josiah kept a passover unto the LORD in Jerusalem: and they killed the passover on the fourteenth day of the first month.

2 And he set the priests in their charges, and encouraged them to the service of the house of the LORD,

3 And said unto the Levites that taught all Israel, which were holy unto the LORD, Put the holy ark in the house which Solomon the son of David king of Israel did build; it shall not be a burden upon your shoulders: serve now the LORD your God, and his people Israel.

4 And prepare yourselves by the houses of your fathers, after your courses, according to the writing of David king of Israel, and according to the writing of Solomon his son.

5 And stand in the holy place according to the divisions of the families of the fathers of your brethren, abominations makes way for the pure administration of God's ordinances; and when the filthiness and idols are cleansed out of our hearts, the Lord will prepare his temple there, and graciously come and dwell in it.—Liberality integrity, and diligence are commendable in every work, but especially in the work of true religion, and all undertakings immediately connected with it.—When God enables us to act conscientiously, according to our present knowledge, he will in due time give us still further and clearer views of his truth. The more we become acquainted with the Scripture, the more evidently shall we perceive our own guilt and danger: but if this discovery produces godly sorrow, contrition, humiliation, and further enquiries after the will of God, an answer of peace may be expected; while all the curses which he hath denounced will fall upon the impenitent workers of iniquity.—Though we cannot prevent the ruin of sinners in general, or of collective bodies, we should endeavour by our examples, prayers, instructions, and the regular use of authority, in domestic, or in public life, to engage as many as we can to return to God, and walk before him, by trusting his promises and obeying his commandments.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXV. V. 1—3. (Note, 2 Kings xxiii. 21—23.)—Taught, &c. (3.) The Levites, by courses, served the priests at the sanctuary, as their primary employment: but when at home in their several cities, they were the stated teachers of the people. (Marg. Ref. Notes, xvii. 7—9. xxx. 22.)—Put, &c. It is probable, that the most holy place had gone to decay, through neglect; and that while it was cleansed and repaired, the high priest had committed the ark to the custody of some Levites of the family of Kohath: but when it was carried again into its place, they would be at liberty for other services, to the glory of God, and the benefit of his people.

V. 4. The regulations, formed by David and Solomon, concerning the courses of the priests and Levites, were committed to writing, and preserved for them to refer to continually. (Notes, &c. viii. 14, 15. 1 Chr. xxiii.—xxvi.)

All, &c. (12.) It seems, that the Levites, who attended by courses, in the intervals of their proper work, assisted by turns in superintending the workmen; nor were those excepted who were employed in psalmody; thus they became doubly useful, and saved the expense of other overseers. V. 33. Whilst Josiah lived, the people were restrained from open idolatry: yet we learn from the prophets, especially Jeremiah, that, at this very time especially, they were ripening for destruction, by their hypocrisy and iniquity.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Several years of our lives must pass before we become capable of performing useful services; our earliest youth should therefore be dedicated to God, that we may not waste any of our remaining span. Happy and wise are they, who seek the Lord at a period of life, when others are pursuing sinful pleasures, contracting bad habits, forming ruinous connexions, and making work for bitter repentance; either gracious repentance in this world, or that which is attended with despair in the regions of misery. None can express the anguish that is prevented by early piety, and its happy consequences.—If we would be useful, we must first take heed to ourselves; and when we are established in faith and grace, we shall be fitted for instruments of good to others. In this important work we must expect many opposers, and but few cordial helpers: and the more we look into the world, the church, or our own hearts, by the light of God's word, the more evidently shall we see how very much reformation and renovation are every where needed. (Ez. viii. P. O. 1—6.)—The suppression of gross thren, the *people, and after the division of the families of the Levites.

6 So *kill the passover, and *sanctify yourselves, and prepare your brethren, that they may do according to the word of the LORD by the hand of Moses.

7 And *Josiah *gave to the people, of the flock, lambs and kids, all for the passover-offerings for all that were present, to the number of thirty thousand, and three thousand bullocks; these were of the king's substance.

8 And *his princes *gave willingly unto the people, to the priests, and to the Levites: *Hilkiah, and Zechariah, and Jehiel, *rulers of the house of God, gave unto the priests for the passover-offerings, two thousand and six hundred small cattle, and three hundred oxen.

9 Coneniah also, and Shemaiah and Nethaneel his brethren, and Hashabiah, and Jeiel, and Jozabad, chief of the Levites, *gave unto the Levites for passover-offerings five thousand small cattle, and five hundred oxen.

10 So the service was prepared, and *the priests stood in their place, and the Levites in their courses, according to the king's commandment.

11 And they killed the passover, and *the priests sprinkled the blood from their hands, and the Levites *flayed them.

12 And they removed the burnt-offerings, that they might give according to the divisions of the families of the people, to offer unto the LORD, *as it is written in the book of Moses: and so did they with the oxen.

13 And they roasted the passover with fire, according to the ordinance: but the other holy offerings *sod they in pots, and in caldrons, and in pans, and *divided them speedily among all the people.

14 And afterwards they made ready for themselves, and for the priests: *because the priests the sons of Aaron were busy in offering of burnt-offerings and the fat until night; therefore the Levites prepared for themselves, and for the priests the sons of Aaron.

15 And the singers the sons of Asaph were in their *place, *according to the commandment of David, and Asaph, and Heman, and Jeduthun the kings seer; and *the porters waited at every gate; they might not depart from their service, for their brethren the Levites prepared for them.

16 So all the service of the LORD was prepared the same day, to keep the passover, and to offer burnt-offerings upon the altar of the LORD, according to the commandment of king Josiah.

17 And the children of Israel that were *present kept the passover at that time, and *the feast of unleavened bread, seven days.

18 And *there was no passover like to that kept in Israel, from the days of Samuel the prophet; *neither did all the kings of Israel keep such a passover as Josiah kept, and the priests, and the Levites, and all Judah and Israel that were present, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

19 In the eighteenth year of the reign of Josiah was this passover kept.

20 ¶ After all this, when Josiah had prepared the *temple, *Necho king of Egypt came up to fight against *Carchemish by Euphrates: and Josiah went out against him.

21 But he sent ambassadors to him, saying, *What have I to do with thee, thou king of Judah? I come not against thee this day, but against the *house wherewith I have war: for *God commanded me to make haste: *forbear thee from meddling with God, who is with me, that he destroy thee not.

22 Nevertheless Josiah would *not turn his face from him, *but disguised himself, that he might fight with him, and hearkened not unto the words of Necho from *the mouth of God, and came to fight in the valley of *Megiddo.

23 And *the archers shot at king Josiah: and the king said to his servants, Have me away; for I am sore *wounded.

24 His servants therefore took him out of that chariot, and put him in *the second chariot that he had; and *they brought him to Jerusalem, and *he died, and was buried *in one of the sepulchres of his fathers. And *all Judah and Jerusalem mourned for Josiah.

V. 5. The meaning of this verse seems to be; that the Levites should be as exact, in ascertaining to what family, or subdivision of a family, every man belonged, as those of the other tribes were, that they might know and do their proper work, with as much certainty and accuracy, as the others knew what lands belonged to them by inheritance. Some, however, suppose, that the arrangement of the Levites at this time only is intended; and that they were directed to stand in regular order, according to the families, to receive the paschal lambs, which their brethren of the other tribes would bring, according to their families, one for each household. (6. 10, 11.)

V. 7-9. The people at this time were neither very rich, nor very zealous, and the ordinances were expensive. That this therefore might not prevent their attendance on this solemn service, the king provided, at his own expense, an immense quantity of cattle suited to the solemnity; and after his example, the nobles, and the chief of the priests and Levites, liberally assisted their poorer brethren.—According to the calculation, that not fewer than ten, nor more than twenty persons, were to join for one lamb or kid, the numbers given on this occasion, would suffice for above four hundred thousand persons, young and old: besides those given for peace-offerings and other sacrifices. (xxx. 24. Note, 1 Kings viii. 63-65.)—Rulers of, &c. (8.) The heads of the several courses of the priests; or the captains of the temple. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 10, 11. (4-6. Notes, xxix. 34. xxx. 16, 17.)

V. 12. The Levites separated, as speedily as they could, the parts of the peace-offerings, which were to be burnt, from the rest, and added them to the other burnt-offerings; that the remainder, together with the paschal lambs, might be prepared and distributed as the occasion required. (Notes, Lev. iii.)

V. 13-17. (Notes, Ex. xii. 3-10. 1 Sam. ii. 13-16. 1 Chr. xxv. 1-7. Ez. xvi. 19-24.)

V. 18, 19. Hezekiah's remarkable passover seems to have been celebrated with greater fervency of devotion: but this of Josiah was far more regular, and in more exact conformity to the law; it was attended by vast multitudes, and the liberality of the king in furnishing the paschal lambs was without example. (Notes, xxx. 2-5. 18-27.)—Nothing is recorded on this subject, from the time that Israel obtained possession of the promised land: (Note, Josh. v. 10:) but even this passover, under Josiah, which exceeded all for several centuries, seems to have been very deficient as to genuine devotion.

V. 20-24. Josiah lived thirteen years after that remarkable passover before recorded, and zealously supported the worship of God to the end of his life. (Notes, 3. xxxiv. 38. 2 Kings xxiii. 26, 27.) But the nation was all the while ripening for destruction; and was adjudged unworthy of so pious and excellent a prince.—Josiah's conduct at the close of his life has been treated with great severity by most commentators: and he has been charged with engaging in an unjust war, and disregarding the express command of God; which may in great measure be ascribed to the groundless censure passed on him by the apocryphal Esdras, 'Not regarding the words of the prophet Jeremy, spoken by the mouth of the LORD: (1 Esdras i. 28:) but the Scripture no where condemns him. (Note, 2 Kings xxiii. 29, 30.) Pharaoh, in marching his army through Josiah's territories against his will, certainly committed an act of hostility. It is evident that Josiah was in possession of the whole land, and not of Judah only; and, probably, he held the northern parts of it as a grant from the king of Babylon; and was not only in alliance with him, but bound to guard his frontiers against hostile invaders. And doubtless the kings of Judah had been in some measure dependent on the kings of Assyria and Babylon, from the time of Manasseh's captivity and release. Pharaoh declared indeed by his ambassadors, that he did not mean to attack Josiah, but to march against a power with which he was at war. He was, however, in the heart of Josiah's kingdom before he sent this embassy, and he avowed his intention of attacking his ally; and therefore Josiah may fairly, on both accounts, be justified from the charge of unjustly meddling with a war that did not belong to him; for no king upon earth would think it unjust to declare war against another prince, who should forcibly march an army into his dominions, in order to attack another that was in alliance with him. It is true the ambassadors assured Josiah that "God had commanded Pharaoh to make haste;" and said, "Forbear thee from meddling with God, who is with me, that he destroy thee not:" and he is therefore said, "not to have hearkened to the words of Necho, from the mouth of God." But

25 ¶ And ^aJeremiah lamented for Josiah: and ^ball the singing men and the singing women, spake of Josiah in their lamentations to this day, and made them an ordinance in Israel: and, behold, they are written in the lamentations.

26 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Josiah, and his ^cgoodness, according to that which was written in the law of the LORD,

CHAP. XXXVI.

Jehoahaz succeeds Josiah, but Necho carries him into Egypt: and makes Jehoiakim king, 1-4. He reigns wickedly, and is put in chains by Nebuchadnezzar, who carries some of the sacred vessels to Babylon, 5-7. Jehoiachin is made king, who after a year is carried captive to Babylon, with other of the sacred vessels: and Zedekiah succeeds, 8-10. He reigns very wickedly, despises the warnings of Jeremiah, and rebels against Nebuchadnezzar, 11-13. The sins of the priests and people cause the utter destruction of Jerusalem, and the desolation of the land, for seventy years, 14-21. Cyrus's proclamation for rebuilding the temple, 22, 23.

THEN ^ethe people of the land took ^fJehoahaz the son of Josiah, and made him king in his father's stead in Jerusalem.

2 Jehoahaz was twenty and three years old when he began to reign, and he reigned three months in Jerusalem.

3 And the king of Egypt ^gput him down at Jerusalem, and ^hcondemned the land in an hundred talents of silver and a talent of gold.

4 And the king of Egypt ⁱmade Eliakim his brother, king over Judah and Jerusalem, and turned his Necho produced no proof, that he was a prophet of JEHOVAH, and Sennacherib had used similar language to Hezekiah, who had paid no regard to it. (Marg. Ref.) The word used by Necho, (Elohim), may signify gods, or idols: and critics have noted, that the expression "from the mouth of God," is no where used in the Hebrew Bible, for a revelation from the true God; but that it is always "from the mouth of the LORD."—It is not indeed at all probable, that God had commanded Pharaoh by Jeremiah, or by any other prophet, to undertake this expedition: for in that case Josiah would doubtless have been informed, and have submitted. And if Pharaoh had received any monition in a dream, or vision, which he concluded to be from the God of Israel, (and so meant something more than his own auguries and superstitions;) Josiah might not give credit to his testimony, in matters connected with his own interests.—Josiah, however, seems to have been guilty of precipitation, and in not enquiring of the LORD when thus warned, before he proceeded to attack so formidable an enemy: his premature and violent death might therefore be a rebuke for his rashness, but it was chiefly a judgment on a hypocritical and wicked generation. Whatever sin Josiah committed, he doubtless repented of it: and the final state of one, who habitually lives a life of repentance, faith, and obedience, cannot be affected, by the manner in which he is suddenly taken away.—The second chariot seems to have been one that waited for him in case of necessity: into which he was removed, the other being perhaps covered with blood.

V. 25-27. Though the people would not imitate Josiah's eminent piety, and disliked his reformation; yet they highly respected his character, and were sensible that they had sustained a very great loss.—The book of Lamentations of Jeremiah was written on another occasion: (Preface to Lamentations:) and what that prophet composed on the death of Josiah hath not come down to us. But both the prophet and the people took several methods of doing honour to the memory of their prince; and of perpetuating the lamentations made on the account of his death; it is probable, by an annual commemoration of that fatal event. (Note, Jer. xxii. 10-12.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-19. Much good may be done by persons in authority, who spare no labour, or expense, in promoting the honour of God; and who unite their example and influence with most zealous endeavours, to excite and encourage other members of the community to do their duty.—Even they that teach others, and are "holy to the LORD," not only by office, but in their hearts and lives, need to be repeatedly exhorted, and charged, to serve God and his church, with increasing zeal and persevering diligence; and when one service is finished, to proceed with alacrity to another.—God alone can efficaciously sanctify and prepare our hearts for his holy service: but this blessing must be sought, for ourselves and others, by attending to our several duties: and ministers should always sanctify themselves, before they attempt to prepare the people for the ordinances of God. In this way revivals of religion are both manifested and forwarded; and sacred ordinances at once honour the LORD, and become means of grace to the souls of men. The support of them in an orderly and public manner, must always be attended with expense; and the multitude of the poor will often be unable to defray it. On this account religion will, in some places and at some times, be neglected, to the discouragement of many, and the ruin of far more: it then becomes a noble generosity for kings, princes, and wealthy persons, to step forward and to communicate liberally to the assistance of the poor, that they may not want the bread of life for their souls; and God will honour those who thus honour him. None are more bound to liberality in such cases, than the superior clergy, who enjoy large revenues appropriated to the maintenance of religion: for surely they ought willingly to assist their poorer brethren, who commonly do a great proportion of the work, without even a decent provision for themselves and their families! Thus the service of God might be prepared, and his ordinances conducted in harmony and to edification: while mutual love would be cemented; discouragements and temptations to envy, discontent, and revilings, would be obviated; and the affluent might expect to enjoy their abundance in reputation, beloved by their inferiors, with the blessing of God, and to his glory: whilst the whole would cause numbers to pray for each other, and to abound in many thanksgivings to God: (Notes, 2 Cor. ix. 6-15.)—They, who are continually so taken up in the work of God and his church, that they cannot attend to their secular interests, ought particularly to be cared for by their brethren who have more leisure: in all things we need reciprocal assistance; and they, who are much employed in public exercises of religion, should be cautioned not to neglect their own souls.—Alas! how are the ordinances of God disregarded, or formally attended on! The church in its best days hath fallen short hitherto of what it ought to be at all times: our most religious hours, in public or private, need forgiveness; and the mercy of God, through the Saviour's atonement, must still be our only plea, to the close of our days.—Vast exertions are requisite to produce an outward attendance to religion: and after all, except we depend entirely on divine grace, the most excellent means and instruments will be ineffectual, and serve only to demonstrate the strength of man's depravity, and the justice of God in the sinner's condemnation: and abused mercies will after a time be withdrawn.

V. 20-27. No man suffers or will ever suffer who has not merited his sufferings; yet public persons are often laid aside or removed, to punish the wickedness of the community: and even their own indiscretions, contrary to their general character, and the fatal consequences of them, may be permitted as a national judgment.—We are not bound to believe all those, who profess to speak by the authority of God: but it is always right to act with caution, to search the Scriptures, to seek the LORD's direction by prayer, and to consult wise, experienced, and pious friends; that we may discover as far as possible, what is the truth and will of God concerning us, and that we may not be found to fight against him.—Men seldom prosper in those measures which are unadvisedly adopted: and they who are honoured with great usefulness, should be doubly circumspect in their conduct, and careful of their lives; because so many are interested in them.—Believers, however, even when taken away by a sudden or premature death, are removed to a better world: and their survivors should honour them, notwithstanding their imperfections; and will frequently perceive they have great cause to mourn for them. (Note, Is. lvii. 1, 2.) Yet, many join in lamenting the death, and commemorating the goodness, of useful men, who neither regard their admonitions, nor imitate their examples. And many mourn over their own calamities, who do not repent, and forsake those sins, which have provoked God to inflict them. Yet this alone can avert still more tremendous judgments.

It is generally agreed that Ezra wrote this book, and also the preceding books of Chronicles. It is likewise recorded by the Jewish writers, that he revised all the preceding parts of Scripture, and published a correct copy of the whole: and indeed this account appears highly probable. He is not called a prophet, in the sacred Scripture: yet there can be no doubt but he performed these services under the guidance of the Holy Spirit; as no distinction is made in the New Testament between one part and another of that volume, which was then called "The Oracles of God," and as such, sanctioned by our Lord and his apostles. The prophecies of Haggai and Zechariah confirm the history contained in the former part of this book: and as Ezra alone records the rebuilding of the temple; whatever in the New Testament relates to the temple, as then standing, is in some sense a sanction to the authenticity of the narrative: though I do not recollect any express references to it, except in the genealogies. Neither does the book appear to contain any direct prophecies: but it is written in so pious a strain, and so much in the manner of the other Scriptures, that it has strong internal evidences of divine inspiration. As express mention is made in it of Jeremiah's prophecies, and plain intimations are given of Isaiah's extraordinary prediction concerning Cyrus, (i. 1-3:) thus it is evident the writings of these prophets were then extant; and the constant reference to the law of Moses and the preceding histories in this book, and that of Nehemiah, proves the same respecting them.—Ezra was peculiarly had in honour by the ancient Jews, and is so by the modern: and to this we must ascribe the forgery of several other books, under his name, (especially the two apocryphal books of Esdras, or Ezra;) for forgeries they undoubtedly are, and of a much later date than the authentic record of Ezra. This history opens with the proclamation of Cyrus, the return of a company of Jews, and their attempts to rebuild the city and temple, and to re-inhabit the land; it proceeds to record the opposition which they met with, the delays this occasioned, and how, after a time, they in part succeeded. At length, about seventy eight or nine years afterwards, (concerning a large part of which nothing is recorded,) Ezra himself arrived with a commission, and large powers and grants, from Artaxerxes, and with many attendants: and the narrative closes with an account of the sin of the Jews in marrying heathen wives; Ezra's grief, humble confession, and prayers on that account: and his pious endeavours to separate his people from idolaters.—In this and the subsequent history, the Jews no longer appear as an independent prosperous nation, governed by kings of their own race: but a small remnant, returned from captivity, by the favour of the Persian kings, and under their protection and dominion; and struggling, often feebly, with many difficulties and enemies: yet, in this condition, they were enabled to re-establish the worship of God at the temple in Jerusalem, to which they outwardly adhered till the coming of Christ; being effectually cured of gross idolatry, though, in other respects, exceedingly prone to disobedience.—During the captivity, nothing is recorded of the history of Israel, except what may be collected from the prophecies of Ezekiel and Daniel: and exceedingly little is contained in the Scripture of their condition, during 536 years, till the birth of Christ, compared with the regular history given of the nation from the days of Moses to the captivity. The old dispensation was about to expire and make way for Christianity; the Spirit of prophecy was about to be withdrawn for a season; and the people had so often and so flagrantly violated their national covenant, that they were not honoured and noticed as they had been in former ages.

CHAP. I.

Cyrus issues a proclamation, allowing the Jews to go up to Jerusalem and build the temple: and exciting those who stayed behind to assist them, 1-4. Many prepare to return, and others contribute to the expense, 5, 6. Cyrus restores the vessels of the temple to Sheshbazzar, 7-11.

NOW "in the first year of Cyrus king of Persia, that the word of the LORD by the mouth of Jeremiah might be fulfilled, the LORD stirred up the spirit of Cyrus king of Persia that he made a proclamation throughout all his kingdom, and put it also in writing, saying,

2 Thus saith Cyrus king of Persia, The LORD God of heaven hath given me all the kingdoms of

NOTES.

CHAP. I. V. 1-4. Nebuchadnezzar reigned, after the first captivity of the Jews in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, forty-five years. (Note, 1 Kings xxiv. 1.) His son Evil-merodach was slain by Neriglissar, his brother-in-law, after he had reigned two years; and probably Jehoiachin died before him. (Note, 2 Kings xxv. 27-30.) After four years Neriglissar was slain in battle by Cyrus: in a few months Belshazzar, the son of Evil-merodach, mounted the throne; and at the end of seventeen years he was slain in Babylon by Cyrus; (Dan. v.) Then Cyaxares, or Darius the Mede, the uncle and father-in-law of Cyrus, succeeded to the throne of all these kingdoms; and after two years he died, and left the whole of them to Cyrus, who, in the first year after his predecessor's death, proclaimed liberty to the captive Jews. This is the first computation of the seventy years of the Babylonish captivity. (Note, 2 Chr. xxxvi. 21.)—As Daniel prospered in the reign of Darius the Mede, and of Cyrus the Persian, there can be little doubt, but that he was instrumental in procuring this extraordinary proclamation in favour of the Jews; and probably he shewed that prince the prophecy of Isaiah, which was known to have been long extant, and in which he was predicted by name, and his successes were described: and by which he was appointed to rebuild Jerusalem and the temple: and also those of Jeremiah, which foretold the exact duration of the captivity. (Notes, Is. xlii. 17. xli. 1-5. xli. 25. xlv. 25-28. xlv. 1-6. Jer. xxv. 9-13. xxvii. 4-9. xxix. 10. l. li. Dan. i. 17-20. vi. 25-28.) These predictions, set before Cyrus by a person of Daniel's reputation for wisdom, and eminent station, seem to have produced in the mind of this prudent and humane conqueror, a conviction that the God of Israel was the true God, and that the captive Jews were his chosen people, and Jerusalem the place where he was especially pleased to be worshipped. Thus "the LORD stirred up his spirit" to issue a proclamation, which was publicly made known in every place, by heralds appointed for that service; and also committed to writing, that the Jews were now set at liberty; and should be protected, in returning to Jerusalem and rebuilding the temple.—In this proclamation Cyrus called the God of Israel, "JEHOVAH, the God of heaven," and avowed that he was "THE God," in contradistinction to all others that were so called. He acknowledged, that he had received his dominions from JEHOVAH, whether acquired by inheritance or conquest. These, being far superior to any other empire then in the world, (as comprising the dominions of the Medes and Persians, increased by those of the Assyrians, Babylonians, and others,) were called, in the customary style, "all the kingdoms of the earth." And he declared that "the LORD had charged him, to build him an house at Jerusalem." Some think that this was done in a vision vouchsafed to him; but probably it was his inference from Isaiah's prophecies. He also wished the Jews success in the name of the Lord, and in some sense prayed for his powerful and favourable presence with them. And he exhorted others, in every place, to help those who went upon this undertaking, with such things as were needful for their expenses, and for accomplishing their pious intentions. Some interpret this as an order to the rulers of the provinces, to supply them from the public revenues: (Notes,

5 ¶ Then rose up the chief of the fathers of Judah and Benjamin, and the priests, and the Levites, with all them whose spirit God had raised to go up to build the house of the LORD which is in Jerusalem.

6 And all they that were about them strengthened their hands with vessels of silver, with gold, with goods, and with beasts, and with precious things, beside all that was willingly offered.

7 ¶ Also Cyrus the king brought forth the vessels of the house of the LORD, which Nebuchadnezzar had brought forth out of Jerusalem, and had put them in the house of his gods :

8 Even those did Cyrus king of Persia bring forth by the hand of Mithredath the treasurer, and numbered them unto Sheshbazzar the prince of Judah.

9 And this is the number of them : thirty chargers of gold, a thousand chargers of silver, nine and twenty knives,

10 Thirty basons of gold, silver basons of a second sort four hundred and ten, and other vessels a thousand.

11 All the vessels of gold and of silver were five thousand and four hundred. All these did Sheshbazzar bring up with them of the captivity, that were brought up from Babylon unto Jerusalem

vii. 16—28 :) others suppose that Cyrus allowed the Jews to collect voluntary contributions from his subjects at large ; and some confine it to the Jews, who did not go up to Jerusalem, who were exhorted to assist their brethren that did. Without such assistance, many, that "remained in any place," waiting an opportunity of going up to Jerusalem, would have been eventually hindered.—Besides affording assistance to the Jews for their journey, the people in general, were allowed, and even reminded, to send oblations for the temple, which was about to be built at Jerusalem.—By this decree the Jews who had been held in bondage and captivity were virtually released, provided they chose to engage in this enterprise. Any attempt of this kind would previously have been punished as rebellion ; but now, the government being favourable, their opposers would be restrained, and many would readily help them on that account alone.—As the kings of Persia still retained the sovereignty of the land, it could be no real impolicy to encourage the people to re-inhabit and cultivate a fertile territory, which had long lain desolate. But this measure was so contrary to the ancient prejudices and superstitions of these kings, that it was probably dictated by conscience, and a sense of duty to the God of heaven : though we find nothing in the subsequent history of this prince to favour a conclusion, that he finally renounced idolatry, and became a true worshipper of JEHOVAH. The proclamation, however, was honourable to God ; and would encourage the Jews to adhere to their religion, and be more zealous for it ; and perhaps induce many of the Gentiles to respect it, and even to embrace it.

V. 5, 6. Some readers may perhaps wonder, that, on this proclamation of Cyrus, the Jews did not assemble in one body, and directly go and take possession of their ancient inheritance : but a little reflection shews the matter in another light.—The city and temple lay a heap of ruins, and it would cost immense labour and expense to rebuild them. The land was either wholly desolate, or occupied by encroaching neighbours ; and in either case, it would require some time and trouble to procure for themselves habitations and provisions. The journey was long, arduous, and perilous, to those who were attended with families and substance ; (Note, Gen. xxxi. 23, 24 :) and many enemies would endeavour to plunder them by the way, as far as they could and dared. (Notes, viii. 21—23. Neh. ii. 7.) None of the Jews had seen Jerusalem or the temple, except such as were above fifty years of age ; at which period of life the spirit of enterprise commonly begins to decline. Few were attached to the temple by true piety ; and most of them wanted even that attachment, which men naturally feel for the land of their nativity ; having been born in the places, where they were then settled. Some persons of true and eminent piety were so situated, that they did not think it their duty to remove ; as Daniel in the court of Cyrus : others would be hindered by the infirmities of old age, and the peculiar circumstances of their families and connexions. In short, the difficulties, hardship, and peril were manifest ; the success of the attempt would be doubtful to all, but those that were "strong in faith : " its temporal advantages were remote and precarious, and not worth the venture ; especially to such as had obtained comfortable settlements or occupations, in the land of their captivity. Even the spiritual advantages would appear to the pious mind, more intended for posterity than for that generation ; and to engage in it, in this view, would require vigorous faith, lively hope, and an active zeal for the honour of God, and the benefit of his church, and establishment of his worship, in ages to come.—We may conclude, that in consequence of the captivities, many Israelites, and some of the Jews, were finally incorporated with the heathen, among whom they dwelt : yet these calamities seem to have had a very good effect on considerable numbers. The chief fathers of Judah and Benjamin, who had the greatest influence in their tribes, first moved in this undertaking ; and they were joined by the leading men among the priests and Levites, which doubtless rendered the design more reputable : and thus a considerable number were encouraged to attend them : whilst others assisted, and sent oblations for the intended temple.—Many more returned, than we read of being carried away captive ; (Notes, ii. 64—67. Jer. lii. 28—30 :) but as the land had been utterly desolated, all the surviving inhabitants must have been driven into other countries, and most of them into those lands, which had been subject to the kings of Babylon, and which were now fallen under the dominion of the kings of Persia : and doubtless many of the ten tribes accompanied the Jews at this time. It is, however, evident that a great majority, even of the latter, chose to continue in the settlements which they had there gained : some of them afterwards returned, but very many never did ; and immense numbers of Jews were from that time dispersed, in every city and country, over all that part of the world. So that the new settlement, in Judea and at Jerusalem, formed but a small part of that people, as they continued to be distinguished from other nations : for they still increased and multiplied very rapidly, according to the promise of God to their fathers.—It is worthy of observation, that no Jews, who chose to go, were excluded by Cyrus's proclamation : yet the language of the sacred historian implies, that none would actually have gone, if He, who "stirred up the spirit of Cyrus," had not also "stirred up the spirit of the people," to avail themselves of this permission ; (the original words are the same in both clauses.) This transaction, (as Archbishop Usher has particularly observed,) furnishes a most striking illustration, or, as I would rather say, representation, of the way in which the gospel is proposed to sinners, and embraced by believers. It is in general set before the ruined descendants of Adam ; with the Saviour's most solemn assurance, that "Him who cometh—he will in no wise cast out." Yet "no man can come unto him, except the Father draw him." On one pretence or other, all who are left to themselves "neglect so great salvation," and are justly condemned. But God, by his preventing grace, "stirs up the spirits" of some, who thus thankfully embrace the proffered blessing, and are mercifully saved.

V. 7—11. Some of the vessels of the temple had been cut in pieces by the victors, (2 Kings xxiv. 14 :) but the most valuable had been providentially preserved through all the succeeding revolutions, and were now ordered by Cyrus to be restored to Sheshbazzar ; and so were at last brought back to Jerusalem, and again employed in the service of the sanctuary.—It is generally agreed, that the ark was lost or destroyed, when the temple was burnt : and, it is likely, that by the absence of it, and the visible glory, God would signify he was withdrawing his presence from that house of stone, to dwell in the temple of Christ's body, who offered himself to God, and thereby put an end to these figurative sacrifices. (Bp. Patrick.)—The knives were used for slaying and preparing the sacrifices, and the vessels for receiving the blood, for the meat-offerings, and other similar purposes. (Marg. Ref.)—The sum total of the vessels here stated far exceeds the particular account given of them ; but it is supposed, that many spoons, tongs, &c. not before numbered, were included.—Sheshbazzar may signify joy in tribulation ; and it is supposed that this name was given, by the kings of Babylon, to the same person whom the Jews called Zerubbabel, which signifies a stranger at Babylon. He was the grandson of Jehoiachin by Salathiel, and the heir of the house of David : as such he was regarded by the conquerors ; he possessed authority over the captive Jews ; and he was authorized, and willingly undertook, to lead those back, who now returned to rebuild the city and temple. (Marg. Ref. ii. 2. iii. 2. s. v. 14—16. Note, Jer. xxii. 28—30.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

As the architect progressively executes every part of the plan which he had delineated, till the whole design is completed ; so God in his providence performs in due order all the prophecies of his word : a great proportion of his great scheme has already been accomplished, and revolving ages will hasten the performance of all the rest, in the appointed periods.—Difficulties, which to us appear impossibilities, form no obstruction to Omnipotence. The Lord our God turneth the hearts of kings, as he doth the rivers of waters, which way he pleases : he subverts the deep-laid foundations of mighty empires, and establishes others in their room ; he lays aside the executioners of his vengeance, when their work is done, to make way for the instruments of his mercy : he gives, as he sees good, abilities, success, and authority ; and then secretly disposes men's mind to fulfil his word and do his will, and over-rules every thing for the benefit of his church, and of those who trust in him.—When he has work to do, they, whom he hath chosen to perform it, find their minds enlarged to entertain noble designs ; and, forgetful of their former habits, maxims, and superstitions, they serve his cause with all the authority which he hath conferred on them. Even they, who live and die strangers to the power of true religion, have often received deep convictions of "his eternal power and Godhead," and of their obligations and accountableness to "the God of heaven : " and under these convictions, they have made public and honourable confessions to him, have shewn for a time a regard for his authority, and have done many and great things for his cause and people ; speaking the language of piety, and being very useful to his worshippers : and yet at last they have relapsed into their former idolatry or ungodliness !—If such things have heretofore been done in fulfilling former prophecies ; the Lord is equally able and faithful to provide for the ruin of Antichrist, the conversion of the Jews, and the calling of all the Gentiles into his church.—In every useful undertaking, all should endeavour to be helpful ; and it bodes well, when princes and ministers take the lead, and give the example, in arduous and self-denying services. Some may be useful by their labours, some with their substance, and all by their prayers, to the common cause of truth and righteousness : and whatever is done willingly, and from love to God and his people, will be graciously accepted.—No time should be lost in sitting about those duties which belong to us in our several stations : and in stirring up others to abound in love and good works, we should give them an example.—That which is devoted to the service, is entrusted to the protection, of the Lord : and he will especially keep and preserve those, whom he hath "purified unto himself to be a peculiar people, zealous of good works." Even the very hairs of their head are all numbered ; and whatever tribulations they may pass through, no true believer shall perish ; but they shall all be forthcoming, at that day "when the Lord shall make up his jewels."—Salvation is fully prepared in Jesus Christ ; "all power in heaven and earth is given unto him ;" the proclamation of the gospel is general to every creature. But pride, worldly lusts, and unbelief, render us

They, who prefer carnal things, to the eternal blessings which he confers, will find, that their pride and love of sin will aggravate, and not excuse, the guilt of their unbelief. They, who feel a willingness to accept of what they have heretofore neglected, may come with encouragement, for Jesus "will in no wise cast them out." And if we by grace have been enabled to receive this salvation, and to bring forth the fruits of it; whilst we take the comfort of it, we shall give him the glory, and offer our fervent prayers, that others also may "be made willing in the day of his power."

the same; and the sum total is computed in both exactly alike. Yet there are several considerable variations, in names and numbers, which cannot be readily and satisfactorily accounted for. The most material of these are marked in the margin.—It is probable, that Ezra, when he wrote his history, many years after the return of the Jews to Babylon, copied this register from the public records without alteration.—Some think, that several who had their names inserted in the register, altered their minds, or died before the company arrived at Jerusalem; and that others came forward, so as to complete the same number in all. (Note, Neh. vii. 5, 6, 73.)—The word children is sometimes used for the descendants from the several heads of families; at other times for those, whose ancestors belonged to the cities mentioned in connexion with them.

V. 30. The children of Magbish are not named in Nehemiah.

V. 36-39. A very large number of priests went up to Jerusalem on this occasion: yet only four, out of the twenty-four courses instituted by David, seem to have returned: at least only four of the persons, after whom the courses were first named, as here mentioned; namely, Jedaiah, Immer, Harim, and Pashur, who was the son of Malchijah, (1 Chr. ix. 22. xxiv. 7-9, 14:) and his name appears to have stood in the public records, as head of his course, instead of his father's. The priests, however, were afterwards divided into twenty-four courses, under the ancient names, in order to preserve regularity in their ministrations.

V. 40-42. The small number of Levites, compared with the multitude of priests, who returned from Babylon, is very remarkable. Perhaps during a course of years, having no employment in their appropriate services, they generally entered on other occupations; and felt little inducement or inclination to leave them, in order to be the assistants of the priests, in the present desolated condition of Judah and Jerusalem. But it may be supposed, that the priests, having a more sacred and honourable office, were reluctant to be deprived of it, and more ready to resume the exercise of their ministry.

45 The children of ^dLebanah, the children of Hagabah, the children of Akkub, 46 The children of Hagab, the children of ^eShalmai, the children of Hanan, 47 The children of Giddel, the children of Gahar, the children of Reaiah,

48 The children of Rezin, the children of Nekoda, the children of Gazzam, 49 The children of Uzza, the children of ^fPaseah, the children of Besai,

50 The children of Asnah, the children of ^gMehunim, the children of Nephusim,

52 The children of ^hBazluth, the children of Medida, the children of Harsha,

53 The children of Barkos, the children of Sisera, the children of ⁱThamah, 54 The children of Nezhiah, the children of Hattipha.

55 ¶ The children of ^jSolomon's servants: the children of Sotai, the children of Sophereth, the children of ^kPeruda,

58 All the ^oNethinims, and the children of Solomon's servants, were three hundred ninety and two.

59 And these were they which went up from Telmelah, ^pTel-harsa, Cherub, Addan, and Immer; but they could not shew their father's house, and their ^qseed, whether they were of Israel:

60 The children of Delaiah, the children of Tobiah, the children of Nekoda, six hundred fifty and two.

61 ¶ And of the children of the priests: the children of Habaiah, the children of Koz, the children of Barzillai; which took a wife of the daughters of ^aBarzillai the Gileadite, and was called after their name:

62 These sought their register among those that were reckoned by genealogy, but they were not found: ^btherefore ^cwere they, as polluted, put from the priesthood.

63 And ^dthe Tirshatha said unto them, that they ^eshould not eat of the most holy things, till there stood up a priest with ^fUrim and with Thummim.

64 ¶ The whole congregation together was ^gforty and two thousand three hundred and threescore, 65 Beside their ^hservants and their maids, of whom there were seven thousand three hundred thirty and seven: and there were among them ⁱtwo hundred singing men and singing women.

66 Their horses were seven hundred thirty and six; their mules, two hundred forty and five;

67 Their camels, four hundred thirty and five; their asses, six thousand seven hundred and twenty.

68 ¶ And some of the chief of the fathers, when they came to the house of the LORD which is at Jerusalem, ^joffered freely for the house of God to set it up ^kin his place:

69 They gave after their ability, unto ^lthe treasure of the work, threescore and one thousand drams of gold, and five thousand pound of silver, and one hundred priests' garments.

70 So ^mthe priests, and the Levites, and some of the people, and the singers, and the porters, and the Nethinims, dwelt in their cities, and all Israel in their cities.

V. 43—54. (Note, 1 Chr. ix. 2. Marg. Ref.)

V. 55—58. These were persons descended from the remains of the devoted Canaanites, who had been brought into bondage by Solomon; (Note, 1 Kings ix. 20—22;) and so their posterity were employed in menial services, perhaps about the sanctuary, along with the Nethinims: and though both the Nethinims and "the children of Solomon's servants," were of Gentile extraction, and not admitted to the privileges of Israelites; yet they seem to have been more ready to return to Jerusalem than the Levites were.

V. 61—63. Either Habaiah, or Koz, being of the sacerdotal family, married one of Barzillai's daughters; and his posterity perhaps thought their descent from him more honourable than their priestly character, and so neglected to preserve their genealogy. Yet, on their return from captivity, they desired to be admitted to the service of the sanctuary: but, not being able to trace their genealogy, they were excluded by the Tirshatha, (that is, the governor, or Zerubbabel;) until a high priest should arise with Urim and Thummim, who might, by immediate revelation from God, decide upon their case. (Marg. Ref.) But such a high priest was not vouchsafed under the second temple.

V. 64. The number of the several families amounts only to twenty-nine thousand eight hundred and eighteen; and those in Nehemiah to thirty-one thousand and eighty-nine: yet the sum total is in both said to be forty-two thousand three hundred and sixty, besides their servants. (Neh. vii. 66.) The surplus are supposed to have been Levites who could not produce their genealogy, and Israelites from the other tribes, who accompanied their brethren of Judah and Benjamin. 'It is remarkable that the two accounts' (of Ezra and Nehemiah) 'agree in the total amount; and the sum of the numbers, as separately detailed, will correspond; if to the 29,818, specified by Ezra, we add the 1,765 persons reckoned by Nehemiah, which Ezra has omitted: and on the other hand, to the 31,089 enumerated by Nehemiah, add the 494, which is an overplus in Ezra, not noticed by Nehemiah: both writers including in the sum total 10,777 of the mixed multitude, not particularized in the individual detail.'—'Prideaux attributes the difference to alterations made by Nehemiah, in compliance with changes, that had happened since the departure from Babylon.'—'The accounts unquestionably agreed, when they were received into the canon, except where there might be some cause for variation; and probably the differences that now exist have originated in the carelessness of the copyists.' (Gray's Key.)

V. 65. Among the servants were two hundred singing men and women, (or two hundred and forty-five, according to Nehemiah,) who probably were employed in families, to assist their mournings, or their thanksgivings. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 66, 67. How reduced and impoverished does Israel appear in this narrative, compared with the condition of the nation in the days of David and Solomon!—The number of asses, compared with that of the horses, shews in how general use asses were at that time: but horses, as belonging to the patriarchs, or their descendants, are not mentioned till the time of David.

V. 68—70. Under the Divine protection this company arrived safe at Jerusalem, without any memorable occurrence. They found the city and all around in ruins, and it seems, the neighbouring cities totally unoccupied. These they rebuilt as well as they could, and dwelt in them for the present. (Notes, 1 Chr. ix. 2. Neh. vii. 73.) But the house of God was uppermost in their thoughts; and it seems that their oblations to it were made, before they separated to seek habitations, or subsistence. The whole amounted to nearly eighty thousand pounds sterling, besides the priests' garments; which was a considerable sum for them to contribute in their present poverty: but probably their brethren who staid behind, offered part of it; as the sacrifices and the burning of incense at the temple, were for the benefit of those, who worshipped at, or towards, that typical residence of the God of Israel. (Notes, 1 Kings viii. 28—30. Dan. vi. 10, 11.)—The whole seems to have been conducted with much harmony and regularity. (Note, Neh. vii. 70—72.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The Lord will honour those, who renounce their own ease or interest for the sake of his service and glory: and all, who avail themselves of the proclamation of liberty and salvation sent in the gospel, have their names recorded in the book of life; whilst others shall be written in the dust of oblivion or disgrace. Those orders of men, which have on one occasion been most zealous in the cause of God, may at another time become most negligent; and the reverse is often exemplified: "for the first shall be last, and the last first;" (36—42. 2 Chr. xxix. 34.)—They, who are ashamed of religion, or undervalue their external relation to God, in times of reproach, persecution, or distress; will have no benefit from it, when it becomes honourable and profitable: and they who have no evidence, that they are, by regeneration, spiritual priests unto God through Jesus Christ, have no right to the peculiar comforts and privileges of Christians. But there are many cases, of which we cannot judge, but must leave them to be determined at the second coming of our High Priest, whose illuminations and perfections are unchangeable and eternal.—They, who "seek first the kingdom of God," his favour, and his glory, will have all things else added to them: they will readily offer according to their ability for the house and service of God: and "where there is a willing mind, it is accepted according to what a man hath, and not according to what he hath not." (Notes, 2 Cor.

The Jews re-assemble at Jerusalem, build an altar, offer sacrifices, keep the feast of tabernacles, and prepare to rebuild the temple, 1-7. Under the direction of Zerubbabel and Joshua, the foundation is laid, amidst the rejoicing of some, and the weeping of others, 8-13.

NOTES.

CHAP. III. V. 1. It is probable, that the Jews began their journey in the beginning of the spring; and that they did not reach Jerusalem till three or four months after. (vii. 9.) They employed a short time in providing habitations and necessities for their families; and then they all met together in the seventh month. This was the season of the first solemnities which occurred after their arrival. On the first day the feast of trumpets was kept; the great day of atonement followed on the tenth; and the feast of tabernacles began on the fifteenth. All these they seem to have observed with great devotion. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Lev. xxiii. 24-43.)

V. 2, 3. (Marg. Ref. Notes, i. 7-11. ii. 2.) The Jews built the altar upon the same foundation, and therefore of the same size, with that of Solomon. Probably it was formed of rough stones, with a large hearth of brass on the top. (Ex. xx. 24, 25.) So large an altar, built all of brass, would have cost a sum far beyond their present circumstances. (Note, 2 Chr. iv. 1.)—The fear of the tribes or nations around them, whom they knew to be their enemies, did not induce the people to take arms, or to erect fortifications, but to prepare an altar and to offer sacrifices; by which they put themselves under the protection of God. (Notes, Josh. v. 2-10.)

V. 4. (Notes, Num. xxix. 12-37.) 'Which put this poor people to great expenses: but their piety was now such, that they valued nothing so much as the service of God.' (Bp. Patrick.)

V. 5, 6. Some of the people had come to Jerusalem, and had prepared the altar, before the first day of the seventh month. And the rest being assembled as one man, they then began their solemn worship, with the daily sacrifices, those appointed for the new-moons, and those for the feast of trumpets. Besides those sacrifices which were expressly appointed, many "willingly offered free-will offerings unto the Lord." (Marg. Ref.)—Until the temple was completed, it is likely they had a tabernacle near the altar, where the sacred vessels and treasures were deposited and attended. (Note, 1 Chr. ix. 19-21.)

V. 7. It seems, that the Jews were authorized by Cyrus to cut as much timber in Lebanon as they wanted; but the Zidonians and Tyrians would expect to be paid for their labour; and they would prefer corn, wine, and oil, to money. (Notes, vi. 3-5. 1 Kings v. 9-11. Marg. Ref.)

ing to the grant that they had of Cyrus king of Persia.

8 ¶ Now in the second year of their coming unto the house of God at Jerusalem, in the second month, began ^aZerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and Jeshua the son of Jozadak, and the remnant of their brethren the priests and the Levites, and all they that were come out of the captivity unto Jerusalem; and appointed the Levites, from ^btwenty years old and upward, to set forward the work of the house of the LORD.

9 Then stood Jeshua ^cwith his sons and his brethren, Kadmiel and his sons, the sons of ^dJudah, ^etogether, to set forward the workmen in the house of God: the sons of ^fHenadad, ^gwith their sons and their brethren the Levites.

10 And when the builders laid the foundation of the temple of the LORD, they ^hset the priests in their apparel with ⁱtrumpets, and the Levites ^jthe sons of Asaph with cymbals, to praise the LORD, ^kafter the ordinance of David king of Israel.

11 And ^lthey sang together by course in praising and giving thanks unto the LORD; ^mbecause ⁿhe is good, for his mercy ^oendureth for ever toward Israel. And all the people ^pshouted with a great shout, when they praised the LORD, ^qbecause the foundation of the house of the LORD was laid.

12 But ^rmany of the priests and Levites, and chief of the fathers, ^swho were ancient men, that had seen the first house, ^twhen the foundation of this house was laid before their eyes, wept with a loud voice: and many shouted aloud for joy:

13 So that the people could not discern the noise of the shout of joy from the noise of the weeping of the people: for the people ^ushouted with a loud shout, and ^vthe noise was heard afar off.

V. 8-11. The people did all that they could, during the winter, in making preparations for building the temple; though immense labour must have been requisite, in clearing the ground for the foundation, as well as in providing materials. In the second month, however, of the second year, or in a little more than a year after they left Babylon, Zerubbabel and Jeshua, having appointed the priests and Levites to attend in their courses, laid the foundation of the temple, with songs of praise and thanksgiving to the Lord. (Notes, 1 Chr. xvi. 37-43. xxiii. 3-6. 25-27. 2 Chr. v. 11-13. xxxiv. 12.)—Thus, after their long afflictions, they were encouraged again to sing, "The Lord is good, for his mercy endureth for ever towards Israel;" as the prophet Jeremiah had foretold. (Note, Jer. xxxiii. 11.)

V. 12, 13. The Jews who had heard of the temple and its solemn worship, and the blessing and comfort which it had been to their fathers, but had not seen it, were elated with joy that they were once more to have a temple, as the symbol of the Lord's presence, and his favour to them. On the other hand, the old men, who remembered the splendour of the former temple, (which had now been destroyed about fifty-three years,) were led by the recollection of past prosperity, to vent their regret in copious tears and loud lamentations. By this they undervalued their present mercies; and it was the more reprehensible, as the priests and Levites, and chief persons, led the way in this unseasonable sorrow, so as to discourage their brethren, and interrupt their fervent praises. (Notes, Zech. iv. 8-10. Marg. Ref.)—The temple itself is supposed to have been rebuilt of the same dimensions as before; but probably it was formed chiefly with the old stones, and with inferior workmanship; and it was not overlaid with gold, as Solomon's temple had been: neither was it, for a long time at least, surrounded with such magnificent out-buildings. Moreover, the ark of the covenant, the tables of the law, and the mercy-seat, were irrecoverably lost; and it is uncertain whether any thing was substituted in their stead: no visible glory, it is said, now appeared in the most holy place; there were no answers by Urim and Thummim; and no fire from heaven to consume the sacrifices, but common fire was used for that purpose. (Marg. Ref.) These and other circumstances seemed to indicate, that the Lord was not with them as in times past: but they really shewed, that the types were waxing old, and ready to vanish away, by the coming of the great antitype. (Notes, Jer. iii. 16-18. Heb. viii. 7-13.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It is true wisdom to prefer the service of God to our most urgent temporal concerns.—The greater difficulties, and the more formidable enemies, we are exposed to, the more evidently we need the friendship and assistance of God; and we should be proportionably earnest and constant in seeking, and serving him according to his word, through the great atonement of our heavenly Advocate.—They, who rule over others, should go before them in every good work; and we should serve the Lord, as well as our circumstances will permit,

NOW when "the adversaries of Judah and Benjamin heard that the "children of the captivity builded the temple unto the LORD God of Israel;

2 Then they came to Zerubbabel, and to the chief of the fathers, and said unto them, "Let us build with you: for we seek your God, as ye do; and "we do sacrifice unto him, since the days of "Esar-haddon king of "Assur, which brought us up hither.

3 But Zerubbabel, and Jeshua, and the rest of the chief of the fathers of Israel, said unto them, "Ye have nothing to do with us to build an house unto our God; but we ourselves together will build unto the LORD God of Israel, as "king Cyrus the king of Persia hath commanded us.

4 Then the people of the land "weakened the hands of the people of Judah, and "troubled them in building,

5 And "hired counsellors against them, to frustrate their purpose, all the days of Cyrus king of Persia, even until the reign of "Darius king of Persia.

though we cannot attain to all that is desirable. That, which is expended in obedience to his commandment, will never impoverish us or our families: we should therefore rather save in any thing, than grudge the expense of works of piety and charity, which is like sowing the seed of a future harvest. (Notes, Prov. xi. 24, 25. Ec. xi. 1, 2. Luke vi. 37, 38. Acts xi. 27-30. P. O. 19-30. latter part. 2 Cor. ix. 7-15. P. O. 7-15.)—Every day brings its peculiar duties: these will not be grievous, but pleasant, to the true servant of the Lord; and when zeal and love prevail, he will be looking out for opportunities of usefulness, and cheerfully bringing his free-will offerings.—Unanimity, activity, and promptitude, in contriving and executing good designs, will surmount many difficulties, and perform great things in a little time; especially if all orders in society concur in their proper places.—The trumpet of the gospel not only warns the sinner to flee from the wrath to come, but animates the believer to his work.—Every recent token of the lovingkindness of the Lord should remind us to celebrate his former goodness and mercy, and to anticipate future blessings: for, notwithstanding our chastisements and distrustful murmurs, "the LORD is good, and his mercy endureth for ever towards Israel." The conviction of this truth, and the consideration of our own unworthiness, should enlarge our hearts with hope and gratitude, at every renewed token of his favour; and render us joyful at our work, and even amidst our trials. But we are too prone to bemoan lost comforts, disappointments, and scanty possessions; to foster discontent, impatience, and distrust; and thus to mar our own enjoyment of present mercies, to interrupt the joy of others, and to refuse our God that praise which is due unto his name. Against this propensity we should continually watch and pray. Even when we compare the present low state of true piety, and the small success of the gospel, with those primitive times when "great grace was upon all" the company of believers, and "the LORD daily added to the church such as should be saved; or when we lament declensions in congregations, churches, or nations: we should be careful not to undervalue the present goodness of our God; to "despise the day of small things;" or to weaken our own hands, and discourage the hearts of others, in seeking a more signal and effectual blessing.—In this world joys and sorrows will be blended, for it is a mixed state: hereafter there will be a complete separation; in one place there will be fulness of joy and pleasures for evermore, in the other there will be eternal weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth. May "Jesus deliver us from the wrath to come," and prepare us for his glorious and eternal felicity; "that where he is, there we may be also."

NOTES.

CHAP. IV. V. 1. The Cutheans, or Samaritans, who had been planted in the land of Israel by Esar-haddon, had perhaps encroached upon the countries belonging to the Jews; and doubtless they were envious of the favour shewn them by the king of Persia: and thus they took occasion to become their determined enemies. But they were chiefly influenced by the enmity which the seed of the serpent bears to the true church of God; arising from contrariety of character, and hatred to the holiness of God, as displayed in his holy law, ordinances, truths, and people. And they might also fear, lest the establishment of the true worship of JEHOVAH should expose their spurious religion to disgrace. (Notes, 2 Kings xvii. 24-41. Neh. xiii. 23-30.)

V. 2. We seek, &c. The Samaritans professed to worship the God of Israel: yet they were not guided by his word, but by their own fancies or traditions, in the service which they rendered to him; and they worshipped, with him, their tutelar deities: so that their religion was a mixture of idolatry, superstition, and ignorance; far worse than it was when our Lord himself declared, "that they knew not what they worshipped." 13 Be it known now unto the king, that "if this

V. 3. The Samaritans were neither Israelites by birth, nor yet true proselytes; so that the law of God forbade all coalition with them: neither were they included in the decree of Cyrus. Probably, the rulers of the Jews perceived, that they only meant to insinuate themselves, in order to obtain pre-eminence, foment dissensions, introduce their corruptions, prejudice the minds of the people against their rulers, and in short to seize the temple, when built, for their own use; or to retard, injure, and put "stop to the work. It was, however, plain, that they did not mean to unite cordially with them, in the worship of the true God alone, according to his written word: and therefore nothing but mischief could have resulted from so unnatural an alliance.

V. 4-6. This opposition of the Samaritans is supposed to have begun, soon after the foundation of the temple was laid. During the remainder of the reign of Cyrus for almost five years, however, they did not openly oppose a work which that prince had commanded: but they discouraged the people, and perhaps intercepted their materials for building; and by bribing counsellors to oppose their application to the ministers of Cyrus, for supplies or protection, they greatly obstructed the design. This would be more easily done, as Daniel, the powerful friend of the Jews, seems to have died about this time. (Note, Dan. vi. 25-28.)—Cambyses, the son of Cyrus, called here, (as it is probably supposed,) Ahasuerus, reigned above seven years; and was a very weak and vicious prince: but regard to his father's memory, it is probable, prevented his attending to the accusations brought by the Samaritans against the Jews.

V. 7-9. Upon the death of Cambyses, Smerdis the Magian usurped the throne; and as no other king reigned in Persia after Cambyses, and before Darius Hystaspis, under whom the temple was finished, he must be the Artaxerxes here mentioned: (Note, vi. 13-15:) unless, as some think, Artaxerxes is only another name for Ahasuerus. To him, however, the rulers of the Samaritans wrote a letter, which Ezra seems to have copied from the records of Persia. (Marg. Ref.) It was written at first in Syriac, or Chaldee: but perhaps it was entered into the records in Persian; so that Ezra, when he extracted it, again translated it into Syriac; and therefore it stands in the original Scriptures in that language, as does all that follows to the end of the sixth chapter.—Bishlam, Mithredath, and Tabeel seem to have been the principal persons, who counselled the people to send this letter; and Rehum and Shimshai, it is probable, drew it up.

V. 10. Asnapper, &c. Probably Asnapper was the name by which Esar-haddon was known, in the eastern parts of the Assyrian empire: (2. 2 Kings xix. 37:) or he was a great captain, employed by Esar-haddon in this transaction.

At such a time. The date of the letter seems to have followed in the records, but it was omitted by the transcriber, as it were, with an et cetera.

V. 12. The rebellious, &c. (Marg. Ref.) After God in his righteous judgments had reduced Judah to subjection under the kings of Babylon, the Jews certainly shewed a very obstinate and treacherous spirit of rebellion; they created their new masters a great deal of trouble, and they provoked them to their own destruction. But in so doing, they transgressed the commandments of their law, by violating their own solemn oaths and engagements. (Notes, 15-19. 2 Kings xxiv. 1. 20. xxv. 6, 7. 2 Chr. xxxvi. 13. Ez. xvii. 11-21.)—No attempt seems at this time to have been made to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem; and the Samaritans were not in reality so much displeased at any thing, as at the building of the temple, though they artfully avoided the mention of it.

V. 13-16. David and Solomon had reigned over all the countries from the river Euphrates, to the river of Egypt: but this was long before the commencement of the Babylonish, or Persian, monarchies. And after the death of Solomon, their successors had been confined within much narrower city be builded, and the walls set up again, then will they not "pay "toll, tribute, and custom, and so thou shalt endamage the "revenue of the kings.

14 Now because we "have maintenance from the king's palace, "and it was not meet for us to see the king's dishonour, therefore have we sent and certified the king;

15 That search may be made in the book of the records of thy fathers: so shalt thou find in the book of the records, and know, that "this city is a rebellious city, and hurtful unto kings and provinces, and that they have "moved sedition "within the same of old time: "for which cause was this city destroyed.

16 We certify the king, that if this city be builded again, and the walls thereof set up; by this means "thou shalt have no portion on this side the river.

17 ¶ Then sent the king an answer unto Rehum the chancellor, and to Shimshai the scribe, and to the rest of their "companions that dwell in Samaria, and unto the rest beyond the river, "Peace, and "at such a time.

18 The letter which ye sent unto us hath been plainly read before me.

19 And "I commanded, and "search hath been made, "and it is found that this city of old time hath limits. The Samaritans, however, aimed to insinuate a jealousy into the mind of the king of Persia, that the Jews intended to claim, and seize upon, all those regions, and hold the whole, as independent on the kings of Persia; than which nothing could be more groundless and absurd. All their offence seems to have been, that they had prepared to defend themselves against their enemies, whilst acting under the authority of Cyrus. The Samaritans cloaked their slander and enmity, under the fair pretence of fidelity and gratitude: the ruling persons among them were maintained by revenues from the court of Persia; and it was not meet for them to see the king's dishonour, and the loss which would accrue to him, if the Jews were allowed to go on with their undertaking. (Notes v. 3—17.)

Fathers. (15.) So they called the kings, who had reigned before Artaxerxes, over those countries.

V. 17—24. The king of Persia found by the records, that Jerusalem had been the seat of government for powerful princes, many ages before; and that afterwards rebellion and sedition had been made in it: and, as thus much was true in the letter of the Samaritans, full credit was given them for all that they advanced, concerning the progress and intentions of the Jews, and the consequences of their proceedings; though nothing could be more improbable, false, and malicious! A commission therefore was sent back, in which the temple was not mentioned; (for though that created jealousy in the minds of the Samaritans, it was little regarded by the king of Persia:) (Note, 12.) but they were ordered "to cause them to cease;" this was sufficient for their purpose; and without delay they forcibly put a stop to the work.—The usurpation of Smerdis did not continue a whole year; so that their commission was soon vacated: but the Jews, being greatly intimidated, and not so zealous as they had been, the work ceased till the second year of Darius, who, having assisted in killing the usurper, was advanced to the throne in his stead. (Note, v. 1, 2.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—6. Every vigorous and successful attempt to revive true religion, will excite the opposition of Satan, and of the children of disobedience in whom he works. Indeed all ungodly men despise or hate holiness: yet they, who do not profess much regard to religion, commonly treat pious persons with mere neglect, or ridicule; but hypocrites and heretics have always been the most unwearied and cruel enemies of the true church of God. The labours and lives of his servants undermine their reputation, affront their pride, and expose their hypocrisy: and their enmity is thus imbittered by envy and resentment. Sometimes indeed they seem desirous of being admitted to the fellowship of believers; and avow themselves to be of the same sentiments, and to be minding the same things. But they only want to insinuate themselves, that they may gain pre-eminence, and manage every thing for their own purposes. These "false brethren, unawares crept in," "bring in privily damnable heresies," form parties and excite contentions; introduce their own coalition betwixt the world and religion; mislead and prejudice some and pervert others; lessen the influence of pious persons, and render the minds of the people disaffected towards them: and, whilst their lives disgrace the cause, their insinuations eat as doth a canker, till an internal decay corrodes the very vitals of piety, in every church where they obtain admission, and preserve their authority. Let then all the friends of truth and holiness beware of such characters, and let them withdraw from them: "by their fruits ye shall know them;" and let no plausible pretences, or hopes of support from their superior rank or wealth, bribe Christians to admit them "to build with them," unless they mean to build a Babel, instead of a temple. It is true, if you will not have their friendship, you must expect their embittered resentment, which is more dreaded, but is far less dangerous. By insinuations, objections, and discouragements, they weaken the hands of the Lord's people, and induce them to suspect or dislike their faithful ministers, or their lawful rulers; and by slanders and reproaches, they attempt to prejudice others against them. But it is no wonder, that we cannot enumerate all their practices, when they have the old serpent for their prompter, and spare neither trouble nor expense, nor crimes, to accomplish their design. For the same part is acting over and over again, from age to age, with circumstantial variations; and the less we are aware of it, the more we are in danger of being injured by it.

THEN the prophets, "Haggai the prophet, and "Zechariah the son of Iddo, prophesied unto the

V. 7—24. The gates of hell, in directly assaulting the church of Christ, often labour to excite rulers to suppress his truths and ordinances, by statutes and penal sanctions. To this end ungodly men bestow great pains to obtain the ear of princes. If they find them disposed to countenance pious Christians, they use underhand methods to poison their minds with prejudices and suspicions. But when weak and wicked kings succeed to the thrones, that have been filled by wiser men; these slanderers venture to speak more plainly: and professing vast loyalty and attachment, and even pleading the ties of gratitude and conscience, they pour in their false accusations, and petition for leave to persecute.—It is an old slander, that "Jerusalem is a rebellious and bad city," and that the prosperity of the church would be injurious to kings and provinces: for, "the accuser of the brethren" knows how prevalent such considerations are with the princes of this world. Yet nothing can be more false: for, true godliness teaches us to honour and obey the king; to "submit to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake;" to pay tribute, and "to render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's;" to be upright, peaceable, and blameless; and even to fulfil the oath or engagement which we have entered into to our own hurt: it admits of only a single exception; namely, where the command of God requires one thing, and the law of the land another, we must obey God rather than man, and patiently submit to the consequences.—But it must be allowed, that ambitious and turbulent men have often disgraced the cause of God, by their usurpations, seditions, rebellions, treacheries, and perjuries: real Christians also have been seduced into inconsistent practices: and "oppression," which "maketh a wise man mad," hath sometimes excited them to use unwarranted weapons. A few instances of this kind, standing on record, whilst the blameless lives and patient sufferings of thousands are unnoticed and forgotten, serve through revolving ages as a pretext, by which malignant enmity misleads worldly policy. All who love the gospel, should therefore walk circumspectly, avoiding all appearance of evil, especially in this particular, lest the church of God and posterity should suffer through their misconduct: for the whole body will be condemned without hearing, if a few individuals act improperly. (Notes, Rom. xiii. 1, 2.)—Indeed we cannot behave so quietly, and endeavour to serve God and to promote religion so unexceptionably, but our endeavours will be ascribed to ambition or avarice, and we shall be suspected of harbouring the basest intentions. For, kings and princes are seldom able to discover the truth, in such causes, even when disposed to enquire after it. Surrounded with flatterers and interested dependents, they must see with other men's eyes, and receive every information, concerning those whom their courtiers dislike, with a false colouring: and as they are too generally careless about religion, if not prejudiced against it, Satan and his emissaries seldom find much difficulty, in using them as the tools of their persecuting enmity. These considerations should teach us to count our cost; that we may be prepared for all events, and not be too easily discouraged or made remiss, as we are apt to be, upon every appearance of opposition: they should excite our gratitude for our peculiar privileges, in this favoured land, and teach us to place our dependence on that God, who hath all hearts in his hands, and not on the mutable decrees of princes and senates. We should also be in haste to seize on every opportunity of doing good; even as the adversaries of the church do in their mischievous devices: for, as we receive all from our wise, gracious, and righteous God; it is not meet that we should quietly witness his dishonour, or neglect any method by which we may glorify his name, and promote his cause in the world.

11 And thus they returned us answer, saying, ^a"We are the servants of the God of heaven and earth, and build the house that was builded these many years ago, ^b"which a great king of Israel builded and set up.

12 But ^cafter that our fathers had provoked the God of heaven unto wrath, ^dhe gave them ^einto the hand of Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon, the Chaldean, who destroyed this house, and carried the people away into Babylon.

13 But ^f"in the first year of Cyrus the king of Babylon, ^gthe same king Cyrus made a decree to build this house of God.

14 And ^hthe vessels also of gold and silver of the house of God, which Nebuchadnezzar took out of the temple, that was in Jerusalem, and brought them into the temple of Babylon, those did Cyrus ⁱthe king take out of the temple of Babylon, and they were delivered unto ^jone, whose name was ^k"Sheshbazzar, ^lwhom he had made ^mgovernor;

15 And said unto him, Take these vessels, go, carry them into the temple that is in Jerusalem, and ⁿlet the house of God be builded in his place.

16 Then came the same ^o"Sheshbazzar, ^pand laid the foundation of the house of God, which is in Jerusalem: and since that time even until now, hath it been in building, and ^qyet ^rit is not finished.

17 Now therefore, if ^sit seem good to the king, ^tlet there be search made in the king's treasure-house, which is there at Babylon, whether it be ^uso, that ^va decree was made of Cyrus the king, to build this house of God at Jerusalem, and let the king send his pleasure to us concerning this matter.

NOTES.

CHAP. V. V. 1, 2. A great part of the book of Haggai, and the former part of Zechariah, refer to the events here recorded, and the reader will find his account in comparing them with the history.—The Jews resumed their work about fourteen years after the first opposition, given to them by the Samaritans; but within two or three years after they had been compelled to desist entirely from it. In the mean time they had rebuilt their own houses, without being in the least molested. It may be supposed that they had an altar and tabernacle, and kept up their stated worship; but they were persuaded, that it was not yet time to build the temple. For this neglect the Lord corrected them, and reproved them by the prophets, who came to "prophecy even unto them," or rather "against them." Their remonstrances excited the rulers and the people to resume the work; and their subsequent encouraging prophecies greatly helped them in accomplishing it. (Notes, Hag. i. 1-13. Zech. iii. 1-7. iii. 4-10.)

V. 3. It is probable, that the governors of Samaria had been changed, on the accession of Darius, for men of greater temper and impartiality. The "companions," here mentioned with the governors, seem to have been some of the chief persons of the nation, who formed the council. Excited, however, by the envy and jealousy of the Samaritans, they interfered, as soon as the Jews resumed the building of the temple.—This wall. The wall about the temple seems to be meant. (Notes, Neh. i. 3. iii. 12-16. iv. 1-3. Dan. ix. 25-27.)

V. 4. Then, &c. It is uncertain whether these are the words of the governors of Samaria enquiring of the Jews the names of their rulers, who presided over the work, (10;) or those of the workmen, referring the enquirers to Zerubbabel and Jeshua for information.—Ezra may fairly be supposed to have inserted the words of the record without alteration: so that the first person plural neither proves that he was then at Jerusalem, nor yet that he was not the writer of the history.

V. 5. (Marg. Ref.) The Lord so watched over his people, that the Samaritans, though full of enmity, were restrained from using violence to obstruct the work: and he gave them so many encouragements, in his providence and by his word, that they were not terrified from proceeding; till at length the matter having been referred to Darius, a favourable answer was obtained. (Notes, Hag. ii. 1-19. Zech. i. 12-21.)

V. 6-17. It is probable, that this epistle likewise was copied from the public records, and interpreted into the Chaldee language: but it forms an entire contrast to the malevolent, slanderous, and disingenuous letter of the foregoing chapter. (Notes, iv. 10-16.) It fairly stated facts to the king; and the writers merely desired to know his pleasure, after proper search had been made. The ingenuous account also, which the Jews gave of their nation, and the cause of its calamities, (which Tatnai and his associates faithfully stated to Darius,) is worthy of observation and of imitation.—Sheshbazzar, &c. (16.)

Hence it is evident, that Zerubbabel and Sheshbazzar are only two names of the same person. (Notes, i. 7-11. Zech. iv. 4-10.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The enemies of the church are active, powerful, and malicious, and, alas, its friends too often dispirited and negligent: yet the Lord will not suffer his cause to be run down, but will raise up instruments to revive and carry on his work.—It is the business of the ministers of God to warn, exhort, encourage, and direct all orders in society to attend to their several duties: when this is properly performed, it will be found the most effectual means of forwarding reformation, and the power of godliness: and humble and pious men, in the most exalted stations, will deem themselves helped, by the faithful labours and animated remonstrances of those, who really declare to them the word of God.—Whilst professed Christians are satisfied with forms, and attentive mainly to their secular interests and accommodations, opposition may seem to be slain: but when they bestir themselves to do the work, and seek the glory, of God, it will soon be found that it was not dead, but merely asleep. Nothing, however, can harm those whom the Lord protects, or cause the work of those to cease whom he employs. He finds other employment for some opposers, he restrains others by the moderation of their superiors; some are removed by death or by revolutions in governments; and others are softened or changed, as it seemeth good to Him "who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will."—There are men who have no true religion, yet are possessed of equity, candour, and generosity: and these qualities entitle them to our respect, though they will not justify them in the sight of God.—A fair statement of facts forms the honest man's best method of pleading a good cause.—The servants of the God of heaven need not, and must not, be ashamed of so great and good a Master; and it seems at first sight strange, that they should ever be tempted to so preposterous a crime.—Those religious peculiarities, which ignorant slanderers deem novel or singular, may boast an antiquity beyond all other sentiments or observances in the world; and have been maintained by the wisest, greatest, and most excellent men who ever lived upon earth.—Whilst we continue in this world, we shall always have to confess, that our sins have provoked the God of heaven unto wrath; and that all our sufferings spring from this source, and all our comforts from his unmerited mercy.—We ought fully to acknowledge the favours which we have received from man; but should generally be silent as to the ill-treatment that we have met with. Even when we are exposed to censure, whilst the blame belongs to others, except the honour of God and the gospel requires it, it is seldom useful to vindicate ourselves.—The faithful worshippers of God are generally traduced, before they are persecuted; yet their cause demands nothing more than an impartial hearing, to obtain a favourable decision; and many princes have persecuted more from misinformation than from malice.

CHAP. VI.

Darius finds the decree of Cyrus, confirms it, allows out of his revenues the expenses of building the temple, and denounces penalties on all opposers, 1—12. The temple is finished and dedicated, and the passover is celebrated with great joy, 13—22.

THEN Darius the king made a decree, "and search was made in the house of the *rolls, where the treasures were *laid up in Babylon.

2 And there was found *at Achmetha, in the palace that is in the province of the Medes, a roll, and therein was a record thus written:

3 In *the first year of Cyrus the king, the same Cyrus the king made a decree concerning the house of God at Jerusalem, Let the house be builded, *the place where they offered sacrifices, and let the foundations thereof be strongly laid, *the height thereof threescore cubits, and the breadth thereof threescore cubits;

4 With *three rows of great stones, and a row of new timber: and let *the expenses be given out of the king's house:

5 And also let *the golden and silver vessels of the house of God, *which Nebuchadnezzar took forth out of the temple which is at Jerusalem, and brought unto Babylon, be restored, and *brought again unto the temple which is at Jerusalem, every one to his place, and place them in the house of God.

6 Now therefore, *Tatnai, governor beyond the river, Shethar-boznai, and *your companions the Apharsachites, which are beyond the river, *be ye far from thence:

7 Let the work of this house of God alone; let the governor of the Jews, and the elders of the Jews, build this house of God in his place.

8 Moreover *I make a decree what ye shall do to the elders of these Jews, for the building of this house of God: that of *the king's goods, even of the tribute beyond the river, forthwith expenses be given unto these men, that they be not *hindered.

9 And that which they have need of, both *young bullocks, and rams, and *lambs, for the burnt-offerings of the God of heaven, *wheat, *salt, wine, and oil,

NOTES.

CHAP. VI. V. 1, 2. The decree of Cyrus in favour of the Jews had been a matter of great notoriety, and not more than sixteen years had elapsed since it had been granted: but in the changes which had taken place, and the multiplicity of affairs which occurred continually in the government of so vast an empire, it is probable that its purport had been forgotten. When, however, it could not be found at Babylon, Darius, unwilling to decide in this cause without clear evidence, ordered it to be searched for at Achmetha, afterwards called Ecbatana, the chief city of Media; and there it was at length found, having probably been laid up in that city by Cyrus's orders.

V. 3. (Marg. Ref.) Some suppose that Cyrus did not allow the Jews to build the porch of the temple more than sixty cubits high, lest they should fortify it as a citadel; and that the sixty cubits in breadth included the chambers on each side the temple. Perhaps he permitted them to build the temple itself sixty cubits high and sixty wide, as well as sixty long; but they chose to build it of the same dimensions as their former temple: for it is generally agreed, that thus it was at last builded; and it is clearly proved, that the porch was raised to the same height.

V. 4. Expenses, &c. It is likely that the Jews had been deprived of this advantage, by the counsellors who were hired against them. (Notes, iii. 7. iv. 4—6.)

V. 5. (Notes, i. 1—4. 7—11.)

V. 6—12. Darius, in order to ingratiate himself with his subjects, shewed respect to the memory of Cyrus in every thing; and this might induce him to be more favourable to the Jews, when the decree of Cyrus was produced. But he seems to have been deeply convinced, that the God of the Jews was the God of heaven, who ought to be worshipped according to the law of Moses. His steady intention that sacrifices should be offered, at his expense, at Jerusalem, "of sweet savours to the God of heaven;" that the people of God "might pray for him and his sons;" and the expression, "the God, that hath caused his name to dwell there," (11.) shew, that he had been instructed in several important truths of religion, and had a conviction of his dependence upon God, and entertained high and honourable thoughts of him, and that he regarded the prayers of his worshippers as efficacious. (Marg. Ref.) The account indeed given of this transaction by the apocryphal Esdras is absurd, and inconsistent with facts; for Zerubbabel had been long at Jerusalem, before Darius granted this decree. (Esdras iv. 13—63. v.) But, probably, some pious Jews had access to the king, who had so explained the matter, as to give him these favourable sentiments, and to dispose him to the service assigned him by Providence. He thought that the continuance of his life, and the prosperity of his family, might be secured by the prayers of the Jews: but he seems not to have considered his future and unspeakably more important interests; and it does not appear, that his convictions had any abiding effect upon his own mind or conduct.—Knowing also the envy and malice of the adversaries of the Jews, Darius denounced a most dreadful punishment against those who should any more molest them: and he concluded his decree, with a most remarkable and almost prophetic execration against all kings and people, who should attempt to alter or destroy the temple, after it was built. (Marg. Ref. (Note, Zech. xiv. 1—3.) Thus the Samaritans, by opposing the Jews, most effectually served their interests; their governors, perceiving the king's inclinations, zealously concurred; and so the work was speedily completed.

V. 13—15. If we allow a year for the message of Tatnai to the court of Darius, the search made among the records, and all delays and obstructions; for the granting of the decree, and its publication in Judea; it will appear, that it was published just seventy years after the destruction of the temple by the Chaldeans. Zechariah, who prophesied at this time, mentions, that the people had kept annual fasts for the ruin of the city and temple, during seventy years; (Notes, Zech. vii. 1—7;) and this absolutely fixes these events to the time of Darius Hystaspis; for no other Darius reigned in Persia till many years afterwards.—The historian inserts the name of Artaxerxes with those of Cyrus and Darius, as concurring in this work; (14:) for though the temple was built before Artaxerxes came to the throne; yet probably it received great accessions of splendour and conveniency, under the government of Ezra and Nehemiah whom he patronized. (Notes vii. 1—5. Neh. i. 1.)—The temple was finished in rather more than four years, after the Jews returned to the work, when excited to it by Haggai and Zechariah. (Note, v. 1, 2;) in something more than two years after the decree of Darius had been published; and in about twenty years after the Jews returned from captivity. Cyrus reigned seven years; Cambyses, or Ahasuerus, seven; Artaxerxes, or Smerdis, one; and it is finished in the sixth of Darius. (Notes, iii. 8—11. iv. 4—6. 17—24.)

V. 16, 17. (Notes, Num. vii. 1—14. 1 Kings viii. 63—66.) The tribes of Judah and Benjamin, with the priests and Levites, which had constituted the kingdom of Judah, formed also the bulk of the people after the captivity. But numbers from the other tribes had been incorporated with them in the reign of Rehoboam, and afterwards; and many returned from Babylon; probably some of all the other tribes. As the nation sprang from the twelve sons of Jacob, and some of the descendants of each remained; they were still considered as consisting of twelve tribes, and called "the children of Israel," and a sin-offering was offered up for each of them. Doubtless the same reference to the twelve tribes took place in respect of the shew-bread, and the writing of their names on the

3 The son of Amariah, the son of Azariah, the son of Meraioth,

4 The son of Zeraiah, the son of Uzzi, the son of Bukki,

5 The son of Abishua, the son of ^aPhinehas, the son of ^bEleazar, the son of Aaron, the ^cchief priest:

6 This Ezra went up from Babylon; and he was a ready ^ascribe in ^athe law of Moses, which the LORD God of Israel had given: and the king ^agranted him all his request, ^aaccording to the hand of the LORD his God upon him.

7 And there went up some of ^athe children of Israel, and of the priests, and ^bthe Levites, and the ^csingers, and ^dthe porters, and the ^eNethinims, unto Jerusalem, in the seventh year of ^aArtaxerxes the king.

8 And he came to Jerusalem in the fifth month, which was in the seventh year of the king.

9 For upon the first day of the first month ^abegan he to go up from Babylon, and on the first day of the fifth month came he to Jerusalem, ^aaccording to the good hand of his God upon him.

10 For Ezra had ^aprepared his heart to seek ^bthe high priest's garments and breast-plate, as when they had been united under one government. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 18. Moses had given laws, concerning the ministry of the priests and Levites, with reference to the place which God would choose to place his name there; and subsequent events had proved Jerusalem to be that chosen place; but the courses of the priests and Levites were appointed by David. (Note, iii. 8-11. Marg. Ref.)

V. 19-21. It is probable, that the returned Jews had observed the passover, before the temple was finished: but not in so regular and solemn a manner, as at this time. (Notes, 2 Chr. xxx. xxxv.—Separated. (21.) Including such as had been fully proselyted to their religion.

V. 22. Of Assyria, &c. Darius, reigning over the country of Assyria, is here called the king of Assyria; though the Persian monarchy had succeeded to those of Assyria and Babylon.—The pious acknowledgment of God in all these transactions, as influencing the king to be kind to the Jews, and as thus making them joyful, is highly rational: though it has now almost sunk into disuse, even among professed Christians! (Notes, vii. 27, 28. 2 Kings v. 1. Prov. xxi. 1.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-12. Nothing but impartial and diligent investigation can give truth and innocence a decided advantage against lies, malice, and perjury; and much injustice may be committed merely through the indolence and inattention of magistrates.—Enmity, or rapacity, often intercepts the favours, which were intended for the people of God: but when his plan requires the interposition of princes, he can easily dispose them to use all diligence, to exert their authority, and to expend their treasures, in supporting his cause; and, for a time, these things have often been done by those, who would not give him their hearts, and never became his true worshippers! (Note, 2 Cor. viii. 1-5.)—Did kings know their true interests, even in this world, they would support the worship of God, and give liberty and protection to his people; that acceptable services might be rendered to his name throughout their dominions, and that many prayers might be daily offered up for them. We ought indeed to “pray for kings and all in authority,” whatever be their character and conduct: yet we are very apt to be remiss and formal in this service, till encouragement enlivens our desires and expectations: but when princes decidedly favour the cause of truth and righteousness, the hearts of pious Christians are enlarged with hopes, and they pray for them with greater earnestness. Their lives are then looked upon as a public advantage; and their persons, families, and undertakings, as well as their immortal souls, are daily recommended to the favour and blessing of the Almighty, by those “effectual fervent prayers of the righteous which avail much.”—Such as interrupt and injure the worshippers of God, when protected by the civil government, are desperate rebels both against God and the king: and even tolerating laws will be insufficient for the protection of the harmless servants of God, if the executive power do not vigorously interpose, to punish such as illegally assault them. But the Lord's protection alone can be entirely depended on; and he will destroy those persecutors who attempt to destroy his people, however powerful or numerous they may be.

V. 13-22. When the Lord turns the hearts of princes, to strengthen the hands of his servants in their work, inveterate enemies will be overawed; indifferent persons will become helpers; the commandment of the king will be regulated by the commandment of God; and good designs, which had been long interrupted, will be speedily completed.—The revival of public ordinances, where they had been obstructed, should excite our rejoicing because honour is thus ascribed to the Lord, and benefit accrues to the souls of men. Nor can the consideration of former sorrow, or of present meanness and poverty, mar the believer's joy and communion with his gracious God and Father.—When sinners are redeemed from the bondage of Satan, and separate themselves from the filthiness of their wicked connexions and practices; when they humbly seek the Lord, depending by faith on the atonement of the great Redeemer, attending on his ordinances, and observing his commandments, according to the duty of their place: they are children of captivity, who are set at liberty; and they shall be made joyful by his salvation; they shall be feasted at his table, and enjoy the light of his countenance, and he will be glorified in them, and rejoice over them to do them good for ever.—As nothing contributes more to the conversion of sinners, and to the purity and prosperity of the church, than the holiness and faithfulness of ministers; let us all unite in daily prayers to the Giver of every good and perfect gift, that they who bear that sacred character may live and ^apreach according to his holy word, and rightly and duly administer his holy sacraments.

NOTES.

CHAP. VII. V. 1-5. Artaxerxes, here mentioned, was evidently a different person from Darius, (vi. 14.) Xerxes, the son and successor of Darius, cannot be intended: for he reigned only twenty-one years; but Nehemiah, who was contemporary with Ezra, mentions the thirty-second year of Artaxerxes. (Neh. v. 14.) Artaxerxes Longimanus, the son and successor of Xerxes, must therefore be meant: and the seventh year of his reign was no less than seventy-nine years after the proclamation of Cyrus. The temple had been finished, and its worship restored within about twenty years: and nothing very memorable occurred during the subsequent fifty-nine or sixty years.—In all probability Zerubbabel, Jeshua, Haggai, and Zechariah were dead before this time: and the civil and ecclesiastical state of the Jews remained very unsettled, until this commission was granted to Ezra. (Note, Dan. ix. 25-27.) He was the son, that is, the descendant, of Seraiah, who had been dead above one hundred and thirty years; (2 Kings xxv. 18.) Many other persons are omitted in this abbreviated genealogy. (Note, 1 Chr. vi. 4-15. Marg. Ref.)

V. 6-10. Ezra had no doubt been educated to sacred learning, and had made great proficiency in it. Having, therefore, laid aside other employments and studies, and taking great delight in the Scriptures; and having an ardent zeal for the honour of God, and an earnest desire of being useful to his people, he applied himself with great assiduity to obtain the suitable qualifications: He “gave himself wholly thereunto,” and was careful to do, as well as to teach others, the statutes and judgments of God. (Notes, Deut. xxxiii. 10. 2 Chr. xvii. 7-9. xxx. 22. Neh. viii. 1-8. Mal. ii. 4-9.) Thus he became very eminent, and waited for an opportunity of rendering important service to his people; employing himself, probably, in the mean time, in instructing the Jews at Babylon, as circumstances allowed; and, being a man of learning, ingenuity, and reputation, the king became acquainted with him; so that Ezra requested and obtained from him a commission to go up to Jerusalem, that he might regulate all things which related to the worship of the God of heaven.—The language used on this subject is well deserving of our most serious attention. Every thing is ascribed to God, to whom belong “the kingdom, and the power, and the glory for ever:” yet the agency of instruments and second causes is properly noticed.—The word scribe here used, does not merely signify one who wrote out copies of the law, but rather an interpreter of the law. The scribes mentioned in the New Testament, professed to be interpreters of the law; but they in general “made it void by their traditions.” (Notes, Jer. viii. 8, 9. Matt. xiii. 51, 52. xiv. 1-14.)—Many learned men are of opinion, and indeed with good reason, that Artaxerxes was the Ahasuerus, who soon after this married Esther; and that this commission, as well as that of Nehemiah, was obtained through her influence. (Note, Neh. ii. 6.)

11 ¶ Now this is the copy of the letter that the king Artaxerxes gave unto Ezra the priest, the scribe, even a scribe of the words of the commandments of the LORD, and of his statutes to Israel.

12 Artaxerxes, king of kings, unto Ezra the priest, a scribe of the law of the God of heaven, perfect peace, and at such a time.

13 I make a decree, that all they of the people of Israel, and of his priests and Levites, in my realm, which are minded of their own free-will to go up to Jerusalem, go with thee.

14 Forasmuch as thou art sent of the king, and of his seven counsellors, to enquire concerning Judah and Jerusalem, according to the law of thy God which is in thine hand;

15 And to carry the silver and gold, which the king and his counsellors have freely offered unto the God of Israel, whose habitation is in Jerusalem.

16 And all the silver and gold that thou canst find in all the province of Babylon, with the free-will offering of the people, and of the priests, offering willingly for the house of their God which is in Jerusalem.

17 That thou mayest buy speedily with this money, bullocks, rams, lambs, with their meat-offerings, and their drink-offerings, and offer them upon the altar of the house of your God which is in Jerusalem.

18 And whatsoever shall seem good to thee, and to thy brethren, to do with the rest of the silver and the gold, that do after the will of your God.

19 The vessels also that are given thee for the service of the house of thy God, those deliver thou before the God of Jerusalem.

20 And whatsoever more shall be needful for the house of thy God, which thou shalt have occasion to bestow, bestow it out of the king's treasure-house.

21 And I, even I Artaxerxes the king, do make a decree to all the treasurers which are beyond the river, that whatsoever Ezra the priest, the scribe of the law of the God of heaven, shall require of you, it be done speedily.

22 Unto an hundred talents of silver, and to an hundred measures of wheat, and to an hundred baths of wine, and to an hundred baths of oil, and salt without prescribing how much.

23 Whatsoever is commanded by the God of heaven, let it be diligently done for the house of the God of heaven: for why should there be wrath against the realm of the king and his sons?

24 Also we certify you, that touching any of the priests and Levites, singers, porters, Nethinims, or ministers of this house of God, it shall not be lawful to impose toll, tribute, or custom, upon them.

25 And thou, Ezra, after the wisdom of thy God that is in thine hand, set magistrates and judges, which may judge all the people that are beyond the river, all such as know the laws of thy God; and teach ye them that know them not.

26 And whosoever will not do the law of thy God, and the law of the king, let judgment be executed speedily upon him, whether it be unto death, or to banishment, or to confiscation of goods, or to imprisonment.

27 ¶ Blessed be the LORD God of our fathers, which hath put such a thing as this in the king's heart, to beautify the house of the LORD which is in Jerusalem;

28 And hath extended mercy unto me, before the king and his counsellors, and before all the king's mighty princes: and I was strengthened as the hand of the LORD my God was upon me; and I gathered together out of Israel chief men to go up with me.

V. 11, 12. (Marg. Ref.) King of kings. (12.) The kings of Persia had many kings tributary to them; but this title seems to savour of ostentation, as if they had authority over all other kings. (Notes, 1 Kings xx. 1. Is. x. 8-11. Dan. ii. 37.)—The original letter is here inserted in the Chaldee language.

V. 13. The Jews, who had not taken the benefit of the proclamation of Cyrus, seem afterwards to have been restrained from going to Jerusalem, till this decree of Artaxerxes again allowed them that liberty. (Note, i. 1-4.)

V. 14. Seven, &c. Seven princes of Persia having conspired against, and slain, the usurper Smerdis, and thus made way for the family of Darius which afterwards filled the throne; the Persian kings ever after had seven chief princes as their counsellors, who possessed peculiar privileges, and joined with them in all public transactions. (Note, Esth. i. 13, 14.)

V. 16. Canst find, &c. That is, all the money, which Ezra could obtain by the voluntary contributions of the people, whether Jews or Babylonians. (i. 4-6.)

V. 17, 18. (Marg. Ref.) It is remarkable, that a heathen prince should lay no other restriction on Ezra and his brethren, in disposing of the treasures which they collected, except that they should be employed, "after the will of their God." The whole commission implied a chartered right to the Jews of living according to their own laws.

V. 19-22. (Note, vi. 6-12.) 'This was a wonderful large concession, that he should have whatsoever he desired; and—immediately.' (Bp. Patrick.)—Salt. (12.) As salt was offered with every sacrifice, Artaxerxes did not limit the quantity to be supplied, lest the stated sacrifices should be omitted.

V. 23. 'Oh! words to be written upon the palaces of kings in golden letters, and engraven on the minds of all the faithful with a pen of adamant!' (Capellus in Bp. Patrick.)

V. 24-26. The king exempted all employed about the worship of God, from paying any kind of tax; and as the Jews were far from affluent at that time, this was a seasonable encouragement. He also authorized Ezra, as governor over the Jews who lived west of the Euphrates, to constitute magistrates under him, as he saw good. He allowed him to provide for the instruction of the people in the law of God, and even to proselyte the Gentiles; and he likewise empowered him to punish all who proved refractory, according to their crimes.—David, Jehoshaphat, or Hezekiah could scarcely have done more for the Jews, than this heathen prince did: except as their examples, exhortations, and prayers would have concurred to render these external helps and regulations effectual.

V. 27, 28. This pious scribe, instead of expatiating in the praises of his patron, or boasting of his own services, took occasion to bless God for putting such a thing into the king's heart; and for all the assistance and favour shewn him, by the king and his counsellors! (Note, vi. 22.)—Whatever external decorations might be at this time added to the temple; the provision made for the orderly conducting of its sacred worship tended most effectually "to beautify it."

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-10. When the Lord removes some useful instruments, he raises up others to fill their places.—They, who desire to be "scribes well instructed for the kingdom of God," must lay aside all inconsistent pursuits and studies, and have their hearts purified from sinful passions, weaned from earthly affections, and filled with zeal for the glory of God, and love to the souls of men. They must "prepare their hearts" to seek the word of the Lord; that they may first understand it, then practise it, and afterwards teach it to others. In these sacred studies they should be diligent and unwearied; and meditation, prayer, and a spiritual mind will render them delightful. Thus they will become "able ministers of the New Testament," "men of God, thoroughly furnished for every good work," ready scribes, apt to teach, bringing forth out of their treasures things new and old; and, beginning with faithfulness and diligence in a narrow circle, they may in due time expect, "according to the good hand of God upon them," to be favoured with more extensive opportunities of usefulness.—But knowledge, even of the sacred Scriptures, except it be reduced to practice, and communicated to others, will become useless and worthless.

V. 11-28. The servants of God cannot vary from their rules at the instance of the greatest princes, or "teach for doctrines the commandments of men;" but they may want the countenance and external assistance of rulers, in order that they may employ their gifts, and perform their duty, without molestation and to greater advantage. And when kings will grant them protection, entrust them with authority, and bear the expenses of their useful designs; and then leave them to conduct every thing by the rule of the word of God, and according to his will, as it appears to them and their brethren; they may without hesitation avail themselves of such assistance: nay, they may properly petition for it, when there appears a prospect of success.—But in whatever way great and effectual doors are opened to them, they should regard men only as instruments; and ascribe it to the power and goodness of God, if princes grant their requests; bless his name for putting such a thing into their hearts; and receive a commission from man merely as an external opportunity of executing a higher commission from God, according to his instructions, and under his protection.—The liberality of heathen kings, in beautifying the house of God, and supporting the expense of his worship, reproached the conduct of many kings of Judah, and of all that reigned in Israel; and it will rise up in judgment, and condemn the avarice of many nominal Christians, who refuse to employ their superfluous treasures in supporting the worship of God, and propagating the gospel in the world.—Unconverted men may perceive, that “whatsoever is commanded by the God of heaven,” should be diligently done; and that the neglect of his worship will bring wrath upon kingdoms, and upon the persons and families of princes. But divine faith alone, as operating by love and gratitude, is capable of producing unreserved, persevering, and delightful obedience.—The exorbitant and pernicious exemptions, which ambitious ecclesiastics once claimed, have rendered magistrates reasonably jealous in this matter: but when ministers are poor and diligent, there would be a great propriety in favouring them with such exemptions, as consist with the welfare of society, and leave them to attend upon their work without embarrassing cares and distresses.—The wisdom, which God communicates through his word, is peculiarly useful in the choice of magistrates; that they may be indeed “a terror to evil-doers, and a protection to them who do well.” It belongs to civil governors to enact laws, and to proportion punishments to offences for the welfare of the community, the suppression of immorality, and the encouragement of those who endeavour to obey God and the king. And when wise and just laws are enacted, and impartially executed, it should animate us to proceed in our proper work with redoubled diligence and alacrity, in full confidence that “the good hand of our God will be upon us,” and prosper our attempts. But the weapons of our warfare, as Christian ministers, are not carnal: faithful preaching, holy lives, fervent prayers, and patient suffering, are the means that we must use, to teach the ways of God to them who know them not, and to bring increasing numbers into subjection to the obedience of Jesus Christ.

NOTES.

CHAP. VIII. V. 1—14. Doubtless Ezra took proper methods of making his commission known to his brethren, throughout their dispersions; but, though extraordinary favours were granted, and the city, temple, and land were prepared for their reception, very few were willing to undertake the journey. Most of the Jews, who remained in those countries, were either settled to their minds, or were averse to labour and peril. They probably had synagogues, where they met for public worship and instructions; and they were sinfully indifferent about the temple and its service. (Note, i. 5, 6.) But God, on this occasion also, raised up the spirits of a remnant to accompany his servant Ezra.—They are here numbered according to the chief of the fathers, to whose families they belonged. Some of the names of these families were mentioned before, as the descendants of those who stayed behind, seem to have taken this opportunity of following their brethren. (ii. 2—42.) Thus we read of “the last sons of Adonikam,” as no more of that family remained in the land of their captivity. (Marg. Ref.) The males only are mentioned; so that the number, including the women, was double, at least, what is here mentioned.

V. 15. Ahava seems to have been the name both of a town, and of a rivulet which ran into the Euphrates, near the town. The whole company must have lodged in tents, during the journey, as well as before they entered on it.—No

Levites, who were not also priests, were found among them: for Ezra himself was a priest, and we read of two other priests who had joined them. (2.) A considerable treasure had been given to the temple at Jerusalem, by a Gentile king and his nobles; and yet no Levites offered themselves to take the charge of it! (vii. 14—19.)

V. 16, 17. (Marg. Ref.) It is uncertain where Casiphia lay, or who Iddo the chief was. The Nethinims are called his brethren: and, if he were one of that company, no doubt he had been advanced, on account of his extraordinary qualifications or services. Some, however, suppose the word rendered “his brethren” to be a proper name; and that, translated Nethinims, to signify appointed. They therefore render the passage thus: “I told them what they should say to Iddo and Achio, who were constituted in the place Casiphia.” It may be supposed there was at Casiphia a seminary, for the education of priests, Levites, and Nethinims, over which Iddo presided: where they had the free exercise of their religion, and had so comfortable a support, that they were not inclined to remove. ‘It is very probable they had their synagogues—or other places, where they met for religious worship. For we find the people resorting to Ezekiel in their captivity, and him preaching to them the word of God, in many places of his book. (Ez. xxxiii. 31, &c.) And Ezra in all likelihood was an instructor among them!’ (Bp. Patrick.)—Iddo, by reason of his age, or his employment, was not desired to go, but to send proper persons for this service, which the men of understanding would duly explain to him. (16.) It seems, Ezra knew that subordinate ministers especially were wanted for the service of the house of God; and was therefore the more earnest in this matter.

V. 18. Sherebiah, no doubt, was “the man of understanding” here meant; and the passage should be read—“A man of understanding—even Sherebiah.” (Marg. Ref.)

V. 20. The Gibeonites were appointed to the service of the Levites, in the time of Joshua; (Note, Josh. ix. 27.) and some think, that others, (perhaps a remnant of the devoted Canaanites, or of those who were vowed to the Lord, by themselves or their parents, (Note, Lev. xxvii. 2—8,) were added to them, or placed in rather a superior station, by David and his princes, or afterwards by Solomon; and that these were, strictly speaking, the Nethinims.

V. 21—23. Ezra had collected his company at Ahava, in order to enter upon a journey of several hundred miles, which they were nearly four months in completing. (vii. 9. viii. 31.) It lay chiefly through the desert: and, as they were encumbered with families and possessions, they could make but slow progress, and a feeble defence in case of an assault. They carried large treasures with them, which would invite the attempts of the Arabian freebooters, and others who infested that neighbourhood. (Note, 26, 27.) In ordinary cases it would have been very proper, to have required of the king a band of soldiers and horsemen for their defence, which no doubt would have been readily granted: but Ezra, in order to impress Artaxerxes with a proper sense of the power and perfections of JEHOVAH, had confidently declared to him; “That the hand of their God was upon all them for good that seek him, and that his power and wrath were against all them that forsook him.” Being 22 For ^oI was ashamed to require of the king a band of soldiers and horsemen to help us against the enemy in the way: because we had spoken unto the king, saying, ^p"The hand of our God is upon all them for good that seek him; but ^q"his power and his wrath is against all them that forsake him.

23 So ^r"we fasted, and ^s"besought our God for this: and he was intreated of us.

24 ¶ Then I separated twelve of the chief of the priests, ^t"Sherebiah, Hashabiah, and ten of their brethren with them,

25 And ^u"weighed unto them ^v"the silver, and the gold, and the vessels, even the offering of the house of our God, which the king, and his counsellors, and his lords, and all Israel there present, had offered:

26 I even weighed unto their hand six hundred and fifty talents of silver, and silver vessels an hundred talents, and of gold an hundred talents;

27 Also twenty basons of gold, of a thousand drams; and two vessels of ^w"fine copper, ^x"precious as gold.

28 And I said unto them, ^y"Ye are holy unto the LORD; ^z"the vessels are holy also; and the silver and the gold are a free-will offering unto the LORD God of your fathers.

29 ^a"Watch ye, and keep them, ^b"until ye weigh them before the chief of the priests and the Levites, and chief of the fathers of Israel, at Jerusalem, in the chambers of the house of the LORD.

therefore afraid lest the king should not at once understand the distinction betwixt using and confiding in, means; and lest he should be led to question the power, faithfulness, and goodness of Israel's God, or the sincerity of Ezra's dependence on him; he determined to travel without a guard, except that of the Almighty, being ashamed to ask any other, after his former avowed confidence in him. Yet, lest former sins should provoke God to leave them unprotected, and in order the more solemnly and publicly to put the whole company under his gracious protection, he proclaimed, and observed, a fast, that they might "afflict themselves before God," in deep repentance and self-abasement. Thus humbling themselves before the Lord, and seeking his merciful forgiveness, they besought him to be the guide and guard of them, their families, their substance, and also of the consecrated treasures. Accordingly he was intreated of them, their enemies were restrained or disabled, and they arrived unmolested at Jerusalem.

V. 24. Sherebiah and Hashabiah, before mentioned, (18, 19,) were descendants of Merari, the son of Levi, and not of Kohath, Aaron's progenitor; and consequently they were not priests. Either, therefore, the persons specified in this verse were priests who bore the same names; or they were the abovementioned eminent Levites, who on this occasion were joined in trust with ten priests, in the care of the sacred treasures. (30.)

V. 26, 27. These treasures are computed to have been at least worth a hundred thousand pounds sterling, besides the sacred vessels, which were very valuable. The far greater part of this was offered by a pagan king, with his princes and nobles!

V. 28—30. (Marg. Ref. Notes, i. 7—11. 1 Chr. ix. 27—29. Is. lii. 7—11. 2 Cor. viii. 16—24.)

V. 31. As Ezra departed from Babylon, on the first day of the first month, (viii. 9;) and having sent to Casiphia to procure Levites and Nethinims, the company set off from Ahava on the twelfth day of the same month; it is evident that Casiphia was not far from Ahava.—It seems, Ezra was aware that there were enemies who lay in wait by the way, to assault, plunder, or destroy him and his company: yet he trusted in God to protect them, and they were accordingly delivered.

V. 32—36. (Marg. Ref. Notes, ii. 68—70. vi. 6—12. Jer. xxxi. 8, 9. 1. 4—6. Zech. ii. 6—9. Acts xi. 27—30.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—23. Whilst love of the world and fear of the cross induce most men to neglect the salvation of the gospel: they, who obey the gracious call, stand recorded in the book of life, and will be honoured by God himself.—When some of a family embrace the gospel, they who linger behind may probably follow; till sometimes, in answer to fervent prayers, the very last are brought in.—Alas! that professed ministers, who ought to take the lead in every good work, are generally so backward to labour, or venture, or suffer in the cause of God! and need to be stirred up by the example and exhortations even of their lay-brethren! But such as address them on these occasions should be chief men, or men of understanding; lest they should be irritated, instead of being persuaded. They must not, however, be left to their negligence: and their superior brethren, having given them a good example, may send or speak to them, with more authority and effect than others can; and often those, who were before inattentive, will profit by meek and faithful admonitions. When ministers for the work of the house of our God are raised up, who are men of piety 30 So took the priests and the Levites the weight of the silver, and the gold, and the vessels, to bring them to Jerusalem unto ^a"the house of our God.

31 ¶ Then we departed from ^b"the river of Ahava, on the twelfth day of the first month, to go unto Jerusalem: and ^c"the hand of our God was upon us, and he delivered us from the hand of the enemy, and of such as lay in wait by the way.

32 And ^d"we came to Jerusalem, and abode there three days.

33 ¶ Now on ^e"the fourth day was the silver, and the gold, and the vessels ^f"weighed in the house of our God, by the hand of ^g"Meremoth the son of ^h"Uriah the priest; and with him ⁱ"was Eleazar the son of Phinehas; and with them was ^j"Jozabad the son of Jeshua, and Noadiah the son of ^k"Binnui, Levites;

34 By number and by weight of every one: and all the weight was written at that time.

35 Also the children of those that had been carried away, which were come out of the captivity, ^l"offered burnt-offerings unto the God of Israel, ^m"twelve bullocks for all Israel, ninety and six rams, seventy and seven lambs, twelve he-goats for a sin-offering: all this was a burnt-offering unto the LORD.

and understanding, we should acknowledge "the good hand of our God upon us," and give him the praise; as we ought at all times to lift up our prayers to him for this blessing to his church.—It is an invariable rule, that "the hand of our God is upon all them for good, that seek him; but his power and wrath is against all them that forsake him:" and we ought to live in the habitual firm belief of this, and should not be ashamed to avow our confidence before the greatest monarchs upon earth: but we should be ashamed to act inconsistently with these professions, or even to appear distrustful of the Lord in the path of duty. On some occasions we should omit those precautions for personal safety, and refuse to make those provisions for our families, which in other circumstances are very lawful; lest our weaker brethren, or enquirers, should be stumbled, and so our God should be dishonoured. We ought then to ask wisdom from him, that we may know how to use, or to refuse, lawful things, as expedient, or otherwise: and we shall be no losers by venturing, renouncing, or suffering for his sake; as "it is better to trust in the LORD, than to put confidence in princes," or in armed hosts. We should "acknowledge him in all our ways;" but we may especially confide ourselves and our works into his hands, when we are simply endeavouring to serve the cause of true religion. Instead of anxiously seeking help from an arm of flesh, (to which we are all shamefully prone,) when unexpected difficulties or dangers obstruct our path, we should more earnestly and explicitly commit our way unto the Lord. In such circumstances, seasons appropriated to secret or social fasting and prayer, form the most effectual method that we can take: because they best prepare our own souls properly to receive the blessing, and most immediately lead us to seek the forgiveness and mortification of our sins; which are more formidable hinderances to our success, than mountains, rivers, seas, or armies of hostile invaders. Indeed, few enterprises, good in themselves, finally fail of success, which are begun and conducted in this way. And when we thus humbly beseech the Lord, he will be intreated of us; and, by his good hand upon us, we shall bring all our undertakings in due season to an happy termination.

V. 24—36. They should be holy persons, who have the charge of holy things. Ministers are stewards of the most precious mysteries of God, and watch for the souls of men, every one of which is more valuable than all the world: and if any are wanting through their default, they will be required at their hands. The meanest of them, therefore, needs at least as much wisdom, vigilance, integrity, fidelity, and zeal, as the chief of those who bare the vessels of the Lord. And if any of us are entrusted with the gold and silver of the free-will offerings of our brethren; or of the princes and affluent persons of this world, for pious or charitable uses; we should "provide for things honest, not only in the sight of God, but also in the sight of men:" that we may be able, when required, to give a punctual account of the whole to those, by whom, or for whom, we have been employed. A clear conscience, and an evidently upright conduct, are both comfortable and reputable: yet our whole dependence for the acceptance of our persons and of all our services, must be rested on the merits and sacrifice of our great Surety: through him we must devote ourselves, and consecrate our services, to our reconciled God, and then walk before him in his commandments and ordinances, as we have opportunity and ability.—"When our ways please the LORD, he maketh even our enemies to be at peace with us;" and if he disposes a few of the great ones of the earth to favour his cause; numbers will afford their external assistance, not to please God, but the prince.—If preservation in peace and safety during our journeys on earth demand our tribute of grateful praise; what acclamations

CHAP. IX.

Ezra, learning that many of the priests and people had married heathen wives, expresses great sorrow and consternation, 1-4. He prays, and makes confession of sin unto God, 5-15.

NOW when these things were done, the princes came to me, saying, The people of Israel, and the priests, and the Levites, have not separated themselves from the people of the lands, doing according to their abominations, even of the Canaanites, the Hittites, the Perizzites, the Jebusites, the Ammonites, the Moabites, the Egyptians, and the Amorites.

2 For they have taken of their daughters for themselves, and for their sons: so that the holy seed have mingled themselves with the people of those lands: yea, the hand of the princes and rulers hath been chief in this trespass.

3 And when I heard this thing, I rent my garment and my mantle, and plucked off the hair of my head and of my beard, and sat down astonished.

4 Then were assembled unto me every one that trembled at the words of the God of Israel, because of the transgression of those that had been carried away; and I sat astonished until the evening sacrifice.

5 ¶ And at the evening sacrifice I arose up from my heaviness; and, having rent my garment and my mantle, I fell upon my knees, and spread out my hands unto the LORD my God,

6 And said, O my God, I am ashamed and blush to lift up my face to thee, my God: for our iniquities are increased over our head, and our trespass is grown up unto the heavens.

7 Since the days of our fathers have we been in a great trespass unto this day; and for our iniquities have we, our kings, and our priests, been delivered into

NOTES.

CHAP. IX. V. 1, 2. After it was known that Ezra was come to Jerusalem, commissioned by the king of Persia, to be ruler over those countries, and especially to reform the state of religion among the Jews; some of the princes informed him concerning the gross misconduct of their brethren, which they had not been able to prevent. It seems there still remained a remnant of the old inhabitants dwelling in the borders of the land; (Marg. Ref.) and the Jews, being poor and exposed, opened an intercourse with them, and with other neighbouring nations; and intermarried with them, in violation of the law. This had always proved an introduction to idolatry: and their sin was the more aggravated, and threatened the worse consequences, because the priests, whose marriages had been carefully regulated by the law, (Notes, Lev. xxi. 7-15;) and the princes, to whom it belonged to enforce obedience to it, were ringleaders in the transgression; and thus, both encouraged others by their example, and deterred such as wished to enforce the law against the criminals. (Notes, x. 18-44. Ez. xxxiv. 11-17. Neh. xiii. 1-5. 23-31. Mal. ii. 10-12. 2 Cor. vi. 14-18.) They had not indeed yet proceeded to direct idolatry; but they were in the way to it, and already chargeable with doing in some respects "according to the abomination of the Gentiles." (Marg. Ref.—Holy seed, &c. (2.)) (Notes, Ez. ix. 6. Is. vi. 13. Mal. ii. 13-16. 1 Cor. vii. 10-14.)

V. 3, 4. When Ezra first arrived at Jerusalem, and was received with apparent cordiality; when he saw the temple prepared, and the worship regularly conducted, with apparent piety; we may suppose, that he was joyful and thankful. But having been informed of these forbidden marriages, which threatened a speedy repetition of former crimes and judgments, he was affected with deep consternation and sorrow; and he expressed his concern for the honour of God and the interests of Israel, by the customary tokens, and even by such as were used to denote the deepest indignation, terror, or distress. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Josh. vii. 6-9. 2 Kings xxii. 19.) This seems to have been done publicly in some place of resort; and the matter being reported, many others became suitably affected, and trembled at the words of God, because of the transgression of Israel; (Note, Is. lxvi. 1, 2;) and were prepared to join in humiliation before him, and in effecting a reformation.—The Jews were here called, "those that had been carried away;" which might remind them of the captivity from which they were lately returned, and which had been brought upon them by similar transgressions.—It is probable, that Ezra observed a profound silence for some time, which indicated that the confusion and distress of his mind were too big for utterance. 8 And now for a little space grace hath been shewed from the LORD our God, to leave us a remnant to escape, and to give us a nail in his holy place, that our God may lighten our eyes, and give us a little reviving in our bondage.

9 For we were bondmen; yet our God hath not forsaken us in our bondage, but hath extended mercy unto us in the sight of the kings of Persia, to give us a reviving, to set up the house of our God, and to repair the desolations thereof, and to give us a wall in Judah and in Jerusalem.

10 And now, O our God, what shall we say after this? for we have forsaken thy commandments, 11 Which thou hast commanded by thy servants the prophets, saying, The land unto which ye go to possess, it is an unclean land with the filthiness of the people of the lands, with their abominations, which have filled it from one end to another with their uncleanness.

12 Now therefore give not your daughters unto their sons, neither take their daughters unto your sons, nor seek their peace or their wealth for ever: that ye may be strong, and eat the good of the land, and leave it for an inheritance to your children for ever.

V. 5. It is probable that Ezra chose the time of the evening-sacrifice to go from the place where he first shewed his alarm and sorrow; and that he went up to the house of God, (x. 1;) because the priests at that hour, whilst the sacrifice was offering, burned incense in the temple, and the people met together in the courts of it to pray. (Note, Luke i. 8-10.)

V. 6. Ezra was not personally guilty in this matter: but he spake and acted, as the representative and the mouth of the whole people; being a member, and in some respects the head, of that body which had thus violated the covenant of God. (Notes, Dan. ix. 3-20.) He came to establish the civil and ecclesiastical state of the nation, "according to the good hand of his God upon him;" and he was ashamed and blushed, when he considered the rebellious and ungrateful conduct of that people, whose cause he had to plead continually before the Lord. Indeed, the former crimes of Israel were like an inundation, which, being swelled by their present transgressions, would flow even over their heads, and entirely overwhelm them: or they formed an enormous pile, which, increasing by continual accessions of presumptuous rebellion, reached even to the heavens, to call down the vengeance of God upon them. The people, it may be supposed, persuaded themselves, that as they were free from idolatry, and adhered to the worship at the temple, all was very well and commendable among them; that their deviations as to these marriages were excusable, if not justifiable by necessity or policy; and that on the whole they might expect the favour and protection of God. (Note, Rom. vii. 9-72.) But the vehement language of this eminent man was well suited to give them a very different view of the case; and to convince them that they were abominable in the sight of God, and in danger of his severest displeasure: and it loudly called on them all, especially the criminals, to humble themselves before God in deep repentance.

V. 7. (Marg. Ref.) As it is, &c. Jerusalem and the temple had been rebuilt, and a remnant were returned from captivity: but the nation in general was in a dependent, impoverished, and abject state; in comparison with that prosperity which their fathers had enjoyed in the times of David and Solomon, and which they had forfeited by their sins: (Note, Neh. ix. 36, 37;) and the bulk of it yet remained in a state of captivity and dispersion.

V. 8. A remnant of the Jews had now occupied Jerusalem and Judea for nearly eighty years; having thus had a revival, for a comparatively little space, from the state of national death, as it were, which had continued during the captivity; and it might have been supposed, that the miseries of their ancestors would have effectually deterred them from imitating their crimes: yet in so short a time, they had made considerable progress in the very same path; and in case they proceeded in that way, a speedy period would be put to this reviving of their prosperity. (Notes, Ps. lxxxv. 1-8.)—"A nail given them in the LORD's holy place," seems to signify, that the rebuilding of the temple formed a

The people weep with Ezra. 1. Shechaniah proposes that the people should divorce their heathen wives, and encourages Ezra to attempt this; who requires the priests, &c. to engage by oath so to do, 2-5. sure ground of confidence in the Lord, whilst they adhered to his service, and hung all their hopes and dependence on him. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 9. (Notes, vii. 11-28.) A wall, &c. The temple, being the pledge of God's presence among them, was as a wall, by which the Jews were effectually secured from their enemies; unless they provoked him to desert them. Jerusalem was at this time surrounded with a wall. (Notes, Neh. i. 3. ii. 12-16. iii. iv. 1-3. Dan. ix. 24-27.)

V. 10-12. (Marg. Ref.) Nor seek, &c. The Israelites might seek the conversion of the heathen, or do them acts of common humanity: but they must not unite interests with them, nor seek their peace or prosperity in the land of Canaan, whilst they continued idolaters. (Note, Josh. xxiii. 12, 13.)

V. 14. Both the judgments and mercies, experienced by the people, aggravated the guilt of their transgressions; which would now speedily fill up their measures of iniquity, and bring final and total ruin upon them, except they took warning in time. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 15. Though the Jews had endured many and heavy sufferings, yet they had been punished less than they deserved; for they had broken their covenant, and merited utter ruin. (13. Note, Lam. iii. 21-23.) Whatever therefore should hereafter befall them, the Lord would be righteous in his dealing with them; and if they were yet spared, it would be entirely the effect of his mercy.—Thus Ezra closed his address, without adding one petition to his humble confessions.—He knew not what to say, to ask, or to do. He could say nothing to excuse his people; he was sure they could not stand in judgment before God. He dreaded the consequences; yet he had not given up all hopes. His own mind was affected, and his manner could scarcely fail to affect others: and by this abrupt conclusion, as one who was assured that the righteous Lord would do what was right, he referred the whole matter to him, to do what was good in his sight. (Notes, x. 1, 2. Josh. vii. 6-9. 2 Sam. xxiv. 12-14.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-5. Where a credible profession of godliness is made by great numbers, the eye of God often perceives, and careful investigation may frequently detect, very shameful practices: and those useful designs, which are undertaken with great pleasure and sanguine hopes, will seldom be completed without many anxious and painful sensations.—They who deal in frivolous, slanderous, and malicious informations are justly the objects of public execration: but when a pious regard to the honour of God, and a disinterested concern for the benefit of the community, induce men to give information of gross and flagrant abuses, to those who are authorized to repress them; they perform a most useful and honourable service; and even princes may glory in such an employment, though the criminals will generally hate and revile them for it. (Note, Gen. xxxvii. 2.) Men who pride themselves in being free from gross iniquities, often venture into the very path, which leads to the commission of them: and even the miseries of sinners in the ways of vice fail to deter the spectators from copying their examples.—If we would, as the servants of God, "a holy seed," devoted to him by solemn covenant, be preserved from the abominations of the wicked, we must separate from their society, and break off all connexions with them: and intermarriages, betwixt his people and ungodly persons, have in all ages been a successful device of Satan, to prevail against the cause of truth and righteousness, and to produce apostasies, superstitions, idolatry, or impiety.—Too often, through the artifice of the enemy, they, who should warn or restrain others, sanction transgression by their own example, and by protecting the criminals from censure of punishment. Indeed, formalists of every description make light of alliances, or intimacies, with those who are ungodly, and explain away the exhortation to "come out from among them, and be separated:" but they who are best acquainted with the word of God, with the human heart, and with the history of the church; and who have the most affectionate regard for the souls of men, view the subject in another manner. They mourn over such transactions, and forebode the worst of consequences from them: and are constrained most solemnly to express their concern and consternation. But, alas! the evils which are allowed and pleaded for, by many who profess to be the holy seed, may well excite our astonishment as well as deep regret: and we ought to shew our abhorrence of their abominations in the most earnest and decided manner. When this is done by those, who are had in reputation for piety or wisdom, it will excite the attention of others, and cause them to tremble at the words of God, because of the transgression of the people: and this will produce greater watchfulness, lead to self-examination and humiliation, and subvert the purposes of reformation. Silent grief and astonishment sometimes form the most expressive protestation against enormous crimes; and when men speak on such occasions, it may be more effectual to address themselves to God, than to the offenders.

V. 6-15. Whatever may afflict our hearts, we must not yield to inactive despondency, but arise from our heaviness, to spread our sorrows before the Lord, with humble and reverent devotion.—In confessing the sins of churches, or nations, all who form a part of them should bear a share: for every individual hath, one way or other, added his transgressions to the aggregate of guilt: and all are interested in the event, and stand related to such as have committed those crimes, from which they have been preserved.—We should endeavour to affect ourselves and others with the greatness and heinousness of our sins: for, often, when we think little of our transgressions, they have grown up even to the heavens, and are ready to overwhelm us with the vengeance of the Almighty. National guilt accumulates from age to age, whilst children copy the iniquities of their fathers. Hence spring all our miseries: yet the Lord "punishes us less than our iniquities deserve;" and no past or present sufferings will exempt us from greater in future, unless "we repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance."—Every respite, and every degree of former mercies and privileges, should be thankfully received; but they all say to us, "Sin no more lest a worse thing come unto thee." Even the gospel, and the ordinances of God, which are "a nail in his holy place," on which to suspend all our hopes and interests; and which are given us to lighten our eyes, and to deliver us from our bondage, and to be a reviving to our souls, will only aggravate the doom of those who rest in them, and go on in their sins.—In this world God afflicts sinners, yet spares them, that his goodness may lead them to repentance: he corrects; but he doth not utterly forsake, his people: he extends mercy to them, by disposing others to be kind to them; yet his favour forms their best security and comfort. But "what shall we say," when judgments, mercies, warnings, and respites leave sinners hardened in impenitence? The case is dreadful, and it may be expected that the Lord will be angry with them, until they are consumed without remnant or escaping. Indeed, every penitent, reflecting upon his own conduct, and comparing it with his mercies, will be "ashamed, and blush before God;" his mouth will be stopped, and he will not know what to say. The law is holy, just, and good; obedience would have been reasonable and profitable; his guilt is undeniable and inexcusable; the wrath of God is dreaded and deserved: he feels himself in the Lord's hands, without plea, or power to escape: "It is of his mercies that he is not already consumed," and if he perish, the Lord will be righteous: his only hope arises from a belief of his abounding grace, and he casts himself before him with this only plea, "God be merciful to me a sinner."—Even the believer, though he habitually "walks in newness of life," often breaks God's commandments, exposes himself to rebukes and chastisements; and must come ashamed, and confounded, and blushing, before God, on account of his foolish and ungrateful conduct, and again adopting the publican's prayer. Indeed, every individual in the whole church, has cause to wonder, that his ingratitude, perverseness, and folly have not wearied out the patience of God, and brought utter destruction upon him. What then must be the case of the ungodly world around us? However, though the true penitent hath nothing to plead in his own behalf, the heavenly Advocate pleads most powerfully for him; and prevails in behalf of all those who unfeignedly condemn themselves, and cast themselves wholly upon the mercy of God, through his atoning blood.

NOTES.

CHAP. X. V. 1. The exceedingly deep sorrow, and consternation, of so eminent a person as Ezra, with his prayer, and most humble confession of deep criminality, were no doubt speedily reported all over the city; and the high esteem generally entertained of his piety and wisdom, induced the people seriously to reflect upon their conduct, and its consequences: so that numbers, of their own accord, gathered around the governor, and united with him in lamentations and humiliation before God. And, the alarm becoming general, even the women and children joined the assembly in the court of the temple; probably fearing lest the wrath of God should immediately be poured out upon them.

V. 2. Shechaniah is not mentioned among those who were guilty: but his father and several of his relations are. (Note, 26.) He spoke, however, as one of the offending community, though not personally criminal: and he would not be deterred from decisive measures, by regard to his nearest relatives.—Probably, he observed that Ezra was too desponding, and ready to conclude that reformation would be impracticable, where so many of the chief persons were concerned; (Notes, Num. xxv. 4-15.) But he perceived very favourable symptoms in the case. The people were generally convinced of their guilt and danger; and the most daring criminals would not venture to oppose the general opinion of the governor and the congregation. There "was therefore hope in Israel concerning this thing:" an effectual reform might be made; and then the Lord would turn from his fierce wrath against them, as "he delighted in mercy."

V. 3. To put away, &c. This is not any where expressly commanded in the law; yet the spirit of the precept seemed to require it, (Notes, ix. 3, 4. Ez.

15 ¶ Only Jonathan the son of Asahel and Jahaziah the son of Tikvah ^awere employed about this matter: and ^aMeshullam and ^aShabbethai the Levite helped them.

16 And the children of the captivity did so. And Ezra the priest, with certain chief of the fathers, after the house of their fathers, and all of them by their names, were separated, and sat down in the first day of the tenth month ^ato examine the matter.

17 And they made an end with all the men that had taken strange wives, by the first day of the first month.

18 ¶ And among ^athe sons of the priests there were found that had taken strange wives: namely, of the sons of ^aJeshua, the son of Jozadak, and his brethren; ^aMaaseiah, and Eliezer, and Jarib, and Gedaliah.

19 And they ^agave their hands that they would put away their wives; and being guilty, they offered ^aa ram of the flock for their trespass.

21 And of the sons of ^aHarim; Maaseiah, and Elijah, and Shemaiah, and Jehiel, and Uziah.

22 And of the sons of ^aPashur; Elieonai, Maaseiah, Ishmael, Nethaneel, Jozabad, and Elasah.

23 Also of the Levites; ^aJozabad, and Shimei, and Kelaiah, (the same is ^aKelita,) Pethahiah, Judah, and Eliezer.

24 Of the singers also; Eliashib: and of the porters; Shallum, and Telem, and Uri.

25 Moreover of Israel: of the sons of ^aParosh; Ramaiah, and Jeziah, and Malchiah, and Miamin, and Eleazar, and Malchijah, and Benaiah.

26 And of the sons of ^aElam; Mattaniah, Zechariah, and Jehiel, and Abdi, and Jeremoth, and Eliah.

27 And of the sons of ^aZattu; Elieonai, Eliashib, Mattaniah, and Jeremoth, and Zabad, and Aziza.

enough to contain the whole multitude; this providential circumstance added to their distress, and seemed an indication of the Divine displeasure.

V. 10, 11. (Marg. Ref.) As Ezra mentions only the strange wives, and not their children, some think that the children were retained, and brought up in the Jewish religion.

V. 12—14. The congregation at once declared their readiness to divorce their heathen wives, in all cases where it was determined to be their duty: but the difficulties of the business would require more consideration, than could be given them, in their present situation, and by a popular assembly. They therefore proposed, that the principal council or senate might convene at Jerusalem, who might summon before them the parties concerned, from every city, together with the judges and elders of their cities; and so deliberately investigate and decide upon every case; that the business might be settled effectually, and in an unexceptionable manner.—It would be needful to determine, whether the women had been proselyted, either before or after marriage; whether they had relapsed into idolatry, or shewn a propensity that way; or whether they had given satisfactory evidences, that they had sincerely embraced the Jewish religion. These, and many other similar, questions must be resolved, before sentence was denounced; and this would take up much time. The proposal was therefore very reasonable, Ezra readily acceded to it, and thus the business was happily terminated.

V. 15. Ezra and the chief persons in the nation, as forming a council, decided on the several cases brought before them: and on this ground some think, that the four persons here mentioned, and no more, opposed the measure. The words indeed may bear that sense: yet the more general opinion is, that these four men were appointed by the council, to bring the business before them in due form.

V. 16, 17. The cases, brought before the council, were either so many, or so complicated; that, though they separated themselves from other employments, to attend on this exclusively, they were two months in finishing it. This took place just a year after Ezra left Babylon.

V. 18, 19. No doubt Jeshua died many years before this transaction; (Note, vii. 1—5:) but his descendants had set a very pernicious example to the people. They, however, were the first to confess and forsake their sin, and also to present a trespass-offering on that account. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 20—43. (Marg. Ref.) Jehiel. (26.) (Note, 2.) This was Shechaniah's father; though his father was guilty of this crime, he did not stick to speak his xxxiv. 11—17. Josh. xxiii. 12, 13. Neh. xiii. 23—30.) The prohibition of marriages with idolaters was given, to prevent temptations to idolatry; and retaining an idolatrous wife formed a continual temptation. Divorces were permitted to the Israelites, by the judicial law, to prevent worse consequences: but the seducing of a man to idolatry was the worst consequence imaginable. This measure would also tend to prevent the contracting of such marriages in future. It is probable, however, that none were put away, but such as continued idolaters; and that they were provided for out of the estates of those who divorced them. It does not appear, whether the children were generally sent away with their mothers, or not: but doubtless such were provided for, as were not admitted into the congregation of the Lord.—Under the New Testament, the marriages of believers with ungodly persons are evidently sinful, and of very bad consequence: yet when contracted, they must not be dissolved. The partition-wall between Jews and Gentiles is broken down; such matters are determined by the municipal laws of every country; and divorces, except for adultery, are expressly disallowed. (Notes, Matt. v. 31, 32. xix. 3—9. Mark x. 2—12.)

V. 4, 5. Shechaniah's mind, being more composed than Ezra's, perceived that it was a favourable crisis for action: so that he exhorted him, instead of indulging in grief, to arise and exercise his authority, according to the commission of Artaxerxes; and assured him of the hearty assistance of himself and others in the arduous attempt. (Note, Josh. vii. 10—13.) Thus encouraged, Ezra entertained hopes of remedying the evil, and immediately engaged all present, by a solemn oath, to concur in this design.

V. 6. He did, &c. Some render the words "Until he came thither, he had neither eaten bread, nor drunk water." He had no heart to take food, till the prospect of reformation opened to him; but spent his time in fasting, weeping, and prayer.

V. 8. All his, &c. That is, his estate should be confiscated, and put among the sacred treasures, and he should be treated as a heathen, and denied the privileges of a Jew: (Marg. Ref.)—Doubtless, reasonable excuses would be admitted: and the punishment was only inflicted on the refractory, and those who shewed a determination to oppose the measure. Ezra was authorized to punish such persons more severely; (vii. 26:) but he was not disposed to put any to death, if it could be avoided.

V. 9. For the great rain. The periodical rains common at that season seem to have been more abundant than usual: and as no building could be large mind, how it ought to be punished. An admirable example of zealous integrity.' (Bp. Patrick.)

V. 44. Providence had so ordered it, that not many of the people had children by their heathen wives. Thus the separation was more easily effected; and at the same time, it was a token of the Divine disapprobation of such marriages.—Perhaps these were the principal persons who were criminal; for, all circumstances combine to induce an opinion, that a far greater number were concerned, than those here expressed by name.—Ezra continued nearly twelve years after this in authority at Jerusalem, no doubt zealously labouring to promote a revival of true religion. And in many ways, he established the ecclesiastical state of the Jews; though he seems not to have been so well qualified, as his successor Nehemiah, to attend to the civil government, to defend the city and state against enemies and invaders, and to effect outward reformation by the authority of the magistrate. Accordingly he is introduced in the ensuing book, as well employed in his proper line, though superseded by Nehemiah in his civil authority. (Notes, 1 Sam. xii. 23. Neh. viii. 1—8.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—8. Genuine humiliation before God, and sorrow for sin, always produce "works meet for repentance." Yet they who are greatly affected with the view of the evil and aggravation of their own sins, or those of the community, are in danger of being "swallowed up by over-much sorrow," and so discouraged from present duty. In this case the grounds of hope should be pointed out to them; and, (so rich is the mercy of God, through the great Redeemer,) that there is always encouragement for those who are humbly willing to accept of his salvation: and when the most atrocious criminals humbly mourn on account of their sins, and tremble at his word, there is good reason to expect that they will obey his commands. In order to affect others with godly sorrow and hatred of sin, or holy love and gratitude, we must ourselves be greatly affected: for, evident earnestness, in these important concerns, is far more impressive upon the mind, by a kind of holy sympathy, than the most laboured eloquence or reasoning. Indeed the effect of such earnestness frequently bears a proportion to the rank, reputation, piety, or wisdom of him who is thus affected: so that the silent grief and consternation, or the humble prayers and confessions, of one eminent person, may, by the blessing of God, excite serious alarms and enquiries among great multitudes. These are critical seasons, and call for decision in proposing, and executing, measures of extensive and durable usefulness. Yet vehement passions, in those to whom great concerns belong, are attended by considerable disadvantages; and far inferior persons may give seasonable advice, suggest suitable encouragement, or propose adequate assistance.—We cannot too solemnly engage ourselves and each other, to renounce all interests, connexions, or indulgences, which are contrary to the law of God. And when leading men set the example, and then propose the same things to others, many may be prevailed on by conviction, fear, or shame: and thus opposition will be prevented, or rendered ineffectual.—Excessive sorrow, terror, and self-abasement, and a great engagement of heart about the things of God and the eternal world, dispose us to animal recreation: so that fasting then becomes a natural expression of our feelings, as well as a suitable concomitant of our prayers and supplications.—Fervent affections should not be allowed to subside, till our most beloved sins have been renounced; and we should know no man after the flesh, when a revival of pure religion is attempted. (Note, 2 Cor. v. 16.)

V. 9—44. That which must be done, should be set about without delay; they are not worthy of the privileges of God's people, who will not concur in promoting obedience to his commandments: and they deserve severe punishment from the civil magistrate, who oppose his authority, especially when he is doing his duty according to the oracles of God.—When the frowns of Providence unite with the terrors of an awakened conscience, to distress the trembling sinner, he becomes an object of deep compassion: and though no favour must be shewn to his sins, much tenderness should be exercised to his person.—The most effectual divorce from lucrative or beloved sins, is generally preceded by examination and deliberation; for that, which is hastily resolved, seldom proves durable.—Cases, at first sight similar, upon mature investigation appear very different: and in correcting abuses, caution and compassion should unite with impartiality and decision; that there may be no subsequent cause for reasonable complaint.—When sin is repented of and forsaken, God will mercifully forgive: but the blood of Christ, our sin-offering, is the only atonement which takes away the guilt of it.—No apparent repentance, amendment, or restitution, will benefit those who reject this propitiation; for their self-dependence proves them still unhumiliated.—It is peculiarly afflicting to a pious mind, (though, alas! exceedingly common,) to see those who fill up the most important stations in society, or the most sacred offices in the church, and who are related to the most excellent persons, leading the way, and setting the example, in the most evident violation of the Divine law! But when they confess and forsake their sins, avowing publicly their dependence on the atoning blood of the Saviour; their pattern in these respects may in some measure counterbalance the effects of their former misconduct: and all the names, which are written in the book of life, are those of penitent believing sinners; not of the self-righteous who think that they have no need of repentance.

THE BOOK OF

N E H E M I A H.

This book resumes the history of the Jews, about twelve years after the close of the book of Ezra; and contains the latest canonical records of the nation till the days of Christ; reaching down to about a hundred and ten years after the captivity. It was evidently written by Nehemiah himself, who throughout speaks in the first person: and probably it was received among the canonical Scriptures by Ezra and his assistants or successors.—Nehemiah a Jew, the cup-bearer to Artaxerxes king of Persia, hearing of the distressed state of his countrymen; in great affliction petitions him for leave to go up to Jerusalem, as governor, with a commission to rebuild the walls, and to provide for the security and the prosperity of his people. Having obtained his request, he executes his commission for twelve years with great success. After which he returns to Artaxerxes, but at length comes back to Jerusalem; and employs various measures to promote the prosperity of the Jews, and the reformation of abuses.—The frequent devout ejaculations, with which the narrative is interrupted, are peculiar to this pious writer: and his zeal, activity, and disinterestedness are well worthy of imitation; especially by those employed in arduous undertakings for the good of the church or the community.—This book has many internal proofs of divine inspiration, and always has been considered by the Jews as a part of their sacred Scriptures, and indeed a continuation of the book of Ezra: it does not, however, seem to contain any prophecies, nor is it explicitly referred to in the New Testament.

for the children of Israel thy servants, and ^aconfess the sins of the children of Israel, which we have sinned against thee: ^bboth I, and my father's house have sinned.

7 We have ^cdealt very ^dcorruptly against thee, and have not kept ^ethe commandments, nor the statutes, nor the judgments, which ^fthou commandedst thy servant Moses.

8 ^gRemember, I beseech thee, the word that thou commandedst thy servant Moses, saying, ^hIf ye transgress, I will scatter you abroad among the nations:

9 But ⁱif ye turn unto me, and keep my commandments, and do them: though there were of you cast out unto the uttermost part of the heaven, ^jyet ^kwill I gather them from thence, and ^lwill bring them unto ^mthe place that I have chosen to set my name there.

10 Now ⁿthese ^oare thy servants and thy people, ^pwhom thou hast redeemed by thy great power, and by thy ^qstrong hand.

11 O LORD, I beseech thee, ^rlet now thine ear be attentive to the prayer of thy servant, and to the prayer of thy servants, ^swho desire to fear thy name; and prosper, I pray thee, thy servant this day, and ^tgrant him mercy in the sight of this man. For ^uI was the king's cup-bearer.

them, that if they transgressed, he would scatter them abroad; but he had also repeatedly and expressly promised, that if they returned to him, and obeyed his commandments, he would gather them again to their own land, and to his chosen city. (Notes, Lev. xxvi. 31-45. Deut. iv. 26-31. Dan. ix. 5-16.) Now many of those, who had gone up to Jerusalem, were turned to the Lord, and ^adesired to fear his name: and it might be hoped that numbers even of those, who remained in other countries, were truly penitent, and uprightly obedient; among whom Nehemiah was conscious he was one. And as God had already done great things, both in former ages, and lately, in redeeming and delivering his people from their enemies; he trusted that he would compassionately hear his prayer, and the prayers of all those who were pleading with him in that behalf. (Notes, 1 Chr. xvi. 35, 36. Ezra ix. 5-15. Ps. lxxxiv. 20. lxxxix. 6-13. Is. lxiii. 15-19. lxiv. 6-12. Dan. ix. 17-19.) The particular request which he made on this occasion, is remarkable: he prayed that God ^bwould grant him mercy in the sight of this man. The mighty monarch of the Persian empire would be addressed by his flatterers, as if he were more than man; yet Nehemiah knew, that in the sight of God, he was upon a level with his meanest subjects. (Notes, ii. 4.)—^cA deep sense of our own unworthiness is a good qualification for the mercy we beg of God. This, Nehemiah expresses very sensibly. (Bp. Patrick.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-4. Eminent men of God may sometimes be found in situations, where they might be least expected: his grace will be sufficient for them, wherever his providence has cast their lot: and it is seldom advisable to leave the place, where he has blessed us, without an evident call, or a substantial reason; even though we might remove into situations, apparently more favourable to our growth in grace.—The church-militant is like the bush, which burned, but was not consumed, because the Lord was there: (Note, Ex. iii. 2. P. O. 7-12.) afflictions and reproaches are its portion in this evil world: its enemies often presumptuously expect finally to prevail; and its friends through unbelief are sometimes ready to fear that they will. But in the crisis, some unexpected help is afforded, and again it revives and flourishes.—No prosperity can render the real believer inattentive to the cause and people of God. (Note, Ps. cxxxvii. 1-6.) The prevalence of iniquity, the decay of piety, and the ravages of persecution, whilst infidels or idolaters insult and reproach, are like ^a“a sword in his bones.” (Ps. xlii. 10.) As a member of the suffering body of Christ, he will sympathize in its affliction: but this must not suffice. (Notes, 1 Cor. xii. 12-26.) He will be enquiring, what service he can render to the common cause, by improving his talents and the advantages of his situation. If he have no more in his power, he may lift up his prayer without ceasing for the remnant that is left: and fasting, joined with supplication, may well express the believer's penitent sorrow for sin, sympathy with his afflicted brethren, distress to see the cause of God run down, and earnestness in seeking help from him; so that he hath no relish for common comforts and enjoyments. Such fervent humble prayers have always been honoured with signal prevalence and success. And these seasons of humiliation are peculiarly suitable, when we are entering upon arduous or perilous undertakings for the benefit of the church.—As the people of God all over the earth form one body; it is good to enquire how our brethren fare in the most remote regions, that we may at least know in what manner we may direct our prayers and praises in their behalf.

V. 5-11. In all our addresses to the God of heaven, we must remember his greatness and terrible majesty; that we may worship ^b“with reverence and godly fear,” and in deep humiliation before him. His infinite holiness, justice,

NOTES.

CHAP. I. V. 1. This book is here called, “The words,” (or, as it may be rendered, “The actions,”) of “Nehemiah,” that is, the history of the services which he performed to the Jewish church and state.—It is uncertain to what tribe, or family, Nehemiah belonged, though tradition records that he was of the tribe of Judah.—His father Hachaliah seems to have obtained a settlement in the city of Shushan, or Susa, the capital of Persia, where the kings had a royal palace; and thus his son Nehemiah became cup-bearer to Artaxerxes. This was a place of great trust, honour, and emolument; and it was peculiarly desired by those who sought preferment, because it gave access to the king at those seasons of hilarity, when men are most disposed to grant favours.—Nehemiah was cup-bearer to the same Artaxerxes, who before commissioned Ezra. (Note, Ezra vii. 1-5.)—The month Chisleu coincides with part of our November and part of December.

V. 2. It is supposed, that Hanani, the brother of Nehemiah, and some other Jews, came to Shushan, in order to solicit help from the king against their enemies. (Note, vii. 2, 3.)—Nehemiah's station in the Persian court had prevented his going to Jerusalem: but he was an eminently godly man, and deeply concerned about the city and temple of God, and the condition of his brethren in Judea.

V. 3. The remnant, &c. Ezra's commission and his attention, had chiefly respected the state of religion, and the re-establishment of the affairs of the Jewish church: and he was not empowered, or enabled, to fortify the city, or to repel the hostile attempts of the enemies of his people. It is supposed, that the Samaritans, and other adversaries, not only hated true religion, but were provoked at being dispossessed, by the return of the Jews, from the lands which they had seized upon: and as these were but a remnant, compared with the whole nation, and in an unsettled situation, they were unable to defend themselves. The seat of government was very distant; the king's lieutenants were in general unfavourable; and probably the king never heard a full account of the injuries done them.—Either the walls had not been built after the captivity; or their enemies had thrown them down again, and burnt the gates with fire: and being thus defenceless and exposed, they were also insulted and reproached for their confidence in God.

V. 4. Nehemiah seems, immediately on hearing the afflicted state of his brethren, to have conceived the design of going to their relief, if he could obtain permission and assistance from the king his patron. But his first application was to that God, in whose hand are the hearts of kings. He therefore spent some days in mourning over the affliction of his people, and in humbling himself before God by fasting and prayer; in order to find mercy from him, and success in his undertaking. (Notes, Ezra ix. 3, 4. Dan. ix. 2, 3.)

V. 5-11. In the prayer here recorded, which probably formed the substance of Nehemiah's constant supplications day and night, he adored the greatness and terribleness of God, and his covenanted mercy to his people; (Notes, 1 Kings viii. 23, 24. Dan. ix. 4. Luke i. 67-75. Heb. vi. 13-15;) thus acknowledging that if they had not provoked him to anger, by their numerous and heinous crimes; their enemies, instead of triumphing over them, would have experienced his terrible power fighting for them. But, alas! Nehemiah was constrained to confess, that both the people in general, and he himself, and his father's house, were deeply guilty, and by dealing very corruptly. (that is, perversely, ungratefully, and deceitfully,) had given the Lord just cause to leave them in the hands of their adversaries. Yet, while he justified God in the miseries of his people, he expressed a confidence in his mercies. The nation of Israel alone professed to worship and serve the God of heaven: he had forewarned

CHAP. II.

Artaxerxes, observing Nehemiah sad before him, asks the cause, 1, 2. Nehemiah afraid, assigns the reason; prays; petitions the king; and obtains authority to rebuild the wall of Jerusalem, 3-5. He delivers the king's letters to the governors beyond the river; the enemies of the Jews are much grieved; and he arrives at Jerusalem, 9-11. He examines the state of the walls, secretly by night, 12-16. He encourages the Jews to build, 17, 18. The scorn and menaces of their enemies, and his answer, 19, 20.

AND it came to pass, in the month ^aNisan, and in ^bthe twentieth year of Artaxerxes the king, that wine was before him: and ^cI took up the wine, and gave it unto the king. Now I had not been before-time sad in his presence.

2 Wherefore the king said unto me, ^dWhy is thy countenance sad, seeing thou art not sick? this is nothing else but ^esorrow of heart. Then I was very sore afraid,

3 And said unto the king, 'Let the king live for ever: why should not my countenance be sad, when ^fthe city, the place of my fathers' sepulchres, lieth waste, and the gates thereof are consumed with fire?

4 Then the king said unto me, ^gFor what dost thou make request? ^hSo I prayed to the God of heaven.

5 And I said unto the king, ⁱIf it please the king, and ^jif thy servant have found favour in thy sight, truth, and power are terrible to all the workers of iniquity: and they would be so to us all, were he not also infinitely merciful; and did he not deal with such as repent and believe the gospel, according to a new and gracious covenant. For all have broken his perfect law, in numberless instances: and indeed all are disposed to reject, oppose, or pervert his gospel. And if, by his grace, we are now true believers; we have, even since we became so, "dealt very corruptly in not keeping the commandments of God." He therefore is righteous in our sufferings, and merciful in all our comforts. We must still come before him as sinners, pleading his gracious promises, and craving to be gathered into his church, and finally into heaven, the place where he displays those glories, which here by faith we feebly apprehend, love, and adore. In this humble supplicating manner we may expect all desirable success. May he then grant unto us a spirit of simple dependence on his mercy and grace, united with zeal for his glory, and affection to his people. May we endeavour to improve every talent, as those who are waiting for his coming; and never tarnish or defeat the success of our endeavours, by pride and self-confidence. And may our gracious God stir up those, to whom he hath committed many talents, thus humbly and zealously to serve his cause, with faith and prayer; with self-denial, promptitude, and diligence; and with simple dependence on him, and devotedness to him!—When worldly men would solicit any favours from kings or nobles, they spare no pains to obtain the interposition of those who have influence with them: but the children of God must seek to their Father, who could at once secure to them the assistance of all the kings upon earth, if good for them; and though other means may be used, yet "the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth" most of all: and "Grant me mercy in the sight of this man," offered in faith to that God, in whose hand are the hearts of all men, will do more to ensure success, in any good cause, than all our applications to nobles and princes, to support our petitions. (Notes, Gen. xxxii. 28, 29. Ezra vii. 27, 28.)

NOTES.

CHAP. II. V. 1, 2. About four months passed from the time that Nehemiah made his enquiry, before he presented his petition to the king: for Nisan answers to part of March and part of April. (Note, i. 1.) It is probable, that his turn of waiting on the king did not arrive before this: and he could not come into his presence uncalled, except at the hazard of his life; (Note, Esth. iv. 11.) but he could approach the King of heaven at any time, and doubtless all the while continued instant in prayer. Yet, when at length he attended on his office, his inward concern was visible in his countenance, (which no doubt had before been very open and cheerful:) so that the king observed it; and, not perceiving that he was ill, seemed ready to impute his melancholy to discontent or disaffection. Indeed the words rendered "sad," and "sorrow of heart," might be rendered evil, and wickedness of heart. This excited great alarm in Nehemiah; and, in fact, these arbitrary monarchs were generally suspicious, in proportion to their tyranny. Lest poison should be mixed with their wine, they required the cup-bearers to drink before them out of the same cup: and some conjecture that Nehemiah, being oppressed with grief, had forgotten to observe this custom. Had the least suspicion, however, been excited of criminal designs, the immediate torture or execution of Nehemiah might have been the consequence: for the Persian monarchs frequently, with little ceremony, thus treated those who had before been their chief favourites. He might also fear that he should fail of his purpose, as the king seemed displeased, and no favourable opportunity for his request was yet afforded.

V. 3. Nehemiah, in answering the king, testified his cordial and loyal affection, by wishing the long continuance of his life and prosperity, in the customary manner. He perhaps meant the words likewise as a prayer for his salvation: but they were not generally understood in that sense. Thus 'God save the king,' as generally used, means no more, than 'Let the king live and prosper:' but the words, when duly attended to, contain a solemn prayer to that thou wouldest send me unto Judah, unto the city of my fathers' sepulchres, that I may build it.

6 And the king said unto me, (the ^aqueen also sitting by him,) For how long shall thy journey be? and when wilt thou return? ^b"So it pleased the king to send me; and ^cI set him a time.

7 Moreover I said unto the king, If it please the king, let letters be given me to the governors beyond the river, ^dthat they may convey me over till I come into Judah;

8 And a letter unto Asaph the keeper of the king's forest, that he may give me timber, to make beams for the gates of the palace which ^eappertained to the house, and ^ffor the wall of the city, and ^gfor the house that I shall enter into. And ^hthe king granted me, according to the good hand of my God upon me.

9 ¶ Then I came to the governors beyond the river, and gave them the king's letters. (Now ⁱthe king had sent captains of the army and horsemen with me.)

10 When ^jSanballat the ^kHoronite, and Tobiah ^lthe servant, ^mthe Ammonite, heard of it, ⁿit grieved them exceedingly, that ^othere was come a man to seek the welfare of the children of Israel.

11 So ^pI came to Jerusalem, and was there three days.

God, for his temporal preservation, and his eternal salvation. (Marg. Ref.)—Nehemiah said nothing to Artaxerxes concerning the religion of the Jews: perhaps, he saw that he was more regardless in that respect than formerly; (Notes, Ezra vii. 6-28;) or he might suppose that the king would not attend to that subject so candidly, from a young courtier, as he had done from an aged priest and learned scribe of the law of God; and some think that he was induced to waive it, because the company present were unfavourable. He therefore represented the afflicted defenceless state of that city, where his ancestors lay interred; and how could he but be grieved that their sepulchres should be so disgraced, or how avoid sympathizing with his distressed countrymen?—Arguments of this kind the men of the world well understand: but, alas! they little feel the force of those which are infinitely more important.

V. 4. Nehemiah could not, in this emergency, retire for prayer; but he lifted up his heart in a silent ejaculation to the God of heaven, to prosper him, according to the tenor of those prayers which he had for a long time been presenting before him; and perhaps the concluding part of the prayer contained in the preceding chapter, was secretly offered at this time.—"Prosper thy servant this day, and grant him mercy in the sight of this man."

V. 5, 6. It is probable, that Esther was the queen who was present at this time, and that she seconded Nehemiah's request. Perhaps he had been preferred through her interest, and that of Mordecai: and her presence seems to be mentioned, as a favourable and not common circumstance, and as an answer to his prayers.—For Mordecai's advancement preceded the commission granted to Nehemiah several years. (i. 1. Esth. i. 3. x. 3.)—The king was not willing to be long deprived of the service of one, who possessed his confidence and affection: and we may suppose, that Nehemiah obtained leave of absence for a shorter time, than he actually continued at Jerusalem: but he either returned to obtain a new commission, or had it renewed in his absence by the special favour of the king.

V. 7. (Note, Ezra viii. 21-23.) Ezra went as a priest and a scribe, though armed with civil authority; and in consistency with his character and professions, he would not require a guard. But Nehemiah went to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem, and to defend the Jews against their enemies: and it was very consistent with his avowed design, to petition the king, that the governors should be ordered to escort him with proper military attendants, which would afford him protection, and add dignity to his undertaking.—The king likewise ordered him a guard, till he had crossed the Euphrates, (9:) for Susa was beyond that river, eastward of Babylon.

V. 8. The palace here mentioned seems to mean the temple, or some of those buildings which surrounded it. Nehemiah proposed to build a house also for the governor, and to do all other things, which might place his people in a more secure and respectable situation. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 9, 10. (Marg. Ref.) Sanballat is supposed to have been a Moabite, of Horonaim, a city of Moab: (Is. xv. 5:) and Tobiah was an Ammonite, and had been a slave. Moab and Ammon were subjugated and carried captive by the kings of Babylon: but it appears that they had been restored, according to the predictions of Jeremiah. (Notes, Jer. xlviii. 47. xlix. 6.) And it is likely that Sanballat and Tobiah, (as well as Geshem the Arabian afterwards mentioned,) were placed by the king of Persia in authority over their own people, and over the Samaritans, or other tribes in that neighbourhood, who were generally enemies to the Jews.—Sanballat and Tobiah, however, were full of malice against them, and exceedingly grieved to find that one was come from the king of Persia, to protect them from further injuries. (Notes, Is. vi. 1-3. vi. Ezra iv.)

V. 11. It would doubtless soon be known, that Nehemiah was come with a commission from Artaxerxes: but he did not disclose the nature of his business, till he had made previous observations, and consulted with a few select friends in whom he could place the most entire confidence.

12 ¶ And I arose in the night, I and some few men with me; neither told I any man what my God had put in my heart to do at Jerusalem: neither was there any beast with me, save the beast that I rode upon.

13 And I went out by night, by the gate of the valley, even before the dragon-well, and to the dung-port, and viewed the walls of Jerusalem, which were broken down, and the gates thereof were consumed with fire.

14 Then I went on to the gate of the fountain, and to the king's pool: but there was no place for the beast that was under me to pass.

15 Then went I up in the night by the brook, and viewed the wall, and turned back, and entered by the gate of the valley, and so returned.

16 And the rulers knew not whither I went, or what I did; neither had I as yet told it to the Jews, nor to the priests, nor to the nobles, nor to the rulers, nor to the rest that did the work.

17 ¶ Then said I unto them, Ye see the distress that we are in, how Jerusalem lieth waste, and the gates thereof are burned with fire: come, and let us build up the wall of Jerusalem, that we be no more a reproach.

18 Then I told them of the hand of my God which was good upon me; as also the king's words that he had spoken unto me. And they said, Let us rise up and build. So they strengthened their hands for this good work.

19 But when Sanballat the Horonite, and Tobiah the servant, the Ammonite, and Geshem the Arabian, heard it, they laughed us to scorn, and despised us, and said, What is this thing that ye do? will ye rebel against the king?

20 Then answered I them, and said unto them, The God of heaven, he will prosper us; therefore we his servants will arise and build: but ye have no portion, nor right, nor memorial, in Jerusalem.

CHAP. III.

The names, and order, of those who built the walls of Jerusalem, 1. 32.

THEN Eliashib the high priest rose up, with his brethren the priests, and they build the sheep-gate; they sanctified it, and set up the doors of it; even unto the tower of Meah they sanctified it, unto the tower of Hananeel.

2 And next unto him builded the men of Jericho. And next to them builded Zaccur the son of Imri.

3 But the fish-gate did the sons of Hassenaah build, who also laid the beams thereof, and set up the doors thereof, the locks thereof, and the bars thereof.

V. 12—16. Nehemiah seems to have used every precaution to conceal his intentions, till he had obtained the unanimous consent of the people, and they were actually employed in the work; knowing that their enemies would attempt to divide or discourage them.—We may suppose that the moon shone, when he made his observations, and that he had provided skilful guides to accompany him in this survey. Yet even they, who afterwards presided and did the work, were not at this time consulted.—The account here given, is well suited to shew us the ruinous and defenceless state of the city, nearly a hundred years after the return of the Jews from captivity: and Nehemiah's personal survey formed a suitable preparation to his address to the people, and would enable him to obviate any objections, and prevent any misrepresentations, that might be made.—Nothing more is known of the several places mentioned, than what may be collected from the marginal references.—My God had put, &c. (12.) (Note, Ezra vii. 27, 28. Marg. Ref.)

V. 17, 18. The reader will note the piety of the language used by Nehemiah on this as well as on every other occasion, which resembled that of Ezra. (Marg. Ref. on 8.) When he exhorted the Jews to arise and exert themselves in rebuilding the wall of the city: he shewed them that the kindness of the Persian king to him, was the effect of the powerful interposition of God in their behalf. Thus they were animated and emboldened to undertake the work.

V. 19, 20. Sanballat, Tobiah, and Geshem, as determined enemies to the Jewish nation, soon got intelligence of Nehemiah's designs, notwithstanding his precautions, (Note, vi. 17—19); and they derided the efforts of the Jews, as if the work were impracticable: nay, they represented the undertaking as an act of rebellion against the king; though they could not but know that Nehemiah acted by his commission! They intended, if possible, to frighten, to disunite, and to dishearten, the people, that they might abandon the undertaking. But Nehemiah only answered, that the God of heaven would prosper his servants: but as to their adversaries, they had no portion in him, no right to interfere; nor any memorial in Jerusalem, to prove, that either by birth, or by being proselyted, they were Israelites, as the Samaritans pretended to be. He, therefore, very prudently, avoided all further communication. (Notes, 9, 10. Ezra iv. 3. Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—8. Unavoidable delays, when employed in fervent persevering prayer, often forward the success of pious undertakings.—Cheerfulness is in general an ornament to religion; but there are seasons for mourning when grief cannot be concealed.—“The children of this world” understand the propriety of our grieving, when we are sick and in pain; when impoverished, bereaved, or disappointed in our temporal pursuits: but they cannot conceive, why the heart should be heavy, or the countenance sad, if no outward calamity hath befallen us. Yet conscious guilt, the fear or sense of the Divine displeasure, the afflictions of God's people, the prevalence of impiety, and the decays of religion, are far more reasonable and important causes of grief; under which no confluence of earthly delights can afford comfort. We must, however, expect that worldly men will ascribe such sorrows to melancholy, discontent, moroseness, or even some more criminal cause: and they, who are strangers to the believer's consolations, are apt to infer from his complaints, that religion is uncomfortable, and unfits men for social life. We should therefore in general conceal our grief, or disclose it only to the Lord and to his people.—The very persons, from whose favour many advantages may be expected, are also greatly to be dreaded. Inconstancy is connected with all the partialities and affections of absolute princes; and suspicions are multiplied in proportion as power is abused. They cannot confide in those, who do not, as they think, serve them from affection:

but so many causes may induce courtiers to feign attachment, that they cannot but distrust at times even their favourites. Hence the speedy ruin or disgrace of those, on whom honours and emoluments have been most lavished; without any cause, but caprice or groundless jealousy. “It is therefore better to trust in the Lord, than to put any confidence in princes.”—A meek and modest explanation best tends to banish groundless suspicions. Yet we should study consistency with our character, professions, and relative situations, and consider those of the person we speak to; if we would behave “with wisdom towards them that are without,” avoid giving any needless disgust, and do important good to the church of God by their means.—We must not speak falsehood; but we are not bound always to speak all that we think, when a part of it will best answer every useful purpose.—Ejaculatory petitions may be presented to the Lord in any place or company, and should be intermixed with every transaction in which a Christian is engaged. They neither supersede, nor are rendered unnecessary by, our more stated devotions: and the habit of thus keeping up an intercourse with Heaven is of vast importance and advantage. Indeed we ought never to engage in any pursuit, in which it would be improper thus to expect and seek the Divine direction, assistance, and blessing.—The Lord so orders every circumstance, as may best answer the prayers of his people. He turns their most distressing fears into grateful praises: he exceeds their largest hopes; and even they, who know him not, will be inclined to favour his servants, “according to the good hand of their God upon them.”

V. 9—20. The enemies of the Lord must grieve, in proportion as his servants rejoice, when those in authority, and endowed with suitable qualifications, are raised up to promote the cause of truth and holiness, and the welfare of his church: for the enmity of the serpent's seed against the cause of Christ is confined to no age or nation; it springs from hatred of God himself, and is irritated in proportion as he is glorified. But we ought steadily to proceed with our proper work, possessing our souls in patience, and uniting in our conduct, wisdom and zeal, vigilance and courage, self-denial and activity. If we even attempt any thing good, in a proper manner, “God hath put it into our hearts.” But, we should first carefully consider what is most necessary to be done, both in the concerns of our own souls, and in those of the church: and investigation will generally discover a great deal that needs to be rectified.—When matters are fairly proposed, and men in authority or reputation take the lead, and animate others also, the most timid and indolent may be roused and encouraged to action. But favourable opportunities should be seized: and they, who would accomplish any useful design, to rescue the church of God from just occasion of reproach, must be strengthened to endure contempt, reviling, and menaces, as well as labour and hardship. “The God of heaven” will prosper his people, and clear their characters from aspersions, as well as deliver them from affliction: but wretched are they, who have no portion, nor right, nor memorial in the New Jerusalem, the city of our God! However, we should always be ready to give a meek and reasonable answer to objectors; and, blessed be God, even despisers and ravilers, while they are warned of their danger, may be invited to cease from their opposition, and to be reconciled to God; that, after all, they may have their lot among his people, and not among his enemies.

NOTES.

CHAP. III. V. 1. It is supposed that “the sheep-gate” immediately communicated with the temple: and that the cattle for sacrifices were usually brought in that way. (Note, John v. 2—4.) The high priest and his brethren, either his near relations or the chief priests, the heads of their several courses, rebuilt this part of the wall at their own expense; and perhaps some of them on this emergency laboured at it with their own hands.—Of this part alone it is 7 And next unto them repaired Melatiah ^rthe Gibeonite, and Jadon the Meronothite, the men of Gibeon, and of ^sMizpah, unto ^tthe throne of the governor on this side the river.

12 And next unto him repaired Shallum the son of Halohesh, ^gthe ruler of the half part of Jerusalem, ^hhe and his daughters.

13 ⁱThe valley-gate repaired Hanun, and the inhabitants of ^jZanoah; they built it, and set up the doors thereof, the locks thereof, and the bars thereof, and a thousand cubits on the wall unto the dung-gate.

14 But ^kthe dung-gate repaired Malchiah the son of Rechab, ^lthe ruler of part of ^mBeth-haccerem; he built it, and set up the doors thereof, the locks thereof, and the bars thereof.

15 But ⁿthe gate of the fountain repaired Shallum the son of Col-hozeh, ^othe ruler of part of ^pMizpah; he built it, and covered it, and set up the doors thereof, the locks thereof, and the bars thereof, and the wall of the pool of ^qSiloah by the king's garden, and unto ^rthe stairs that go down from the city of David.

22 And after him repaired the priests, ^kthe men of the plain.

23 After him repaired Benjamin and Hashub ^lover against their house. After him repaired ^mAzariah the son of ⁿMaaseiah, the son of Ananiah, by his house.

24 After him repaired ^oBinnui the son of Henadad ^panother piece, from the house of Azariah unto ^qthe turning of ^rthe wall, even unto the corner.

25 Palal the son of Uzai, over against the turning of ^sthe wall, and the tower which lieth out from ^tthe king's high house, that was ^uby the court of the prison. After him ^vPedaiah the son of ^wParosh.

26 Moreover the ^xNethinims ^ydwelt in ^zOphel, unto ^athe place over against ^bthe water-gate toward the east, and the tower that lieth out.

27 After them ^cthe Tekoites repaired another piece, over against the great tower that lieth out, even unto ^dthe wall of Ophel.

28 From above ^ethe horse-gate repaired the priests, ^fevery one over against his house.

29 After them repaired Zadok ^gthe son of Immer over against his house. After him repaired also Sheamaiah the son of ^hShechaniah, the keeper of ⁱthe east gate.

30 After him repaired Hananiah the son of Shelemiah, and Hanun the sixth son of Zalaph, ^janother piece. After him repaired ^kMeshullam the son of Berechiah over against his chamber.

31 After him repaired Malchiah, ^lthe goldsmith's son, unto the place of the Nethinims, and of the merchants, over against the gate Miphkad, and to the ^mgoing up of the corner.

32 And between the going up of the corner unto ⁿthe sheep-gate repaired ^othe goldsmiths and the merchants.

said, that "they sanctified it;" which may mean, that they began the work with prayer and concluded it with praise, and thus consecrated their service to the Lord, for the security of his temple and worshippers. (Notes, xii. 27—43.)—Little is certainly known concerning the situation of the several gates and places mentioned in this chapter. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 5. Their nobles, &c. It seems the chief persons of Tekoah refused to give any assistance, either by their labour, their substance, or their servants. Disregarding the authority of God himself, whose work it was, no wonder that they would not submit to the commands of Nehemiah, their governor, who seems to be meant by the expression "their lord:" and for this they are branded with disgrace in the word of God. (Note, 1 Sam. viii. 6—9.)—But the inferior citizens, instead of following their example, undertook a second part, when they had completed that which was first allotted them: (27.)—The expression "put not their necks," renders it probable, that those who were well disposed, of whatever rank, assisted by their personal labours.

V. 7. The throne, &c. This seems to have been some judgment-hall, to which the governors of the kings of Persia came, from time to time, to administer justice. Probably, Nehemiah now occupied it; for his particular commission superseded their more general authority.

V. 10. Several persons are mentioned who built, or repaired, the wall which was over against their own houses, or chambers. (Marg. Ref.) They lived near the wall; so that this arrangement was most convenient for them: and thus at the same time they provided for their own security, and the common benefit of the city.

V. 11. It is not known what the expression "the other piece," or, the second measure, refers to.

V. 12. Several rulers of half parts of cities are mentioned. (Marg. Ref.) It is probable that two superior magistrates were placed over the principal cities, with equal authority, to reside in different parts of them.—Shallum seems to have had no sons; and his daughters, as heiresses, contributed with him to the expense of the work.—Perhaps they were widows.

V. 15. Stairs. It is probable, these stairs formed a communication between the city of David, and the other parts of Jerusalem. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 16. "The house of the mighty" is thought to have been a guard-chamber, where the most valiant soldiers kept guard, to defend the palace of the kings of Judah.

V. 20. Earnestly, &c. Baruch, being more assiduous than others, probably stirred them up to greater diligence.

V. 25. "The king's high house" perhaps was some lofty building, from which the watchmen might make their observations.

V. 31. Miphkad signifies judgment, visitation, or correction; and it is thought a prison was situated near this gate.

V. 32. Sheep-gate. Thus the whole city was surrounded with a wall: for Eliashib began at the sheep-gate. (1.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Ministers should always be ready to labour and venture for the good of their brethren; and they, who have the precedence in rank, should take the lead, in setting that good example which gives energy to their instructions: but Sanballat and his company are wroth, and ridicule the Jews: but Nehemiah prays, and builds the wall, 1-6. He discovers that they secretly are plotting against him, and setteth a watch, 7-12. He arms the builders, and gives them suitable orders and directions, 13-23.

6 So built we the wall; and all the wall was joined together unto the half thereof; for the people ^qhad a mind to work.

especially, they should teach the people, how to sanctify their secular employments, by beginning, conducting, and completing them with prayer and thanksgiving, according to the word of God, and to his glory.—The security and prosperity of the church, in every part of the world, is the common cause of all Christians, wherever they reside; and all orders of men should assist in promoting them. No age, sex, or station of life, can free any person from this obligation: every one, in some way or other, may contribute towards it; and where “much is given, much will be required.” But, alas! the rich, and noble, generally count it their privilege to be useless; which they cannot be, without setting an example, mischievous in proportion to their influence: and no wonder that they disregard the proclamations of the prince, which call them to attend the service of God; when they disdain the yoke of the almighty Lord himself. But before him they are upon a level with the meanest of their inferiors; except that a more dreadful punishment, and deeper disgrace, await their impenitent and ungrateful rebellion. Sometimes the zeal and activity in the cause of God, of those in the inferior orders, expose and condemn the pride, sloth, and self-indulgence, or impiety, of those who are entrusted with more talents; and thus they whom men despise, obtain and engross that “honour which cometh from God.”—If in times of prevalent ungodliness, numbers, in different stations, would agree, first to look to themselves, and to reform their families as far as they could; and then to use all their influence to promote the general work of reformation, we might expect that much good would speedily be done: and though most men still neglect this duty; let those who lament the triumphs of iniquity and the desolations of piety, every one “repair opposite to his own house” or “chamber;” and let all endeavour to do what they can, by their prayers, their example, the education of children, and pious conversation, to promote and recommend that cause which they have espoused. And when such attempts are directed by men of vigour, prudence, and piety, and conducted with entire harmony, remote from envy, contention, or divisions; and when every one, beside doing his proper work earnestly, is ready to assist those who are overburdened; there is no reason to doubt of success: “for the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace.”—May the Lord stir up the hearts of all his people, to lay aside their disputes, and to disregard their worldly interests, in comparison of “building the walls of Jerusalem,” and defending the cause of evangelical truth, and vital godliness, against the assaults of avowed enemies. May those offences cease, which weaken the common cause, and expose it to reproach: and may the church of Christ thus fortified, as “a city that is at unity in itself,” and adorned by the beauties of holiness, attract the attention, the admiration, and the love of beholders; silence the reproaches of calumniators, and dismay the heart, or repel the assaults, of every hostile invader! Amen.

NOTES.

CHAP. IV. V. 1-3. (Notes, ii. 9, 10, 19, 20.) Sanballat, and the other enemies of the Jews, though enraged at them for undertaking to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem, were restrained from openly opposing them, partly, because they despised their feeble attempts. They concluded, that either they would not venture on such a work, or if they did, that they would make little progress, however earnest they might be. But when they heard that all hands were diligently employed, they were very angry; yet they affected to treat the undertaking with the utmost disdain. Sanballat uttered his sarcasms before his brethren, (or the principal commanders in that neighbourhood,) and the army of Samaria; whom he knew to be more inveterate against the Jews, than any other of the tribes under his command: but he supposed they would soon be reported at Jerusalem, and tend to discourage the builders. With a mixture of scorn and indignation, he enquired, “what the feeble Jews were doing.” Could they think of fortifying so large a city? Did they intend to complete such a work in a day, and to secure themselves from interruption, while they spent the next in sacrificing? And what would they do for materials? The stones formerly used in this work were broken in pieces, or decayed, by lying so long under the rubbish; the builders could not revive, or make them new again, nor could they procure any others. With equal disdain Tobiah replied, that a wall built by them, in such haste, and of such materials, would be no security at all; for that the weight of a fox running over it would break it down! But this contempt and ridicule induced them to lose the opportunity of attempting more effectual opposition.

V. 4, 5. The Jews were at this time the church of God: they were actually employed in his service: their enemies, without the smallest ground of complaint, despised and hated them for his sake: if they succeeded in their designs, they would subvert true religion: and their condign punishment would form a salutary example to all other adversaries, and subvert the cause of truth and righteousness. So that, zeal for the honour of God, and love to his people, induced Nehemiah to pray that these scorners, might be exposed to that reproach which they cast on the Jews, and become “a prey to their enemies in the land of their captivity;” and that their sins might not be covered, or blotted out, by the merciful forgiveness of God: seeing they had endeavoured to discourage the builders, and render them disaffected to their work; (Marg. Ref.)—Such scriptural requests are prophetic, or declaratory of the judgments of God against persecutors; and the subsequent doom of these nations was an answer to this prayer. (Notes, Ps. lxxix. 21-28. cix. 6-20.)

V. 6. The half, &c. The whole circuit of the wall was completed to half of the intended height.

V. 7, 8. As all these nations, (except perhaps the Arabians,) were subjects of the kings of Persia; and were induced by Sanballat to unite against the Jews, when acting by the king's commission; their attempt was a conspiracy, in the most criminal sense. Dreading either the resentment of the king, or the valour of the Jews; they had not dared to attack them openly, notwithstanding the greatness of their malice. (Notes, Matt. xxvi. 3-5. Acts xxiii. 12-22.)

V. 9. The connexion, here marked, between the greatest simplicity and piety, in trusting God alone, and seeking help for him, and the most vigilant and diligent activity in the use of proper means, is well worthy of notice.

V. 10. The princes of Judah, while the work was in hand, represented to Nehemiah, that the people were so worn down, and the remaining labour (especially in removing the rubbish to get materials,) was so great, that their design was impracticable, and must be abandoned at least for the present. This must have been a great discouragement to him, in conjunction with all his other difficulties and dangers. (Notes, Ps. xi. 1-3. Hag. i. 2-4.)

V. 11. Some think, that the princes reported these sayings of the adversaries; in order to intimidate the builders: being themselves weary of the labour, and not cordially affected to the cause. But it was not likely, that Sanballat could introduce into the city so large a number of soldiers, as would suffice to overpower and destroy all the Jews, and stop the work, without being discovered till he and his troops were in the midst of the builders. Indeed their conduct in reporting such a design was more suited to intimidate the inconsiderate, than to convince wise men that they really expected to carry it into execution.

V. 12. This verse is of difficult construction; which seems to have been the effect of the abrupt manner in which the persons intended expressed their excessive terror. They lived near the hostile nations, and were continually coming to Jerusalem with information, that the enemy was preparing to attack the people from every quarter; and would certainly fall upon them, whether they continued at their work, or attempted to return home. Probably, they meant to put their brethren upon their guard: but such rumours tended to intimidate them, and drive them from the work. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 13-15. (Marg. Ref.) After all the preparations which Nehemiah and the Jews had made, the conspirators did not venture to attack them; and, neither being able to surprise them, nor fright them from their work, they for the present desisted.

14 And I looked, and rose up, and said unto the nobles, and to the rulers, and to the rest of the people, "Be not ye afraid of them: 'remember the LORD, which is great and terrible, and fight for your brethren, your sons, and your daughters, your wives, and your houses.

15 And it came to pass, when our enemies heard that it was known unto us, and God had brought their counsel to nought, that we returned all of us to the wall, every one unto his work.

16 And it came to pass from that time forth, that the half of my servants wrought in the work, and the other half of them held both the spears, the shields, and the bows, and the habergeons; and the rulers were behind all the house of Judah.

17 They which builded on the wall, and they that bare burdens, with those that laded, every one with one of his hands wrought in the work, and with the other hand held a weapon.

18 For the builders, every one had his sword girded by his side, and so builded: and he that sounded the trumpet was by me.

19 ¶ And I said unto the nobles, and to the rulers, and to the rest of the people, The work is great and large, and we are separated upon the wall, one far from another.

20 In what place therefore ye hear the sound of the trumpet, resort ye thither unto us: our God shall fight for us.

21 So we laboured in the work: and half of them

22 Likewise at the same time said I unto the people, Let every one with his servant lodge within Jerusalem, that in the night they may be a guard to us, and labour on the day.

CHAP. V.

The poor Jews complain of the debts which they had unavoidably contracted, and which compelled them to mortgage their lands, and even sell their children, 1—5. Nehemiah rebukes the rich usurers, who oppress their brethren; and obliges them to engage on oath to make full restitution, 6—13. He refuses the governor's customary allowances, and maintains great hospitality at his own charge, 14—19.

AND there was a great cry of the people, and of their wives, against their brethren the Jews.

2 For there were that said, "We, our sons and our daughters, are many: therefore we take up corn for them, that we may eat and live.

3 Some also there were that said, "We have mortgaged our lands, vineyards, and houses, that we might buy corn, because of the dearth.

4 There were also that said, We have borrowed money for the king's tribute, and that upon our lands and vineyards.

5 Yet now our flesh is as the flesh of our brethren, our children as their children: and, lo, we bring into bondage our sons and our daughters to be servants, and some of our daughters are brought unto bondage

V. 16—18. The builders could not possibly have made any progress, if they had literally held a weapon in one of their hands. Indeed it is evident, that they wore their swords by their sides. But the expression is figurative, implying that every man was both a builder and a soldier. They worked, and bare arms, by turns: they wore swords at their labour, and those behind them had other arms ready, when the alarm should be given.—Nehemiah, being earnest in the undertaking, employed all his attendants in one way or other about it.

V. 19, 20. The priests were directed to blow the sacred trumpets; (Note, Num. x. 1—10;) and no doubt one at least of them constantly attended, to sound the alarm when needful: and this was a token that the Lord would fight for his people against their enemies. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 22. They, who lived in the adjacent cities and villages, were required to lodge, with one or more servants, in Jerusalem, to guard the work, and be ready for it in the morning; for this was to be attended to in preference even to their own families, as being more exposed to the assaults of their enemies. (Note, xi. 1, 2.)

V. 23. Every one, &c. Nehemiah and his attendants, in order that they might always be prepared against any alarm, took necessary rest by turns, in their clothes and armour; never undressing themselves, except for cleanliness, or ceremonial purification. Or as the margin renders the words, "Every one went with his weapon for water."

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—12. The pious labours of those, who try to promote true religion, must excite the indignation of such as are "haters of God," and his truth and holiness: nay, in this case, the wisest and most excellent behaviour, will be reproached, and derided, as madness and folly.—The most sacred things may easily be represented in so ridiculous a light, as to excite profane laughter: a small measure of wit, united with competent malice, impiety, and impudence, will suffice; and such presumptuous jesters whet one another's ingenuity, and embolden each other to the most daring blasphemies. Contempt and derision are indeed very painful to us: but they prove the Christian's protection, and give him leisure to effect his designs, without more formidable opposition.—The means which he uses appear feeble to proud despisers: but, by the power and blessing of God, they produce durable and extensive effects; and all the efforts of man, seconded by the power and policy of hell, have failed, and ever will fail, to subvert the cause, which infidels have dreamed would fall of itself, or on the first assault. Ere long the church on earth will triumph over every adversary; and all believers will soon offer the sacrifice of praise, for complete and eternal victory and salvation; notwithstanding the scoffs and rage of their enemies.—When insulted or injured, let us then give up ourselves to prayer: and the supplications of believers, throughout the world, for the prosperity of the church, and the success of the gospel, will eventually be answered in the reproach and merited punishment, of all impenitent opposers. So long as they reject the atonement, their sins cannot be covered; and their endeavours to hinder the progress of the gospel will provoke the Lord above all their other sins.—They, who disagree in almost every other thing, will often unite in persecution: (Note, Matt. xxii. 15—22;) and that enmity, which at one time dictates contempt and derision, will at another suggest more violent and cruel measures; especially when the servants of God are active, united, and successful. So that proud scorers are not fit to be trusted with power; whatever they may profess concerning candour and toleration.—When we engage in important and useful undertakings, we should expect discouragement from every quarter. For we shall be tried, not only by the anger, contempt, treachery, and cruelty of enemies, but also by the inconstancy and lukewarmness of friends and helpers: and many who wish well to us will weaken our hands, by regarding, and reporting, the menaces, slanders, or boastings of our adversaries.

V. 13—23. No opposition will prove any real hindrance to us, in our endeavours to do good, if we be led by it to a more simple confidence in God, and to the more diligent use of proper means for obtaining success. A believing remembrance of his power, truth, and love, will prove a sufficient support in every danger; for "if God be for us, who can be against us?" and, however craftily the plots of opposers are laid, he is able to detect them, and to bring to nought all their counsels.—If our enemies cannot fright us from our duty, or deceive us into sin, or find us unwearied, they cannot hurt us. When ministers or other active instruments, add the example of diligence, courage, self-denial, and patience, to their exhortations; others will be stirred up, who were before drawn or driven from their work.—Every true Christian is both a labourer and a soldier, working with one hand and fighting with the other, and called by the sound of the gospel, alternately to his work and to the conflict. We are widely dispersed in our several employments; but we all form one army, and must prepare to unite against the common enemy, in whatever place the assault is made. In this important cause, personal and relative interests must be comparatively disregarded: or rather they are most wisely attended to, when we commit them to the Lord, and labour for the benefit of his church. While we stand armed and watching, as for the battle, we shall have the best security for peace; for Satan fears assaulting the vigilant Christian: or if we are attacked, "our God will fight for us." Thus must we wait to the close of life, never putting off our armour, till our work and warfare be ended; and then we shall be welcomed to the rest and joy of our Lord.

NOTES.

CHAP. V. V. 1—5. It seems, that the attention of Nehemiah was interrupted, before the wall was completed, by the affair recorded in this chapter. (Note, vi. 15, 16.) Amidst the depredations to which the Jews were exposed, and their attention to self-defence, it is likely that tillage was in some degree neglected, and that a scarcity of corn ensued. It is also supposed by learned men, that these events occurred in the sabbatical years which would increase the difficulties of the poor, as well as aggravate the guilt of those who thence took occasion to oppress their brethren. The nation seems also to have been visited with scarcity, for their sins. Such persons, therefore, as were in low circumstances, and had large families, were unable to buy necessary food, except upon credit; and they were compelled in the same manner, to raise money for the tribute imposed by the king of Persia. (Note, ix. 36, 37.) Of these difficulties the monied men took advantage, and obtaining mortgages of their lands, got them into their possession: taking usury also for the money, of one hundredth part every month, or twelve per cent, a year, (as it is generally supposed;) which soon reduced the debtors to deep poverty; and at length to the necessity of selling into slavery their sons, and even their daughters; who would be peculiarly exposed in that situation: while there appeared no prospect of redress, no hope of redeeming either their lands or their children, no period to their accumulating distresses, except in entire and perpetual bondage. Yet they were not already: neither is it in our power to redeem them; for other men have our lands and vineyards.

6 ¶ And ¹I was very angry when I heard their cry, and these words.

7 Then ¹I consulted with myself, and ¹I rebuked the nobles and the rulers, and said unto them, ^mYe exact usury, every one of his brother. And ¹I set a great assembly against them;

8 And I said unto them, We, ^aafter our ability, have ^{re}deemed our brethren the Jews, which were sold unto the heathen; and will ye even ^asell your brethren; or ^ashall they be sold unto us? Then ^hheld they their peace, and found nothing to answer.

9 Also I said, ¹It is not good that ye do: ought ye not ^ato walk in the fear of our God, because of ^athe reproach of the heathen our enemies?

10 ¹I likewise, and my brethren, and my servants, might exact of them money and corn: ²I pray you let us ^aleave off this usury.

11 ^bRestore, I pray you, to them, even this day, ^atheir lands, their vineyards, their olive-yards, and their houses, also the hundredth part of the money, and of the corn, the wine, and the oil, that ye exact of them.

12 Then said they, ^aWe will restore them, and will require nothing of them; so will we do as thou sayest. Then ¹I called the priests, and took an oath of them, that they should do according to this promise.

13 Also ¹I shook my lap, and said, ^aSo God shake ^y Mic. ii. 1. Luke iii. 14. 1 Cor. ix. 12—18. ^z 2 Cor. v. 11. 20. vi. 1. Philom. 8, 9. ^a 7. Ex. xlii. 25—27. Ps. xv. 5. only of the same nature, but of the same chosen seed, the children of the covenant, equally with the more prosperous Jews. They had the same affection for their children, and accounted a numerous family a blessing, as long as they could provide for it. They had not reduced themselves to this distress by extravagance; but were necessitated to contract debts, through hard times and heavy taxes, and for necessary provisions: and the conduct of their oppressors was contrary to the letter and the spirit of the whole law. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Gen. xlvii. 13—26. Ez. xxii. 25—27. Lev. xxv. 35—37. Deut. xv. 2—9. xiv. 10—13. 2 Kings iv. 1. Ez. xxii. 12, 13.) In this extremity they appealed to Nehemiah, and he immediately determined to do them justice.

V. 6, 7. Nehemiah appears to have possessed a far more bold and eager spirit, than his contemporary Ezra. For, in a situation something similar, Ezra fasted, prayed, wept, and almost desponded; (Notes, Ezra ix.:) but Nehemiah, fired with a holy indignation, proceeded immediately, with all his authority and influence, to redress the grievances of his oppressed brethren; neither fearing the resentment of their powerful oppressors, nor doubting but he should be able to effect his purpose. (Notes, Job xix. 11—17. xxxi. 33, 34. Ps. lxxxii. 2—4. Prov. xxxi. 8, 9.) He did not, however, act without consideration; but, having formed his plan, he first rebuked the nobles and rulers, who, instead of punishing other criminals, were themselves the most notorious usurers and extortioners. And, as he feared lest they should prove refractory, he convened an assembly of the people; that perceiving how generally their conduct was disapproved, they might be shamed into proper concessions, without the necessity of direct compulsion.

V. 8. Nehemiah, and Ezra, and other pious persons, had not only, with great zeal and earnestness, endeavoured to establish the security and prosperity of the nation; but they had redeemed from slavery several of the poor Jews, who had been sold among the heathen. (Note, Lev. xxvi. 47—55.) What a contrast then was the conduct of these usurers, to their disinterested love! Did the one company redeem their enslaved brethren, that the other might sell them again for slaves, in direct violation of the Divine law? Or did they expect to sell their enslaved brethren to Nehemiah and his friends, even as the gentiles took their money for such as they redeemed?—It was impossible to reply to this animated and reasonable expostulation. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 9. When Nehemiah said, “It is not good that ye do,” his words imply that they had acted very wickedly. (Marg. Ref.)—The exposed and distressed condition to which sin had reduced the nation, and the recent mercies which they had received, combined to enforce it upon them, to “walk in the fear of God,” lest he should give them up as a reproach to their enemies: or rather, lest the heathen, who were full of malice, should reproach them, as they justly might, for their avarice and cruelty; and thence take occasion to revile their religion, and blaspheme the name of God himself. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 10—13. Had Nehemiah and his brethren and servants, acted towards the people, as these oppressors did: the authority of the Persian king would have enabled them to exact large contributions, from the rich especially. But as they, instead of such exactions, did not so much as take what was justly their due; (Note, 14, 15;) surely the rich should be ashamed of extorting from the poor, what they could have no shadow of a right to! Nehemiah therefore urged them voluntarily to leave off their usury, and to restore the lands of their poor brethren, and the increase of money and provisions, which they had exacted from them; to lend them without pledge or usury, in this time of distress; and to wait for payment till better times. This seems the immediate purport of his proposal: though probably he required the free remission of former debts, and the liberating of the children which were in bondage, as in the year of release.—His remonstrance had its desired effect, and the guilty persons promised to do so: but lest they should delay, or go back from their word; he called the priests as witnesses, and bound them with a solemn oath to perform their promise; and then with a significant action, he denounced the vengeance of heaven against every one who failed of this engagement. To this the congregation solemnly assented, and praised the Lord for sending them so just and merciful a ruler. (Notes, Jer. xxiv. 8—22.)—Thus this matter was in one assembly amicably settled, by motives and arguments taken from religion, and the law of God: yet one of a similar kind distracted the Roman state for ages, and the oppression was never effectually prevented! (Notes, 2 Chr. xxviii. 9—15. 1 Tim. vi. 1—5.)

V. 14—18. This passage must have been added by Nehemiah several years after the date of the transaction before recorded: for that occurred soon after he came to Jerusalem.—The former governors had received from the people an income of about five pounds a day, (as it is generally interpreted; besides a proportion of bread and wine for their households: while their attendants, (as is too commonly the case,) lorded it over the people, and increased their burdens. It is not said who these governors were. Perhaps Ezra, who seems not to have been rich, was necessitated to take sufficient for the expenses of his station; but we may be sure, that he allowed of no oppression. It is probable, however, that the Persian governors west of the Euphrates were meant: for they seem to have had authority over the Jews, until Nehemiah's commission was granted. But he, acting in the fear of God and from the pure motives of religion, and perceiving the poverty of the people, would not receive this customary emolument: and, being very rich and liberal, he supported his dignity with great hospitality at his own expense, all the time he filled that exalted station; setting his rich countrymen an example of receding from legal claims for the public good. At the same time he spared neither trouble nor expense in forwarding the fortifications of the city; and required his attendants to assist also; and would neither himself take, nor allow them to take, any advantage of the poverty of the Jews, by purchasing estates at a low price, as they might easily have done.—In reading this account which he gave of himself, we should remember, that he wrote under the guidance of the Holy Spirit: and it was proper that his magnanimous, disinterested, and liberal conduct should stand upon record, for an example to all others; what use to make of great riches; how to render authority a public blessing; and how to induce mankind to acts of justice and every good work, by taking the lead in them. (Notes, 1 Cor. ix. 13—18. 2 Cor. xi. 7—12. 16—20. xii. 11—15.)—It was no more than St. Paul was constrained to speak of himself in his epistle to the Corinthians, of whom he would take nothing, that he might stop the mouths of false apostles and covetous people. (Bp. Patrick.)

Sanballat and his party practise against Nehemiah, by insidious attempts, false rumours, and the hired counsel of pretended prophets, 1-14. The wall is finished, and the enemies are disheartened, 15, 16. The nobles of Judah traitorously correspond with Tobiah, 17-19.

NOW it came to pass, when Sanballat, and Tobiah, and Geshem the Arabian, and the rest of our enemies, heard that I had builded the wall, and that there was no breach left therein; (though at that time I had not set up the doors upon the gates;)

2 That Sanballat and Geshem sent unto me, saying, "Come, let us meet together in some one of the villages in the plain of 'Ouo. But they thought to do me mischief.

circumstances evidenced that he was a true believer; he desired no recompense from man, but confidently expected one from a merciful God: he evidently spoke and acted as one that knew himself to be a sinner: and he did not expect a recompense as of debt; but in the manner, that the Lord rewards a cup of cold water given to a disciple for his sake.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V 1-13. Every domestic or relative comfort may become to us an occasion of increasing anguish: we should not then be discontented in the want of children, or anxious about temporal things; but seek our whole happiness from God alone.—It is peculiarly the duty and privilege of the poor, to trust the promise and providence of God to supply their families with food and raiment, and to be content with necessities: and of the rich, and of those who have no children, to contribute liberally to the support of their indigent brethren. But, alas! too many take advantage of the necessities, to which others are reduced, in order to exact on them; that they may increase their own useless abundance, or support their luxurious and extravagant expenses! They wilfully forget, that the poor are of the same nature with themselves; and that they have the same wants, inclinations, natural affections, and feelings of pain and suffering. Instead of "doing to others, as they would that others should do to them," they grow careless of the welfare, and callous to the miseries, of their fellow-creatures; and usurp authority over them, as bondslaves, in proportion as wealth, power, and prosperity increase. Every gratification is deemed requisite for the lordly oppressors; but the meanest morsel is good enough for the poor and enslaved, though far better characters than themselves. Thus men prey upon their own species, and by "despising the poor, reproach their Maker;" and aggravate, instead of relieve, those distresses, which are always entitled to compassion: but especially, when they are not the effect of extravagance, or sloth; but of hard times, heavy taxes, large families, and debts contracted for bare necessities (Notes, Prov. xiv. 31. xvii. 5. P. O. 1-15. Conclusion.) Such conduct disgraces even human nature; but who can express sufficient abhorrence of it when adopted by professed Christians? It exposes our holy religion to the reproach, scorn, and abomination of heathens, and gives occasion to our enemies to blaspheme that worthy name, by which these selfish wretches are improperly distinguished. Thus, in all the four quarters of the globe, millions of Mohammedans and pagans abhor Christianity; through the avarice, treachery, and cruelty of men called Christians!—Well then may the report of such crimes, and the cry of the oppressed, kindle an honest indignation in the breast of every friend of mankind, of his country, and of the gospel. Those in authority should consult with themselves, and with each other, how to redress these scandalous abuses: and if fair means will not do, rough and decisive measures should be employed, notwithstanding the clamours of interested oppressors; if princes would have the blessing of God upon their dominions. Too often nobles and rulers are the chief in such exactions; and their power and affluence seem to defy investigation, and frequently prevent, or intimidate, those who should promote the execution of justice; yet neither rank nor authority should screen them: nay, they should be first punished, for an example to others; and if they disregard the rebuke of an individual, the great assemblies of nations should be convened against them. If, however, they can be shamed, or persuaded, into a proper conduct, harsher measures are ineligible: and when earnestness, affection, wisdom, piety, humanity, a decided example, and cogent reasonings, concur, they will sometimes operate beyond expectation.—In expostulating with selfish people, it is good to contrast their conduct with that of others, who are remarkably liberal and benevolent; but, it is best to point out to them his example, who "though he was rich, yet for our sakes became poor, that we through his poverty might be rich." When this is compared with the conduct of those, who do not care how many they reduce to beggary or slavery to enrich themselves; the contrast, between the Master and his professed disciples, is so striking, that it implies an argument, which is silencing, and unanswerable on any scriptural principles. It may further be enquired, whether such oppression is good in itself, or consistent with the fear of God, regard to his authority, and his command to love our neighbours as ourselves? whether men can deny, that the enemies of our holy religion do reproach us, because of such practices, and are prejudiced to their irreparable damage? how they would approve it, if their superiors tyrannized over them, and extorted from them, as they do from their inferiors? and what will become of them, if God shew them no more mercy, than they shew their poor brethren? (Note, Jam. ii. 12, 13.) If our oppressors and slave-dealers were not by habit more callous than these Jews, we might be encouraged to intreat and beseech them to leave off their extortion; to make restitution to the injured, and to shew mercy to the poor. But, alas! these methods are seldom successful; and more conclusive reasons alone prevail. This remains for the magistrate; and here the preacher must leave them. If arguments, expostulations, warnings, and persuasions will not induce them "to repent, and do works meet for repentance," we must "shake off the dust of our feet, as a testimony against them;" assuring them that God will soon shake them out from their ill-gotten treasures, and cast them down into destruction; (Note, Jam. v. 1-6;) if they continue to neglect the salvation of Christ, or refuse to imitate his example of lovingkindness and mercy: and when the righteous Judge shall denounce this tremendous sentence against them, all the multitudes of the redeemed will cry, "Amen, and praise the Lord."—We may further observe, that wise and good men may be of very different tempers, and consequently go about the same thing in a different manner. But they should not censure each other, nor should others censure them: let them serve God according to that ability which he hath given them; and let it never be supposed, that one mere man is a perfect model for all others to follow.

V. 14-19. We must not do our works to be seen of men, and it is seldom expedient to speak of them ourselves. Yet we should "let our light shine before men, that they may see our good works, and glorify God:" and sometimes a good man may be called upon, as in his presence, and with an appeal to the consciences of many witnesses, to declare his own disinterested and upright conduct, and the motives of it, for a reproof, an instruction, and an example, to mankind. But it is always necessary for those to set a decidedly good example, who are bold reprovers and active reformers of others, and who speak and act with sharpness against their crimes. In this case a man should give up his right, neglect opportunities of gain, be willing to labour and endure hardship without recompense, and even to expend his substance in the support of a good cause. And it is not enough for public characters themselves to avoid evil, and the appearance of it; their servants and dependents must be restrained also. But the fear and love of God, and genuine love of the brethren, will influence a man to do this, and much more; and will constrain him to abound in hospitality and every good work, according to the ability that God hath given. These are proper evidences and expressions of living faith; and our reconciled God will look for good, on such as abound in these fruits of righteousness, according to all that they have done to his people.

NOTES.

CHAP. VI. V. 1-4. Sanballat and his confederates, not daring openly to attack the Jews, yet earnestly desiring to prevent the completion of the fortifications, which were daily carried on, formed a scheme to draw Nehemiah from his station, and to slay or confine him, when they had him in their power. They therefore, on some plausible pretence, invited him to an interview: but he was aware of their intentions; and on that account would not have gone, if he had not been engaged. He, however, only answered, that, being fully employed in a most important work, his presence was necessary; that the work would stop if he left it; why then should he come down, in such circumstances? This was true, and a sufficient reason: and their subsequent importunity could not induce him either to comply, or to enter into any altercation with them; as indeed it was well calculated to confirm his suspicions. (Notes, Judg. xvi. 6-16.)

V. 5-9. When these most inveterate enemies had been baffled in their design, they devised a more dangerous stratagem. Sanballat sent, under a pretence of friendship, to inform Nehemiah of a report in circulation, that the Jews were preparing to revolt from the king of Persia, and place him on the throne; and that he employed prophets, who should preach this to them, as the will of God. This, Gashmu, or Geshem, (2,) attested to be fact, and was prepared to prove; and, being circulated in all the surrounding nations, it was likely soon to come to the ears of Artaxerxes, and to bring upon the Jews the whole weight of his indignation.—If such reports had indeed been circulated and credited, there would have been cause for alarm: for those despotic kings, upon the least suspicion, often drove their lieutenants into rebellion, as their only hope of self-preservation. But it was entirely a fiction invented to frighten Nehemiah, or to render him incapable of proceeding. The letter was sent open; that the contents, being known to the people, might excite them to mutiny, or to forsake the work, for fear of the Persians: (Notes, 2 Kings xviii. 26-35;) and the proposal of taking counsel with him, as if Sanballat and his friends were desirous of concerting measures for the common safety, was an artful device, made in order to get him into their hands, that they might do him mischief. But Nehemiah, being conscious of his innocence, and satisfied that no such reports were circulated, simply denied the charge, and let them know, that he was aware that the whole was their own fiction: and, as they intended to weaken his hands from his work, he took occasion to beg of God to "strengthen his hands." The words, O God, are not in the original; and some interpret the sentence, as Nehemiah's resolution to proceed with increasing earnestness; but they seem rather to be an ejaculation; and the omission of the address implies the holy, yet reverent, familiarity, with which this pious man communed with his condescending Father and friend, and shews that his heart was habitually employed in thinking of his God. (Note, John xx. 11—17.)

V. 10—14. Sanballat and his party, being once more baffled, employed a still more subtle and dangerous expedient, suborning persons, who were considered as prophets, to give Nehemiah bad counsel in the name of God. The principal person concerned was Shemaiah, of whom Nehemiah seems previously to have had a good opinion. He was "shut up" in some chamber adjoining the sanctuary, probably as a token of his own fear, and a sign to Nehemiah of what he ought to do: who, perhaps being sent to, went to confer with him, as a friend, and a prophet. The environs of the temple were secured by walls and gates, while the gates of the city were not set up. Shemaiah therefore professed great concern for Nehemiah's safety; and counselled him to take refuge in the temple with him, lest his enemies should come and murder him by night; or that very night, as his words seem to imply. If Nehemiah had followed this advice, he would have lost his reputation for courage, and confidence in God; and have appeared weak and contemptible: the people would have taken the alarm, deserted the work, and sought their own safety: the accusations of his enemies would have gained credit, even in the Persian court; and he would have appeared conscious of bad intentions. In short, it would have overturned his whole design, and given his enemies their desired advantage. (Notes, Matt. iv. 1—11.) But Nehemiah soon saw through this project likewise. From the nature of the counsel, and by proper investigation, he perceived that Shemaiah was not delivering a message from God; but that he pronounced this prophecy against him, intending his ruin; having been hired by Tobiah and Sanballat, that Nehemiah might contract guilt, and expose himself to reproach.—When the rank of Nehemiah, and his authority, were considered, with his conscious integrity and professed confidence in God, and the importance of his work, it appeared very inconsistent for him to flee and hide himself. In such circumstances, even the preservation of life formed but a subordinate consideration: the support of the public cause, by an example of intrepidity, firmness, and consistency, ought to be first considered. Any brave commander would venture his life, when the event of a decisive battle, and the fate of his country, were at stake, and would scorn to flee at the appearance of danger: how much more then should Nehemiah venture his, for the glory of God and the benefit of his church! To take refuge in the temple in such a case, would be to prefer a disgraceful short-lived safety to the most important of all causes. Nehemiah therefore, not only with decided firmness rejected this counsel, as inconsistent with the most evident scriptural principles: but, as Shemaiah, and Noadiah, the prophetess, and the other pretended prophets, had most basely sold their services to the enemies of God and religion, he subjoins his prayers for their confusion and disappointment. (Note, 2 Tim. iv. 14, 15.)

V. 15, 16. This important and difficult work was completed in so short a time, and under so many disadvantages, that even the adversaries of the Jews were convinced that God had prospered them. He had given them health, strength, courage, and unity; he had restrained their opposers, and kept off interruptions; and he succeeded the whole by his blessing: so that "the work was wrought of their God." This dejected their enemies, and made them forebode the future prevalence of the Jews; but it did not allure them to desire a portion among that favoured people. (Notes, 1 Sam. xxiv. 16—22. Esth. vi. 13.)

V. 17—19. While the wall was building, and afterwards, several of the nobles of Judah were in the interest of Tobiah, and held a traitorous correspondence with him: some of them, having joined affinity with him, had engaged others to swear to serve him, as they had opportunity. Nay, they had the confidence, or rather insolence, to report the good deeds, or supposed excellent endowments, of this bitter enemy of God and his people, to Nehemiah; either intimating to him that he ought to imitate them, or that he should form an alliance with so worthy a character! And at the same time they betrayed Nehemiah's measures to him. But this pious and excellent man, who had so strenuously pleaded the cause of the oppressed poor, would not, in his present circumstances, exercise the authority with which he was invested against his own enemies in Judah, however basely they acted towards him; but persevered in serving his people, notwithstanding their treachery and ingratitude!

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The whole power and policy of Satan and his servants have always been directed against those, who zealously seek the welfare of the church of God: and though often baffled, they are unwearied in their projects.—The rage of persecutors, though terrible, is not so dangerous as the professed friendship of concealed enemies: so that except there is good evidence of men's reconciliation to God, they cannot safely be trusted, when they court the favour of his people, but should rather be suspected of some mischievous design. (Notes, Ezra iv. 1—6. P. O. 1—6.) If we received no other damage from their insincere friendship, we should be taken off from our work to no purpose: we should not then suffer ourselves to be overcome by importunity; for we had better offend man by a refusal, than sin against God by compliance.—Even our common lawful business ought to have a decided preference to all matters of mere compliment: how much more then our peculiar duties as Christians, magistrates, or ministers, in proportion to their importance and difficulty!—It is desirable to be constantly engaged in some useful employ; among other reasons, that we may have an answer ready for those invitations, which we cannot profitably accept, and scarcely know how to refuse. The active servant of God, may, on any such occasion, say, "I am doing a great work, so that I cannot come down; why should the work cease, while I leave it, and come down to you?" And this is enough, as a reason for avoiding those circles, where no good can be got, or done; and which interfere with the duties of the closet, and the family, and prevent the redeeming of our time and the improvement of our talents.—The deceitful smiles of the world generally form our first temptation in the path of duty. But if we steadfastly withstand them, and will not be diverted from our work, we must prepare for reproaches, slanders, and menaces, from the same quarter. Our firmness will be called obstinacy; our zeal, rashness; and our activity, ambition: nay, we shall be warned, that we are about to affront all our friends, and turn them into enemies; and to bring ourselves into dangers and difficulties, from which we cannot extricate ourselves, unless we follow other counsels, and act more circumspectly.—Moreover, the zealous servants of God have always been unjustly traduced, as rebellious to the ruling powers: and their malicious enemies have often represented their own slanders as the general sentiments of mankind. (Notes, Ezra. iv. 11—24. P. O. 7—24.) These misrepresentations tend to weaken the hands of the courageous; and they prejudice, alarm, and draw off such as were helpful to their pious designs. But a clear conscience, a lively faith, an assured persuasion that we are doing our duty, and a zeal for the honour of God, will carry us above all discouragements; and, being satisfied with denying the charges brought against us, it is best to persevere in our work, without wasting time in altercations or self-vindication; only lifting up our prayer to God to "strengthen our hands," and encourage our hearts.

V. 10—19. A thousand slanders will die away, one after another; whilst the malice of their authors will be exposed: but one real crime sometimes leaves an indelible stain upon a man's character, and precludes all future usefulness: let us then fear the least sin far more than any calumny. But those temptations are the most dangerous, which come from professed servants of God, and our own friends. When such persons, with apparent piety and affection, counsel the zealous to be more moderate and cautious, the diligent to spare himself, and the bold, to take care of himself; the insinuation has great effect. Our appeal, however, in this case, must be to the word of God. (Note,

1 Kings xxii. 13, 14.) That cannot be from him, let who will speak it, which contradicts his plain precept, or truth; or which would induce us to neglect our duty, or prefer our own ease, emolument, credit, liberty, or life, to his glory and the welfare of his church; or which would persuade us to shrink from the cross, or refuse self-denial. Many such counsellors are in the pay of the enemy: for, being induced to time-serving from interested motives, they consider the conduct of the more zealous as a reproach, and want to be kept in countenance by their example: and if we knew from what motives grave advice is sometimes given, we should understand from what quarter it came, without further information. We need not always, however, judge the adviser; but we ought to try the advice, and without scruple to reject all that is contrary to the word of God. Every man should also study consistency with his profession, former character, station, and engagements. That, which is allowable in one man, may be very improper in another: and we ought to venture any thing in a good cause, trusting in the Lord, and committing ourselves to his protection. It is therefore useful frequently to enquire, 'Should such a man, as I, do so and so?' 'Should I, who am a Christian, a saint, a child of God, a member of Christ, a temple of the Holy Spirit, a ransomed sinner, an heir of heaven; one set up to be a light in the world, and the salt of the earth; a preacher of righteousness, and a steward of the mysteries of God: should I appear to be covetous, or sensual, or proud, or envious? Should I yield to impatience, discontent, or anger? Should I be slothful, unbelieving, or unmerciful? What effects will such conduct in me have upon others? Will not some be grieved, many misled and prejudiced; others emboldened in ungodliness, and enmity to the truth? Will not this prevent the effect of my exhortations or persuasions, in my family, among my connexions, or from the pulpit?' Thus, all that God hath done for us, or by us, may become an argument for watchfulness, diligence, self-denial, and perseverance.—It is also peculiarly instructive to consider, how others in similar circumstances would act. Would Peter or Paul have done so, to save their money, to indulge their sloth or pride, to escape a cross, a prison, or death? Do even the men of the world suffer themselves so easily to be diverted from their object, by every appearance of difficulty or peril.—In all cases indeed they, who would lead others in arduous services, must share the danger and the hardship: and this is the reason, why the enemy of souls employs so many instruments, and forms so many projects, to discourage, or bring a reproach on, the active servants of God. If the shepherd can be frightened away, the flock will be scattered.—Every success of the gospel discourages the enemies of God: and they sometimes perceive that it is his work, and yet hate it the more: but false brethren are the severest trial to the faithful servants of God: "They who forsake the Lord, praise the wicked:" (Note, Prov. xxviii. 4.) and they, that form marriages with the avowed opposers of the gospel, will probably soon join their party, notwithstanding their present pretensions. Many leading men, yea, preachers and prophets in the visible church of God, will be found "workers of iniquity." But under every discouragement, we should "consider Jesus, who endured the contradiction of sinners against himself, lest we be weary, and faint in our minds:" and who "laid down his life for his sheep;" that after his example we may persevere in our duty, amidst every danger and opposition, not being overcome by the treachery, ingratitude, or perverseness of those around us, but still endeavouring to "overcome evil with good:" and "in due season we shall reap, if we faint not."

NOTES.

CHAP. VII. V. 1. The singers, &c. (Marg. Ref.) This either refers to some regulations made by Nehemiah concerning the ministrations of the Levites at the temple, or to his preparations for solemnly dedicating the wall. (Notes, xii. 27-43.)

V. 2, 3. It has been supposed by some learned men, that Nehemiah, having finished the wall, and made other needful regulations, returned to the Persian court; but that he not long after came again to Jerusalem with a new commission; and that on this occasion he placed his brother Hanani, and Hananiah, over the city, and gave them instructions how to manage in his absence. The charge, however, here given, and the service required, would be necessary even when Nehemiah resided at Jerusalem: for he could not superintend the gates and the watchmen, without being taken off from his other important and numerous engagements. Doubtless Hanani was a proper person, or else Nehemiah would not have preferred him to this important trust; and his journey to Shushan may be supposed to have been undertaken out of a zealous regard to his people and his religion, (Note, i. 2:) but of Hananiah it is expressly said, that "he was a faithful man, and feared God above many." (Notes, v. 15-18. 1 Kings xviii. 3. 12-16. Ps. ci. 6.) "At night he charges them to stand by, and see the gates shut and barred in their presence." (Bp. Patrick.)

V. 4. The walls had been built upon their old foundations, in confidence that God in due time would replenish the city: but there were only a small number of inhabitants, compared with those of former ages; so that large spaces remained unoccupied. This would render it the more requisite that a strict watch should be kept, lest their enemies should scale the walls unobserved: and on the same account it was absolutely necessary, that proper measures should be adopted for replenishing the city with inhabitants.

V. 5, 6. This account was taken of the people, in order to bring the tenth part of them to reside in Jerusalem, (Note, xi. 1, 2;) and as it proved an useful measure, Nehemiah piously and reasonably ascribed the first thought of it to God, who "put it into his heart." (Marg. Ref. Note, Jam. i. 16-18.) In conducting this business, he found the register of those who came up with Zerubbabel; which is here inserted nearly as we had it before. (Notes, Ezra ii. 1-67.) "Nehemiah found the list of those who came up in the first of Cyrus; and he called over the names of the families, as they lay in order there: but he took the number of them, as they were when he numbered them. Some families were now more, some were less; some that were in that list, were not to be found now; some had come from Babylon, some were now gone back.—(Lightfoot.) But as the greatest part of the families consist of exactly the same number in both places; and the sum total in each, with several other particulars, entirely coincides; it can hardly be conceived, that almost a hundred years should have made no greater changes.—Should any, however, conjecture, that some ancient copyist had inserted the wrong register, and that his mistake had been generally followed; the very conclusion would shew, that such alterations are almost always liable to detection; and no reasonable man would think it the least objection to the divine inspiration of the sacred Scriptures.

 60 All ^bthe Nethinims, and the children of Solomon's servants, were three hundred ninety and two.
 61 And these were they which went up also from Tel-melah, ^aTel-haresha, Cherub, Addon, and Immer: but they could not shew their father's house, nor their seed, whether they were of Israel.
 62 The children of Delaiah, the children of Tobiah, the children of Nekoda, ^asix hundred forty and two.
 63 ¶ And ^aof the priests: the children of Habaiah, the children of Koz, the children of Barzillai, which took one of the daughters of ^aBarzillai the Gileadite to wife, and was called after their name.
 64 These sought their register among ^athose that were reckoned by genealogy, but it was not found: therefore were they, as polluted, put from the priesthood.
 65 And ^athe Tirshatha said unto them, ^bthat they should not eat of the most holy things, ^ctill there stood up a priest with Urim and Thummim.
 66 ¶ The ^awhole congregation together was forty and two thousand three hundred and threescore;
 67 Beside ^atheir man-servants and their maid-servants, of whom there were seven thousand three hundred thirty and seven: and they had ^atwo hundred forty and five singing men and singing women.
 68 ^aTheir horses, seven hundred thirty and six: their mules, two hundred forty and five:
 69 Their camels, four hundred thirty and five: six thousand seven hundred and twenty asses.
 70 ¶ And ^asome of ^athe chief of the fathers gave unto the work. ^bThe Tirshatha gave to the treasure a thousand drams of gold, fifty ^abasons, five hundred and thirty priests' garments.
 71 And ^asome of the ^achief of the fathers gave to the treasure of the work twenty thousand drams of gold, and two thousand and two hundred pound of silver.
 72 And ^athat which the rest of the people gave, was twenty thousand drams of gold, and two thousand pound of silver, and threescore and seven priests' garments.
 73 So the priests, and the Levites, and the porters, and the singers, and ^asome of the people, and the Nethinims, and all Israel, dwelt in their cities; and ^awhen the seventh month came, the children of Israel were in their cities.

V. 70—72. This seems to have been a distinct oblation from that recorded in Ezra; and was probably made, after the people were registered, by Nehemiah, the Tirshatha or governor, and by the chief of the people. (Note, Ezra ii. 68—70.)

V. 73. This verse so accords with the last verse of the second of Ezra, and the first of the third, that it is doubtful whether it should be understood of the Jews, who returned under Zerubbabel; or of what followed after Nehemiah had registered them. If it be taken in the latter sense; and if the events next recorded took place in the same year with the building of the wall, (as probably they did;) there could be no time for Nehemiah to go to Babylon: (Note, 2, 3:) for the wall was not finished till the twenty-fifth day of Elul, or the sixth month. (vi. 15.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The active servants of God, and of his church, will never want employment; for the completion of one design will make way for the commencement of another.—The fear of God, powerfully possessing the heart, will produce proportionable fidelity and conscientiousness, in a man's whole character and conduct, and it is happy for the community, when men of this character have the charge

CHAP. VIII.

The people being assembled, Ezra, with solemn worship, reads and expounds the law, 1-8. They are greatly affected: but Nehemiah, Ezra, and the Levites, exhort them to joy in God, cheerful feasting, and liberality to the poor, 9-12. Being instructed from the law concerning the feast of tabernacles, they keep it with great solemnity, 13-18.

3 And ^khe read therein ^lbefore the street that was before the water-gate, from the ^mmorning until mid-day, before the men and the women, and those that ⁿcould understand; and ^othe ears of all the people ^pwere attentive unto the book of the law.

4 And Ezra the scribe stood upon ^qa ^rpulpit of wood, which they had made for the purpose: and beside him stood Mattithiah, and Shema, and Anaiiah, and Urijah, and Hilkiah, and ^sMaaseiah, on his right hand; and on his left hand, Pedaiah and Mishael, and ^tMalchiah, and ^uHashum, and Hashbadana, Zechariah, and ^vMeshullam.

of public affairs.—"Except the LORD keep the city," the walls are built, and "the watchmen wake in vain:" yet in this and all other concerns, God is to be trusted in the use of prudent and proper means, and not to be tempted by the neglect of them. (Note, Ps. cxxvii. 1. Matt. iv. P. O. 5-7.)—Magistrates and ministers have more extensive charges: but every man ought to watch over his own heart, and his own house, that sin, the worst enemy, may be kept at a distance, as much as possible.—Provision is made in the gospel, and in the city of our God, for far greater numbers than have yet been enrolled citizens: we should therefore be devising means for replenishing it with inhabitants, as well as for building its walls.—'All holy desires, all good counsels, and all just works, are from God:' to him belongs the praise, when good thoughts are suggested; we should be careful not to "quench the Spirit," by rejecting them; (Note, 1 Thes. v. 16-22. 2 Col.) and we ought continually to pray, that our God would put more and more of them into our hearts, and enable us to bring them to good effect; and that he would do the same for increasing numbers. Then we might hope that many would concur in designs, as yet unthought of, for propagating the gospel and promoting the salvation of souls.—The Lord delighteth to honour those, who willingly face danger, and endure hardship for his sake: he knoweth the names of all his people, and will produce the register at last. But wo be to those who turn back from him, loving this present world: and happy they who willingly come to dedicate themselves, and consecrate their substance to his service and glory!

NOTES.

CHAP. VIII. V. 1, 2. The feast of trumpets was observed on the first day of the seventh month; and the people assembled to celebrate it, though not explicitly required. (Note, Lev. xxiii. 24, 25.)—It is probable, that Nehemiah, having formed a plan for their instruction from the law, called on them by this early attendance to concur in it. Doubtless the appointed sacrifices were offered, (Note, Num. xxix. 1-6;) but the courts of the temple not being so spacious or convenient, the congregation assembled in a broad street of the city, to hear the law read and expounded: and not only the women, but even the children who were capable of understanding, attended. Accordingly Ezra the priest, being a learned and ready scribe, having long been bestowing much pains on the sacred Scriptures, and preparing correct copies of them, was called upon to take the lead in this service: and, though it does not appear that the measure originated with him, yet he most cordially concurred in it. (Note, Ezra, vii. 6-10.) Some conjecture that he had been at Babylon during the preceding events, in which he is not mentioned; and that he had lately returned: but perhaps he had been privately occupied in his own line for the good of the people, and was well satisfied to leave public affairs entirely to Nehemiah. (Note, 1 Sam. xii. 23.)

V. 3. (Marg. from the light.)—The reading and expounding continued about six hours; and as most of the people must have stood in the open air during a great part of the time, it appears that they were not soon wearied: for indeed "the ears of all the people were unto the book of the law;" or hearkening to it with profound attention. (Notes, ix. 3. Acts xx. 7-12. xxviii. 23-29.—Notes, Luke xix. 48. Heb. ii. 1-3.)

V. 4. Beside, &c. Some conjecture that these persons, being priests or Levites under Ezra's direction, assisted by turns in the service, to prevent his being worn down with it: but others think, that they only shewed their concurrence, by standing on his right hand and on his left; or that they were thus preparing for the same service on future occasions. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 5, 6. Ezra having solemnly opened the sacred volume, before he began to read, "blessed the LORD, the great God:" he gave him thanks for the good gift of his holy law, and for all his mercies: he adored his great and glorious Majesty; and probably he implored his blessing on the service before him. To this the people gave a cordial and repeated assent; and, prostrating themselves on the ground, added their most solemn worship. This was an excellent preparation for a due regard to the sacred Scriptures; and the example should be imitated by those who preach, expound, or read the word of God.

V. 7. The persons, mentioned in this verse, must not be confounded with those who stood by Ezra, in his pulpit, or tower: for only one of the same name occurs in both places; and, no doubt, in that instance, different men of the same name were meant. These were most, if not all, priests and Levites, (Marg. Ref.) and as they "caused the people to understand the law," and were not in the pulpit with Ezra; and as it can hardly be supposed that he merely read, and that they expounded what he read; it is not unlikely, that they had separate audiences in different places, where they read and expounded the law, as Ezra did in the station assigned him: for one man's voice could not reach so great a multitude. Perhaps different orders and descriptions of persons formed separate circles: and therefore it is added, that "the people stood in their place," as it had been appointed to each of them.

V. 8. It is here said, "So they read," &c.; which confirms the preceding supposition, there being evidently more than one reader.—The persons engaged in this service read the text distinctly, and then gave the interpretation; thus the meaning was declared to the people, with all plainness, and application to their present circumstances and conduct, for their conviction and instruction. This seems the obvious meaning of the passage. Some learned men, however, suppose, that the Jews had forgotten the Hebrew, during the captivity; and that the expositors merely rendered what was read into Chaldee. 'But if this were true, why did the prophets write in Hebrew after their return from captivity? and this very book shews the contrary, (xiii. 23, 24;) where the Jews' language appears to have been spoken by the people. Nor is the custom of reading the Targum, (or Chaldee version,) after the law, very ancient.' (Bp. Patrick.)

V. 9. The people, when the law of God was read and explained to them, were convinced of their own guilt and danger, and, with tender consciences and broken hearts, mourned for their transgressions. (Notes, 2 Kings xxi. 8-11. 2 Col. Rom. iii. 19, 20. vii. 9-12. Gal. ii. 17-21. 2 Col.) This was indeed a proper effect of that service; and as it was a holy festival, which the Lord would have kept with joy and gladness; they were instructed by their teachers to repress their grief, and to turn their thoughts to the mercy of God, and to hope and rejoice in him.—"The Levites," as well as Ezra, "taught the people." (Notes, 2 Chr. xvii. 7-9. xxx. 22. xxxv. 3.)

V. 10, 11. After the former part of the day had been spent in the ordinances of religion, the people were allowed, and even required, (probably by a public notice from Nehemiah, enforced by the priests and Levites,) to spend the remainder in cheerful feasting, as a representation of the believer's joy in the service of his gracious God. (Notes, Deut. xii. 5-7. Eccl. iii. 1-11.) It is probable that peace-offerings had been offered, and they were now called to feast together on them; and might lawfully drink the sweet, or rich, wines, which their vineyards produced, in as liberal a manner as consisted with temperance. But then they must remember to send portions to those for whom nothing had been prepared; to the poor, the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow. (Deut. xii. 12, 18, 19. P. O.) For this would distinguish their religious 12 And all the people went their way to eat, and to drink, and to send portions, and to make great mirth, because they had understood the words that were declared unto them.

13 ¶ And on the second day were gathered together the chief of the fathers of all the people, the priests, and the Levites, unto Ezra the scribe, even to understand the words of the law.

14 And they found written in the law, which the Lord had commanded by Moses, that the children of Israel should dwell in booths, in the feast of the seventh month:

15 And that they should publish and proclaim in all their cities, and in Jerusalem, saying, Go forth unto the mount, and fetch olive-branches, and pine-branches, and myrtle-branches, and palm-branches, feasting from the sensual indulgence of carnal men, and complete the due solemnization of the holy day. They were also again reminded not to indulge grief, on the present festival; "for the joy of the Lord was their strength." A grateful adoring recollection of his late mercies, and his ancient distinguished favours to the nation, and powerful interposition in their behalf; with cheerful meditations on his promises and perfections, inspiring confidence, love, and zeal, and leading them to abound in joyful praises and thanksgivings, would fortify their souls to meet the dangers, encounter the difficulties, resist the temptations, and perform the duties, which still lay before them. Whereas, indulged sorrow would induce desponding fear, enfeeble their resolutions, and unfit them for labours, trials, and conflicts. (Notes, Ps. xxviii. 6—8. Prov. xv. 13. Is. xii. 1—3. xxxv. 3, 4. 2 Cor. ii. 5—11. Phil. iv. 4—7.)

V. 12. The people had not only understood from the law, the will of God and their own sinfulness, but they had learned, in some degree, the grounds of holy rejoicing: and having begun by sowing in tears, they soon were enabled to reap in joy. (Note, Ps. cxxvi. 5, 6.)

V. 13. This was no festival; but, having profited from the word the day before, the people were desirous to be further instructed: and the chief of the fathers, priests, and Levites, were the most forward, to request Ezra to favour them with an exposition of some other part of the law, being convinced of his superior knowledge in it. Hence it appears, that he instructed even those who assisted in teaching the people.

V. 14—16. (Notes, Lev. xxiii. 34—42. Num. xxix. 29—38. Zech. xiv. 16—19. John vii. 2. 14—17. 37—39.) It may be supposed, that Ezra selected those portions of the law, which prescribed the feast of tabernacles, as it had not in general been duly observed, and the season was approaching for it. (Note, Jam. i. 22—25.)

V. 17. Done so, &c. It is evident that this and the other solemn feasts were totally neglected, at some times, and for a long while together: yet a few instances occur of the feast of tabernacles being kept; and these words must therefore be understood of the exactness, unanimity, and joyfulness, with which it was at this time celebrated. (Notes, 1 Kings viii. 63—65. Marg. Ref.) "They rejoiced in the days of Joshua, that they had got possession of Canaan; and now they rejoiced that they were restored to it, and quietly settled in it." (Bp. Patrick. Notes, 1 Kings viii. 66. 2 Chr. xxx. 26, 27.)

V. 18. The reading of the law every seventh year at this feast had been enjoined; but it seems not in general to have been duly attended to; at this time, however, it formed a part of the daily service, through the whole continuance of the feast. (Note, Deut. xxxi. 10—13.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—8. Pious men of different dispositions may serve the church in their several ways. The studious may, as it were, prepare materials with which the active may work: and the active may make way for the studious, to bring forth their treasures for public use. They ought therefore reciprocally to assist each other; and to welcome such assistance, without envy, competition, or prejudice.—The public reading, expounding, and preaching of God's word has, in all ages, been the grand method of promoting true religion; they, therefore, who are eminently capable of this service, should be called forth from obscurity and retirement, and excited to abound in it; of all every age, sex, or rank, who are capable of understanding, should assemble to attend, and all ought to "give earnest heed to the things which they hear." (Note, 2 Chr. xvii. 7—9. P. O. 7—19.) "They, who are in reputation, should set an example of diligence in this respect, and even teachers should be "swift to hear" other ministers, as they have opportunity, that they may become more competent for the work.—When the value of the Scriptures and of the soul, is properly understood; and when we are earnestly engaged, and in a spiritual frame of mind, we shall not soon be weary of divine ordinances. Short sermons, therefore, or tired hearers, prove a very low state of religion; for facts demonstrate that where the word of God is precious, even inconvenient situations and uneasy postures will be patiently endured: and when ministers, who are themselves in earnest, perceive the people thirsting for instruction, and drinking it in, they will be encouraged to proceed, and to preach as much and as often as required, while God gives them health for the work.—Reading and preaching should be attended with solemn worship: the perfections of our God are worthy of all adoration; his mercies call for our grateful acknowledgment; and a sense of our own wants and unworthiness, love to his people, compassion for sinners, and regard to all orders of mankind, where they prevail, will dictate and branches of thick trees, to make booths, as it is written.

16 ¶ So the people went forth, and brought them, and made themselves booths, every one upon the roof of his house, and in their courts, and in the courts of the house of God, and in the street of the water-gate, and in the street of the gate of Ephraim.

17 And all the congregation of them, that were come again out of the captivity, made booths, and sat under the booths: for since the days of Jeshua the son of Nun, unto that day, had not the children of Israel done so. And there was very great gladness.

18 Also day by day, from the first day unto the last day, he read in the book of the law of God: and they kept the feast seven days, and on the eighth day was a solemn assembly, according unto the manner.

many prayers and supplications. In these services one person must speak, but all should join in their hearts, and express their solemn and cordial assent.—We cannot too humbly or reverently worship the Lord, the great God; yet, blessed be his name, we may call him Father, in filial confidence and hope.—Whenever we open the sacred volume, we should bless the Lord for that precious gift, and proceed to peruse it, with entire submission to his teaching and authority.—Ministers should endeavour to make it evident to every one, that they preach according to these sacred oracles, producing clear scriptural warrant for all their doctrine, reading the Word distinctly, diligently causing the people to understand it by familiar explanations and illustrations, and applying it in the most plain and simple manner to their hearts and consciences.

V. 9—18. The divine law, when faithfully unfolded, in its extensive demands and righteous sanction, is generally made successful by the Holy Spirit, in bringing the stout, hard, and proud hearts of sinners to tremble, to melt into godly sorrow, and to become abased before God. For, it pierces the conscience, fills the soul with dismay, and thus prepares for the sweet consolations of the gospel, by which is "the knowledge of salvation, through the remission of sins." Thus the broken heart is bound up, and the sinner learns to rejoice in God our Saviour.—Both godly sorrow and holy joy are profitable, and beautiful in their season: and it is peculiarly desirable to have all our passions regulated according to the will of God, and the duty of the present occasion. They who mourn for sin, should be comforted, instructed, and directed to rejoice in the Lord. This they have abundant reason to do, however many their sins have been, when they humbly come to trust in his mercy. His salvation is perfectly free; the provisions of his grace are plenteous; his righteousness is for ever; his ways are pleasantness; his protection sure; his consolations strong; and hope in his mercy, and of his glory, "maketh not ashamed," when "his love is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost." Joy in God, if genuine, adds strength and courage to the soul for every duty and for every trial; it inspires resolution for service, and vigour in resisting temptation; it satisfies, and sanctifies, and enlarges the heart in cheerful obedience, and in love to our brethren. Indeed, that joy is a mere counterfeit, which has not these effects: and they are enemies to their own sanctification, who always indulge sorrow, even for sin, and put from them those consolations which are tendered to them by the word and Spirit of God.—It is consistent with godliness, cheerfully and moderately to use the comforts of providence; when they are received with thanksgiving, and sanctioned by the word of God and prayer, and by liberally communicating to the poor and needy. But they, who "eat the fat and drink the sweet," but send no portion, or but little, to those for whom nothing is prepared, have not this sanctified enjoyment of their abundance. This especially distinguishes a Christian feast, from the revellings and banquetings, which are ranked by the apostle with abominable idolatries. (Note, 1 Pet. iv. 3—5.)—Whatever causes a believer to rejoice, should excite him to abound in thanksgivings to God, and liberality to the poor. But his joy will not so much arise from worldly prosperity or indulgence, as from having understood the words of God, and from perceiving that sinners may hope in his mercy, and in the prospect of eternal glory.—They, who have profited by the word of God, will be glad of an opportunity of hearing it on any day, as far as consistent with other duties: and when the people are so disposed, the minister is called to be "instant in season and out of season."—Some portions of Scripture are more suitable to the circumstances of our congregations than others would be, especially when they remind them of present duty: for, even true Christians neglect many things, through ignorance and forgetfulness, and for want of particular instructions. But it is admirable, when they no sooner hear the command of God, than they prepare for obedience; when, attending on the word excites an appetite for it; and when the ordinances afford great gladness to their souls.—Yet, alas, how little have the commandments and institutions of our God been hitherto observed, even among his professed worshippers! So that when individuals, or collective bodies, come near the standard of his word, in the power of godliness, they become "men wondered at." But though none, from age to age, or through whole nations of professed Christians, have ever served God, as some small company may aim to do; yet if these be evidently obeying the plain meaning of Scripture, they ought not to be censured as singular, precise, or affected; but to be commended and imitated.—True religion will make us strangers and pilgrims upon earth: and they, who refuse conformity to the world, and have their conversation in heaven, and their joy in the Lord, must appear strange and uncouth in the eyes of the servants of that other master, who "worketh in all the children of disobedience."

17 And ^drefused to obey, neither were mindful of thy wonders that thou didst among them; but ^ehardened their necks, and in their rebellion ^fappointed a captain to return to their bondage: but thou art ^ga God ^hready to pardon, ⁱgracious and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and ^jforsookest them not.

18 Yea, ^kwhen they had made them a molten calf, and said, This is thy god that brought thee up out of Egypt, and had wrought great provocations;

19 Yet thou, ^lin thy manifold mercies, forsookest them not in the wilderness: ^mthe pillar of the cloud departed not from them by day, to lead them in the way; neither the pillar of fire by night, to shew them light, and the way wherein they should go.

20 Thou ⁿgavest also thy ^ogood Spirit to instruct them, and ^pwitheldest not thy manna from their mouth, and ^qgavest them water for their thirst.

21 Yea, ^rforty years didst thou sustain them in the wilderness, so ^sthat they lacked nothing: ^ttheir clothes waxed not old, and their feet swelled not.

22 Moreover, ^uthou gavest them kingdoms and nations, and didst ^vdivide them into corners: so they possessed ^wthe land of Sihon, and the land of the king of Heshbon, and the land of Og king of Bashan.

23 Their children also ^xmultipliedst thou as the stars of heaven, and ^ybroughtest them into the land, concerning which ^zthou hadst promised to their fathers, that they should go in to possess it.

24 So the children went in and possessed the land, and ^{aa}thou subduedst before them the inhabitants of the land, the Canaanites, and gavest them into their hands, with their kings, and the people of the land, that they might do with them ^{ab}as they would.

25 And they took ^{ac}strong cities, and ^{ad}a fat land, and possessed houses full of all goods, ^{ae}wells digged, vineyards, and olive-yards, and ^{af}fruit-trees in abundance: so they ^{ag}did eat, and were filled, and became fat, and ^{ah}delighted themselves in thy great goodness.

26 Nevertheless ^{ai}they were disobedient, and rebelled against thee, and ^{aj}cast thy law behind their backs, and ^{ak}slew thy prophets, which testified against them, to turn them to thee, and ^{al}they wrought great provocations.

But in all these respects "they resisted the Holy Ghost." (Marg. Ref.)—The unspeakable condescension and compassion of the blessed Spirit of God, in his operations upon the polluted souls of sinful men, as well as the beneficent tendency of those operations, are strongly marked in the words "thy good Spirit." Israel's separation from other nations, being divided by seas, mountains, and deserts, from the most flourishing kingdoms in the world, was denoted by this expression. And indeed it is observable, that Jerusalem, which God chose for the metropolis of his people, was situated at a distance from the sea, and from all navigable rivers; and therefore could not become a place of extensive commerce. Others, however, suppose that the dispossessed nations are meant, who were driven into corners.—Heshbon being the city of Sihon, the words should be rendered, "even the land of the king of Heshbon."

kind friend and benefactor? what were our first thoughts, words, and works? As our faculties began to unfold, revolving years brought with them recent comforts and advantages: and did they not witness increasing perverseness, ingratitude, and ungodliness? Let us divide our lives past into distinct periods, and carefully investigate the mercies and the transgressions of each, until we have brought down the enquiry to the present hour: praying the Holy Spirit to assist our recollection; to enable us to form a proper estimate of the Lord's dealings with us, and our behaviour towards him; and to deduce proper inferences from the whole, with suitable affection. And if prejudice, ignorance, or self-flattery do not blind our minds, we shall certainly see abundant cause for deep humiliation and for admiring gratitude; and to acknowledge, that all our sufferings have been justly merited, all our comforts mercifully bestowed. Besides the temporal provision which we have from the Lord's bounty, (though not by miracle) we are favoured with means and opportunities of becoming wise unto salvation, even beyond what Israel enjoyed in their most favoured times. We have the sacred oracles, now completed and ever at hand, to give us light, and to shew us the way in which we should go. We have the gospel preached among us, and the holy sabbaths and ordinances of our God: but have we never neglected, profaned, and despised them? We have not been without salutary chastisements, and merciful deliverances perhaps in answer to prayer; but have we not required them by returning unto sin? We have had, not only the testimony of God's servants, but the strivings of his good Spirit: but have we never hated or despised the one, and quenched the other? nay, we are especially "under the ministration of the Spirit:" yet perhaps have neglected to pray for his gracious influences, and derided those who did! And have not we proudly cast off the authority of God's law; and as proudly endeavoured to justify ourselves before him? This, I say, was the case with us once, perhaps is still so with some who read these observations. Yet, whilst others have been cut off, we are spared! May this review of the Lord's mercies, and of our sins, bring us to true repentance, and induce us to condemn ourselves, as having imitated and vindicated all the transgressors who have gone before us: may it bring us to submit to the Lord's righteousness, to accept of his salvation, and to set our seal to his new covenant of mercy and grace: that "being delivered from all our enemies, we may serve him in righteousness before him," the remainder of our days. (Deut. ix. P. O. 2 Col. xxxii. P. O. 1—14. Ps. cv. P. O. 1—27. Ez. xx. P. O. 1—9.)

Even, if by the Lord's choice of us, and his grace given to us, we have on the whole been made, and found, faithful to him; and if his covenant have been ratified to us with all its precious promises: we shall not only have cause to adore him for these inestimable mercies, and for his Son Jesus Christ as the foundation of them all; but we shall, upon every review, see cause to admire his present patience and gentleness, and to lament our ingratitude and disobedience. We have been delivered from a far worse oppression, than that of the Egyptian tyrant, and by a far more wonderful exertion of almighty power and love. We are guided by a better light, sheltered by a more glorious protection, and favoured with stronger consolations, than Israel of old. We feed upon "the bread of life, which came down from heaven, to give life unto the world:" we drink the waters which flow from the Rock of ages, who was smitten for us; we are clothed with the robe of righteousness and salvation; our "feet are shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace;" and the good Spirit of God, is not only our condescending instructor and sanctifier, but our Comforter also, who deigns to make our hearts his temple! and we possess the hope and earnest of everlasting glory. But, whilst we rejoice in the Lord's great goodness to us, what requital do we make? We are, indeed, kept from habitual and gross disobedience: but we are conscious how often we are setting up our idols, and in heart returning to our bondage; how often we forget him, "grieve his Holy Spirit," and neglect his service; and how often we are kept from still greater revolts by no higher motives than the terror of his judgments, and the anguish of his salutary chastisements, which yet we soon forget, when he hath mercifully removed them. Were he not slow to anger and ready to pardon, he would have cast us off long ago. But our heavenly Advocate still pleads, and we are spared; and his mercies and our privileges are continued to us!

V. 32—38. On every review of our past conduct we shall find cause to lie down ashamed before God, praising his great goodness, and confessing our great unworthiness. Let us then thank him for his merciful corrections, as well as his consolations: let us renew our acceptance of his salvation, and ratification of his covenant: let us beg of him to deliver us from all other lords, that we may serve him more entirely. And let us frequently meditate on these subjects, that we may be preserved humble, thankful, and watchful; as well as be prepared for communion with him in every sacred ordinance.—It behoves all men to reflect seriously and frequently on the greatness, justice, and goodness of the Lord: to consider the terrible power of his indignation, and the infinite value of his favour. And they should remember that pride, obstinacy, and impenitence are the sins which ruin the soul; and that no former crimes can ruin the penitent believer. Let then the sinner trust in the mercy of him, who is a God of pardons, and "ready to forgive;" let the backslider repent and return to him; let the believer walk humbly with him: let the prosperous fear

V. 36, 37. The situation of Israel was very different, from what it had been under their own kings, and in the days of their prosperity. God had for their sins set over them the kings of Persia, who exacted from them heavy taxes, and who had their property, liberty, and lives entirely in their power. It was very distressing for the worshippers of God, to be in slavery to the worshippers of dumb idols: and though they had no intention of revolting from the kings of Persia, who allowed them to live according to their own laws; yet they hoped, that upon their deep repentance, and more entire return to God, he would more effectually deliver them from captivity and bondage, and restore them in due season to their former prosperity. (Note, v. 1—5. Ps. lxxxv. 1—8. cvi. 46—48.)

V. 38. A sure, &c. This solemn covenanting with God seems to have been the object that Nehemiah and Ezra, and other leading men, aimed at, in all these instructions and religious observances. (Note, x. i. Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—6. The diligent study of God's word will more and more show us both our own sinfulness, and the plenteousness of his salvation; and thus alternately call us to mourn for sin, and to rejoice in him.—Seasons of comfort should remind us of his condescending goodness, and so lead us to deeper self-abasement on account of our crimes against him: and thus joyful feasts and solemn fasts may properly succeed, and prepare our hearts for, each other.—Our sorrow and humiliation for sin must be evidenced to be genuine by separation from it, and from every occasion or temptation to it.—Every discovery of the truth and will of God should endear to us his sacred word, and render us more unwearied in our attendance on it and on his worship. A few hours, or even occasionally a whole day, cannot be too long to spend in those exercises, and meditations, which are preparations for heaven, and anticipations of its sacred joys: yet, alas! we are most of us sooner weary in the courts of the Lord, than the trifler is at his diversions, or even the labourer at his work!—Our God knoweth our thoughts before we speak, and mental prayer may suit our secret intercourse with him: but they who address him in public, should speak audibly and with animation; that the people may hear, and be affected: and if, on some occasions, "they cry with a loud voice unto the Lord their God," or be more copious than usual, they cannot be censured, without involving those who are commended in the sacred Scriptures.—Whether we feast and rejoice, or fast and mourn for sin, we should be ready to bless and praise the Lord our God, both for his eternal excellencies, for his goodness to us as our Creator, and the sole Author of all our temporal comforts; and above all, as the God of salvation, for the wonders which he hath done for his church of redeemed sinners from the beginning hitherto.

V. 7—31. In reviewing this abstract of the Lord's conduct toward Israel, as a people, from the choice and call of Abraham to the days of Nehemiah, we perceive a continued display of his power, wisdom, truth, and love, requited by persevering ingratitude, and perverse disobedience. All their distinguishing advantages originated from the Lord's choice of them, and his gracious promises, which he most faithfully performed. But while surrounded with the riches of his bounty, and the demonstrations of his power and presence: while his holy law yet sounded in their ears, Sinai's fiery top was before their eyes, and they were guided, guarded, sustained, and instructed by miracles; they rebelled against God, set up idols, attempted to return to Egypt, and rushed vehemently into the most daring provocations! Yet he did not destroy them, he withdrew not his mercies from them, he was ever ready to hear their prayers, to pardon their sins, and to do them good; though they still continued their ingratitude, their murmurings, and provocations! The dealings of the Lord toward them, as a nation, in their warnings, corrections, and deliverances, throughout the whole history; and their ingratitude, perverseness, neglect of his worship, contempt and persecution of his prophets, relapses into idolatry, and other enormities, tended to show the riches of his goodness, forbearance, and long-suffering, and the hardness of their impenitent hearts. And even when at length justice demanded, that they should be given up into the hands of their enemies, and their temple, city, and country desolated; his tender mercy prevented him from utterly casting them off; their miseries were great and terrible; but the Lord was just in all that he had done: yet, it was of his mercies that they were not consumed, and that a remnant had been brought back to their own land; who soon began to shew the same spirit of ingratitude and disobedience.—And is not their conduct a specimen of human nature?—Our land, for instance, hath for ages been favoured with deliverances, opportunities, and benefits, little, if at all, inferior to those vouchsafed to Israel: and have we not copied Israel's ingratitude, rebellion, and iniquity? Oh, may a general reformation, while yet we are spared, prevent our being given up into the hands of foreign conquerors, or domestic oppressors! (Deut. xxii. P. O. 15—35. Ps. lxxxix. P. O. 12—55. cvi. P. O. 28—48. Ez. xvi. P. O. 1, 2, 3. Col. xx. P. O. 10—49.)

But especially we should study our own history. Let us look back to the time, when we received our being, as rational creatures, from the goodness and power of the Lord: let us recollect the distinguishing advantages of our infancy and childhood: then let us ask ourselves, what were our first returns to our

Let us ever remember that all our miseries are the effect of sin, and that they are all less than we deserve, though hard for us to bear: let us then pray to be delivered from the bitter pains of eternal death; and not forget to intreat the Lord to deliver his church from all the oppression of the enemy, and to establish it in the beauty of holiness.

NOTES.

CHAP. X. V. 1. We have several times read of the rulers, priests, and people solemnly covenanting before God, to renounce their transgressions, and to adhere to his service. Such transactions were sometimes ratified with sacrifices, solemn oaths, and other expressions of the most entire consent to them: but this is the first instance met with of a covenant drawn up in writing, and ratified by the names and seals of the persons who consented to it. (Notes, 29. Ez. xxiv. 3-11. Deut. xxvi. 17-19. xxx. 10-15. Josh. viii. 30-35. xxiv. 14-28. 2 Kings xi. 17-20. xxiii. 3. 2 Chr. xv. 12-15. Is. xlv. 3-5. P. O. 1-5.) No doubt this was devised, to render the transaction more affecting; and that the deed might remain as a durable testimony against those who violated it: the explicit ratification thus given would render the persons concerned more sensible of their obligations, and more afraid of transgression; it would fortify them against temptation, preserve them from forgetfulness, and be a constant argument for them to urge, in cautioning, exhorting, or reproving each other.—The same uses may be made of those professions, and of that consent to the new covenant, which are virtually made in baptism, whether personal, or that of our children; and in the Lord's supper; when those ordinances are duly explained and understood, administered and attended on. (Note, Matt. xix. 12-15. P. O. 13-15. xxvi. 26-28. P. O. 26-35.)—To this covenant the chief persons alone set their names and seals; and Nehemiah, the governor, first.—Perhaps Ziddikjah was one of the princes; but no other name is explicitly mentioned of that order.

V. 2-8. It is observable that Eliashib, the high priest, is not found among those who sealed the covenant. And it is probable, that neither he nor his sons favoured the measure. (Note, xiii. 4.)—But it is more surprising that the name of Ezra is wanting. There is no reason to think that he was absent; for he was at Jerusalem both before and after this transaction: perhaps he was confined by sickness or infirmity; or the measure so entirely originated with him, and he had bestowed so much pains in drawing up the covenant, and inducing others to consent to it, that his further ratification of it was deemed superfluous. (Note, Dan. iii. 8-12.)

V. 9-17. Most, if not all, of the Levites, who led the public devotions, set their seal to the covenant; which may be admitted as a probable indication, that they were earnestly and zealously engaged in that service. (Notes, ix. 4. 5. Marg. Ref.)

V. 18-27. Many of the names, here mentioned, are found among those who returned with Zerubbabel, about ninety years before; so that, either the same names were preserved in the several families; or the principal descendants of these persons, when in general favourable to the measure, subscribed their family-name, that is, the name of that ancestor, by relation to whom they were commonly distinguished. (Luke, i. 61.)

V. 28. (Marg. Ref.) All they, &c. It is probable, that these were the proselytes who, having been circumcised, separated from their idolatrous connexions, and kept the law of Moses, and thus were numbered among the native Jews.

V. 29. By the nobles, in this place, the superior persons, priests, or Levites, are evidently meant. The body of the people, who were old enough to be capable of knowing what was intended, assembled together, and signified, by some appointed token, their consent to the covenant, as in the presence of God, and under the solemn obligation of an oath; and to an awful curse, which was denounced against such as violated these obligations. (Notes, v. 10-13. Deut. xxvii. 15-27.) They engaged in general to obey the whole law of Moses; and some instances were specified, in which they had been remarkably guilty, or which were peculiarly ensnaring.

V. 30, 31. (Notes, Ezra ix. x.)—It seems, that Nehemiah would not venture, in the present unsettled state of the Jews, to exercise his authority, in preventing their heathen neighbours from vending provisions at Jerusalem, or in the cities of Judah, on the sabbath: and he supposed, that by engaging the people, in this solemn manner, not to buy of them, they would be discouraged from coming. But he soon found, that many evaded, or violated, the engagement, without regard to consequences; and he was afterwards constrained to employ coercive measures: (Notes, xiii. 15-22.)—It may be concluded from this narrative, that none of the Jews attempted to carry on trade on the sabbath; yet they would buy of the Gentiles. This gave the latter an undue advantage, and proportionably injured the Jews. And certainly, carrying on trade is as contrary to the law of hallowing the sabbath, as any kind of labour whatever.

The exaction, &c. (Notes, v. 7-13. Deut. xv. 2. 3. Matt. xvii. 24-35.)

V. 32, 33. A half-shekel apiece had been collected for erecting the tabernacle in the wilderness; and that sum is supposed to have been paid from time to time, for the purchase of sacrifices, and other expenses of the stated worship. (Notes, Ez. xxx. 11-16. 2 Kings xii. 4. 5. 2 Chr. xxiv. 6. Matt. xvii. 24-27.) But it was now computed, that one third of a shekel apiece, or something less than a shilling of our money, annually, would suffice for these expenses. During prosperous times, the treasury of the temple, it is probable, supplied these expenses; and on some occasions the liberality of kings and nobles rendered such contributions unnecessary: but the circumstances of the nation now required them.

V. 34. It is probable, that the wood for fuel had hitherto been provided for out of the same fund with the sacrifices: but on this occasion it was deemed expedient to bear the expenses of it in another manner.—It seems each family engaged to send in a regular supply at an appointed time every year; and that the order was determined by lot.

37 And that we should bring ^bthe first fruits of our dough, and our offerings, and the fruit of all manner of trees, of wine, and of oil, unto the priests, ^cto the chambers of the house of our God: and ^dthe tithes of our ground unto the Levites, that the same Levites might have the tithes, in all the cities of our tillage.

38 And the priest the son of Aaron shall be with the Levites, ^ewhen the Levites take tithes: and the Levites shall bring up the tithe of the tithes unto the house of our God, to the chambers, into ^fthe treasure-house.

39 For ^gthe children of Israel and ^hthe children of Levi shall bring the offering of the corn, of the new wine, and the oil, unto the chambers, where ⁱare the vessels of the sanctuary, and the priests that minister, and the porters, and the singers: and ^jwe will not forsake the house of our God.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—29. As the creatures and subjects of the Lord, we are bound by his authority to obey all his commandments, and are exposed to a tremendous curse for violating them. But our offended Sovereign, in his infinite mercy, hath provided a better covenant, according to which believers are delivered from this curse, and are taught and enabled to perform a new, sincere, and acceptable obedience through Jesus Christ. The word of God calls us to consent to this covenant, and to partake of its inestimable benefits. And when we humble ourselves in godly sorrow and penitent confessions of sin; when we receive the atonement, which the Mediator of this covenant hath made by his precious blood, and seek for mercy through his intercession by fervent prayers; and when in our purposes of renewed obedience, we rely on his gracious assistance; when these transactions have indeed taken place in secret, between God and our souls; our public sealing and ratifying the covenant, at the Lord's table, or in any other solemn way, will be honourable to God, edifying to his people, and encouraging to ourselves; and we may trust in him to enable us to fulfil the engagements with acceptance. But where this preparation of heart is wanting, such public engagements are mere hypocrisy. (Deut. xix. P. O. 1—14. 2 Chr. xxx. P. O. 13—27.) This detestable evil will intrude in all great revivals of religion, after every possible precaution; and the hypocrites must be left to the judgment of a heart-searching God. But men should be warned, that they, who in baptism, or at the Lord's table, or when admitted into the ministry, or in any other way, engage for what they do not intend, or afterwards do not take care, to perform, bring themselves under an additional and most awful curse: as do all, who trifle with solemn oaths, vows, or sacramental engagements of any kind; and all, who despise, oppose, or pervert the salvation of the gospel.—Every one, capable of understanding, is alike required to obey the law of God; all need the mercy and grace of the gospel; all therefore should be exhorted and commanded, to set their seals to the new covenant: but they, who have the pre-eminence in society, or take the lead in religious exercises, ought to set the example; and they, who are remarkably zealous to reform others, should be as remarkably zealous in every good work.—The influence and example of the great will always have a powerful effect upon their inferiors: their distinction is truly honourable, when, in following and cleaving to them, others follow and cleave to the Lord: and the Christian equality of the common people, as brethren to believing nobles and rulers, will influence them to render more heartily “honour to whom honour is due.” (Note, 1 Tim. vi. 1—5.)

V. 30—39. We are not sincere in covenanting with God, except we aim to obey all his commandments: for if we allow ourselves in violating one of them habitually, it is evident that we have not truly repented of our former transgressions in that particular; that we have never sought forgiveness of them in a due manner; that we do not desire the sanctifying Spirit of Christ, to mortify that peculiar sinful propensity: and consequently that we are not born of God, nor interested in the righteousness and atonement of Christ. But real believers place the strongest guard, where there is the greatest danger; and use every means of avoiding and subduing those sins, which have the most foiled and ensnared them. Separation from intimate connexions with ungodly persons, and the conscientious hallowing of the Lord's day, are peculiarly attended to by them. They will not infringe upon the sacred rest, and they will shew a marked disapprobation of those who do: they will remove occasions of transgression, and previously so arrange every thing, as may best promote the useful observance of that holy day. Their attention to the ordinances of God will be connected with justice to all men, and mercy to those who need it. They will not exact from their brethren, when it would distress them; but they will trust the Lord to repay what they thus lose or expend. Though they be poor or burdened, they will find a little to spare for pious or charitable uses; that little will be accepted; and, coming from great numbers, will form large funds for useful purposes.—As the ordinances of God are the appointed means of sustenance to our souls, the believer should not grudge the expense of them. Even the poor will part with their money for bread: yet most men leave their souls to starve! But the covenanted servant of God “honours him with his substance and with the first-fruits of his increase,” and that brings a blessing upon the rest: (Note, Prov. iii. 9, 10;) nor will he defraud or withhold from the ministers, who labour in the word and doctrine, their proportion of a suitable maintenance.—In short, we must render to God, to the king, to magistrates, superiors, equals, inferiors, relatives, the poor, and all men, that which is due unto them, according to the precepts of Scripture; if we would evidence ourselves to be the true disciples of Christ, and, “adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour:” and in these things we must persevere, exhorting one another, “not to forsake the house of our God,” but to walk before him in all his ordinances and commandments blameless.”

NOTES.

CHAP. XI. V. 1, 2. Jerusalem at this time was not a place of trade, by which men could acquire wealth: the houses in general were not built: the adversaries of the Jews were peculiarly hostile to that city, both as the capital of the people, whose returning prosperity they envied, and the place of the holy worship, which they hated: so that the cities of Judah, and other situations in the country, afforded a fairer prospect of living in peace and of growing rich. It was therefore deemed a necessary policy, to replenish Jerusalem, for the re-establishment of the Jews as a distinct nation; and for the honour of the temple, and the protection of the priests and worshippers from the invasion of their enemies. It was “the holy city,” as chosen, separated, and sanctified of God, for his immediate presence and instituted worship; as a type of Christ, and even of heaven; and as the place, where the greatest advantages of becoming holy were enjoyed; yet the Jews, in general, had not sufficient zeal, or desire after spiritual improvement, to venture the consequences of removing thither. Some indeed willingly offered themselves to dwell there; whom their brethren commended, thanked, and prayed for; though few would imitate them. The rulers fixed their residence there, that the courts of justice, and the business connected with public affairs, might draw others; and, in addition to these inhabitants, one family in ten was expressly required to remove to Jerusalem; the selection of which was by lot referred to the determination of God. ‘They cast lots, that among ten men, it might be known whom God chose to come thither; and the lot falling by divine appointment upon such a person rather than on another; no doubt, he removed the more contentedly to this city.’ (Bp. Patrick.) (Notes, Lev. xvi. 8—10. Prov. xvi. 33. Acts i. 23—26.)

V. 3. Israel, in this verse, seems to mean those of the ten tribes who went up with the Jews. These were not required to dwell at Jerusalem, but inhabited the cities and villages allotted to them. The priests, Levites, Nethinims, and the children of Solomon's servants likewise, were left at liberty when not attending at the temple. (Notes, 1 Chr. ix. 2. Ezra ii. 55. vii. 24—26.)

V. 4—6. Shiloni is supposed by some to mean Shelah, Judah's youngest, but only surviving, son by Shuah, the Canaanitess. (Marg. Ref.) If this supposition be well grounded, his descendants seem to have been included in the four hundred threescore and eight valiant men of Perez, or Pharez; that being the principal branch of the tribe of Judah.—Many or most of these men of Judah seem to have offered themselves willingly to dwell at Jerusalem, in order to defend it; and probably they were, in general, heads of families: yet the number from this principal tribe, appears to have been comparatively small.—In Chronicles, a larger number is stated: but it may be supposed, that the descendants of Zerach, (Judah's other son) are also included, of whom no more than one is mentioned in this chapter. (24. Note, 1 Chr. ix. 3—9.)

V. 7—9. The greatest part of Jerusalem was situated within the lot of Benjamin; and, it is probable, the men of that tribe were most desirous of having it fully replenished.—Nearly twice as many of this tribe, (we may suppose, with their families,) dwelt there, as of Judah. The number does not exactly agree with that in the ninth of the first of Chronicles; though there can be no reasonable doubt but the same events are intended: but at this daiah, the son of Kolaiah, the son of Maaseiah, the son of Ithiel, the son of Jesaiah.

8 And after him Gabbai, Sallai, nine hundred twenty and eight.

9 And Joel the son of Zichri was their overseer: and ¹Judah the son of Senuah was second over the city.

11 ¹Seraiah the son of Hilkiah, the son of Meshulam, the son of Zadok, the son of Meraioth, the son of Ahitub, was the ruler of the house of God.

13 And his brethren, chief of the fathers, two hundred forty and two: and Amashai the son of Azareel, the son of Ahasai, the son of Meshillemoth, the son of Immer, 14 And their brethren, mighty men of valour, an hundred twenty and eight: and their overseer was Zabdiel, the son ^{*}of one of the great men.

15 Also of the Levites ¹Shemaiah the son of Hashub, the son of Azrikam, the son of Hashabiah, the son of Bunni.

16 And ¹Shabbethai and Jozabad, of the chief of the Levites, had the oversight of the outward business of the house of God.

17 And Mattaniah the son of Micha, the son of ¹Zabdi, the son of Asaph, was the principal, ^{}to begin the ^{}thanksgiving in prayer; and ¹Bakbukiah the second among his brethren, and Abda the son of Shammua, the son of Galal, the son of Jeduthun.

18 All the Levites in ^{*}the holy city were two hundred fourscore and four.

19 Moreover the porters, ¹Akkub, Talmon, and their brethren that kept ^{*}the gates, were an hundred seventy and two.

distance of time it cannot be supposed that such trivial variations can in all cases be accounted for; though the reason of them might be very evident to contemporaries.—From this time Jerusalem was progressively re-peopled; so that it soon became very populous, and continued to be so, till destroyed by the Romans.—Joel was the principal commander of the Benjamites in Jerusalem: and Judah, or Hodaviah, was his deputy, or the next in authority under him.

V. 10—15. (Notes, xii. 10—12. 1 Chr. vi. 13—15. Ezra iii. 2.) Eliashib was high priest at this time, under whom it is probable Seraiah had the oversight of all the temple-service. Some think the captain of the temple held the same office. (Marg. Ref.) The priests, mentioned in these verses, seem to have constantly resided at Jerusalem, by their own choice; besides those who attended by rotation. (Note, 3.)

V. 16. The outward, &c. (Note, 1 Chr. xxvi. 29.) These persons seem to have had the charge of providing the sacrifices, and making all the other outward preparations for the worship, which the priests performed in the courts and in the sanctuary.

V. 17. (Note 1 Chr. ix. 12—18.) The time of the morning and evening sacrifices were the principal hours of prayer to the Jews, who then resorted to the courts of the temple for their devotions.—These were, it seems, preceded by the solemn praises and thanksgivings, which the Levites rendered to the Lord with music and singing. Over this sacred service, Mattaniah, as precentor, stately presided; while the others here named, being descendants of Jeduthun, one of the chief singers in David's time, acted under his direction. (Notes, 22, 23. 1 Chr. xvi. 37—43. xxv. 1—7. 2 Chr. v. 12, 13. xxix. 25—28.)

V. 19. Akkub and Talmon are numbered with the porters which came up with Zerubbabel, nearly a hundred years before the events here recorded. In this and a few other instances of the same kind, it must be supposed, either that the children were called by the names of their fathers; or that, having distinct names of their own, they were also honoured in their public characters by the names of their more illustrious ancestors.

V. 22, 23. (Note, 17.) The descendants of Asaph, (a chief singer in the time of David,) presided over some business relative to the temple and its repairs, at those times when not employed in psalmody. And they were appointed to this service, because, it seems, the king of Persia allowed those employed in singing the praises of God a daily stipend, besides their maintenance as Levites. (Notes, 1 Chr. ix. 33. Ezra vii. 24—26.)

V. 24. Pethahiah, a descendant of Judah by Zerah, probably, was the king's commissioner, who received the tribute, made all payments from it, and managed all such matters, according to orders from the king. It was an advantage to the Jews to have one of their own nation in this post; and it may be supposed he was preferred to it, through Nehemiah's recommendation.

V. 25—36. No account is given of those who dwelt in the cities and villages; but merely of the places which they inhabited. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It has in all ages been justly lamented, that men prefer their own ease and emolument to the public good; that even professed Christians too commonly “seek their own, and not the things of Jesus Christ;” and that but few have such an attachment to holy places and holy things, as to renounce their secular pleasures or advantages for the sake of them. Yet surely, where opportunities of spiritual improvement most abound, and where Jesus, the ruler of our holy city, resides, there we should delight to dwell; in preference to all interests and connexions, and notwithstanding persecutions, tribulations, perils, and losses! Otherwise, where is our “meetness for the inheritance of the saints in light?” and how shall we be willing to depart hence, and be “absent from the body, that we may be present with the Lord?” For, to the carnally-minded, the perfect holiness of heaven, of its inhabitants, its employments, and its pleasures, and especially of that God who there unveils his glory, would be proportionably more intolerable, than the feeble beginnings of holiness in his church on earth, which excite their disgust, their weariness, and aversion.—The remnant who now willingly offer themselves to self-denying and perilous services, from love to the church, and zeal for the glory of God, shall be marked with peculiar honour: and many will commend, and wish them well, who, alas! have not courage to imitate them.—Our habitations are allotted us by the Lord himself; and we should not be hasty in changing them, though they be in some respects inconvenient, especially if convenient for attendance on divine ordinances.—In every station in life we should study to be quiet, and to do our own business with diligence; and, at all times, to cast our cares on God, and make our requests known unto him, by prayer, with thanksgiving. We cannot be so

NOW these are the priests and the Levites that went up with Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and Jeshua: Seraiah, Jeremiah, Ezra, Amariah, Malluch, Hattush, Shechaniah, Rehum, Meremoth, Iddo, Ginnetho, Abijah, Miamin, Maadiah, Bilgah, Shemaiah, and Joiarib, Jedaiah. These were the chief of the priests, and of their brethren, in the days of Jeshua.

Moreover the Levites; Jeshua, Binnui, Kadmiel, Sherebiah, Judah, and Mattaniah, which was over the thanksgiving, he and his brethren.

Also Bakbukiah and Unni, their brethren, were over against them in the watches.

¶ And Jeshua begat Joiakim, Joiakim also begat Eliashib, and Eliashib begat Joiada.

¶ And Joiada begat Jonathan, and Jonathan begat Jaddua.

And in the days of Joiakim were priests, the chief of the fathers: of Seraiah, Meraiah; of Jeremiah, Hananiah;

of Ezra, Meshullam; of Amariah, Jehohanan;

of Melicuz, Jonathan; of Shebaniah, Joseph;

of Harim, Adna; of Meraioth, Helkai;

of Iddo, Zechariah; of Ginnethon, Meshullam;

of Abijah, Zichri; of Miniamin; of Moadiah, Piltai;

of Bilgah, Shammua; of Shemaiah, Jehonathan;

And of Joiarib, Mattenai; of Jedaiah, Uzzi;

Of Sallai, Kallai; of Amok, Eber;

Of Hilkiah, Hashabiah; of Jedaiah, Nethaneel

¶ The Levites, in the days of Eliashib, Joiada, and Johanan, and Jaddua, were recorded chief of the fathers: also the priests, to the reign of Darius the Persian.

The sons of Levi, the chief of the fathers, were written in the book of the chronicles, even until the days of Johanan the son of Eliashib.

¶ And the chief of the Levites: Hashabiah, afflicted, as not to have cause for gratitude; nor so prosperous, as to have no need of prayer: these duties should therefore be always united. (Notes, Phil. iv. 5-7. 1 Thes. v. 16-18.) And to this the ministers ought to stir up the people, not only by their exhortations, but by their example likewise.—As far as the Lord sees good, he makes even strangers to protect and provide for his servants. Let us then seek first his favour and his glory; let us study contentment, patience, and usefulness in our several stations; and wait in cheerful hope for an admission into the holy city of our God above.

NOTES.

CHAP. XII. V. 1-6. It is evident that Ezra, here mentioned, was not Ezra the scribe, but a priest of the same name, who came up to Jerusalem long before with Zerubbabel. Several of the names are the same with those of the priests who sealed the covenant; (Marg. Ref.) but different persons must be intended; and it is evident, the same names were sometimes preserved in their families.

V. 7. "The chief of the priests" seem to have been the heads of the courses established by David; with the next in succession to the high-priesthood, and the ruler or captain of the temple. Perhaps the twenty-four courses were not yet fully established. (Notes, 1 Chr. xxiv. 6-10. Ezra ii. 36-39.)

V. 8, 9. (Note, xi. 17.—In the watches. (9.) It is probable, that some of the Levites, in succession, sang the praises of God in the sanctuary, during the watches of the night. (Note, Ps. cxxxiv. 1-3.)

V. 10, 11. Jaddua is, by most expositors, supposed to have been high priest in the time of Alexander the Great, and to have met that haughty conqueror in his pontifical habit; in consequence of which Alexander greatly favoured the Jews.—It is, however, evident, that he was high priest long after the events, which are mentioned at the close of this book; for Joiada then filled that high office; (xiii. 28.) and as "Darius the Persian," (22,) is supposed to mean the last king of Persia, who was subdued by Alexander, about a hundred years after the principal transactions recorded in this book; this verse, and the twenty-second, must have been added by another hand, after the death of Nehemiah. (26.)

V. 12-21. These verses contain a catalogue of the next race of chief priests, as descended from those who came up from Babylon with Zerubbabel.—The marginal references shew the variations which occur in respect of their names.

V. 22-26. It is not easy to determine, why these few names of the Levites were here inserted: but probably they were persons who greatly distinguished themselves, and were highly honoured and trusted by their contemporaries. (Marg. Ref.)—Man of God. (24.) (Notes, Deut. xxxiii. 1. 2 Chr. viii. 14. 1 Tim. vi. 11, 12.)—Ward over, &c. (Notes, 8, 9. 1 Chr. xxiv. 8.) 'In their turns, one coming on, when another went out, to attend in their courses, which are called wards.' (Bp. Patrick.) (xiii. 30. Notes, 1 Chr. ix. 23. xxvi. 12, 13.)—These, &c. (26.) (Note, 10, 11.)

V. 27, 28. Jerusalem was the holy city, and the wall was built under the immediate care of JEHOVAH: It was therefore proper that it should be dedicated to that God who was there worshipped, by solemn praises, thanksgivings, prayers, and sacrifices; and thus committed to his gracious protection. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Deut. xx. 5-9. Ezra vi. 13-18. Dan. ix. 24-27.)

V. 29. Builded, &c. That they might be near at hand, when wanted; and attend more conveniently and regularly at the temple.

V. 30. When the priests and Levites had prepared themselves by the appointed purifications, they proceeded to purify the people, the gates, and the wall; probably by sprinkling the water of purification, with suitable prayers and supplications. (Marg. Ref. Note, Lev. xvi. 15, 16. P. O. 1-19.)

V. 31-43. The princes and priests were divided into two companies on the wall, Ezra going before the one, and Nehemiah after the other. (36, 38.) Thus Sherebiah, and Jeshua the son of Kadmiel, with their brethren over against them, to praise and to give thanks, "according to the commandment of David the man of God," ward over against ward.

25 Mattaniah, and Bakbukiah, Obadiah, Meshullam, Talmon, Akkub, were porters, 'keeping the ward at the thresholds of the gates.

26 These were in the days of Joiakim the son of Jeshua, the son of Jozadak; and in the days of Nehemiah the governor, and of Ezra the priest, the scribe.

27 ¶ And at the dedication of the wall of Jerusalem, they sought the Levites out of all their places, to bring them to Jerusalem, to keep the dedication with gladness, both with thanksgivings, and with singing, with cymbals, psalteries, and with harps.

28 And the sons of the singers gathered themselves together, both out of the plain country round about Jerusalem, and from the villages of Netophathi;

29 Also from the house of Gilgal, and from the fields of Geba, and Azmaveth: for the singers had builded them villages round about Jerusalem.

30 And the priests and the Levites purified themselves, and purified the people, and the gates, and the wall.

31 Then I brought up the princes of Judah upon the wall, and appointed two great companies of them that gave thanks, whereof one went on the right hand upon the wall toward the dung-gate;

32 And after them went Hoshaiah, and half of the princes of Judah.

33 And Azariah, Ezra, and Meshullam,

34 Judah, and Benjamin, and Shemaiah, and Jeremiah,

35 And certain of the priests' sons with trumpets; namely, Zechariah the son of Jonathan, the son of Shemaiah, the son of Mattaniah, the son of Michaiah, the son of Zaccur, the son of Asaph;

36 And his brethren, Shemaiah, and Azarael, Milalai, Gilalai, Maai, Nethaneel, and Judah, Hanani, with the musical instruments of David the man of God, and Ezra the scribe before them.

37 And at the fountain-gate, which was over against them, they went up by the stairs of the city of David, at the going up of the wall, above the house of David, even unto the water-gate eastward.

38 And the other company of them that gave thanks went over against them, and I after them, and the half of the people upon the wall, from beyond the tower of the furnaces, even unto "the broad wall:

39 And from above "the gate of Ephraim, and above "the old gate, and above "the fish-gate, and "the tower of Hananeel, and the tower of Meah, even unto the "sheep-gate; and they stood still in "the prison-gate.

40 So stood "the two companies of them that gave thanks in the house of God, and I, and the half of the rulers with me:

41 And the priests; Eliakim, Maaseiah, Miniamin, Michaiah, Elioenai, Zechariah, and Hananiah, "with trumpets;

42 And Maaseiah, and Shemaiah, and Eleazar, and Uzzi, and Jehohanan, and Malchijah and Elam, and Ezer: and the singers "sang loud with Jezrahiah their "overseer.

43 Also that day they "offered great sacrifices, and rejoiced: for "God had made them rejoice with great joy: "the wives also and the children rejoiced: so that "the joy of Jerusalem was heard even afar off.

44 ¶ And at that time were "some appointed over "the chambers for the treasures, for the offerings, for the first-fruits, and for the tithes, to gather into them, out of the fields of the cities, the portions "of the law for the priests and Levites: for "Judah rejoiced for the priests and for "the Levites that "waited.

45 And both "the singers and the porters kept the ward of their God, and "the ward of the purification, according to the commandment of David, and of Solomon his son.

46 For in the days of David "and Asaph, of old there were chief of the singers, and songs of praise and thanksgiving unto God.

47 And all Israel, in the days of Zerubbabel, and in the days of Nehemiah, "gave the portions of the singers and the porters, every day his portion; and "they "sanctified holy things unto the Levites, and the Levites sanctified them unto the children of Aaron.

CHAP. XIII.

On reading the law, Israel separates from the mixed multitude, 1—3. Eliashib having, during Nehemiah's absence, prepared a chamber at the temple for Tobiah, Nehemiah on his return, being grieved and indignant, causes the chamber to be cleansed, 4—9. He reforms abuses concerning tithes and offerings, 10—14. He prevents the profanation of the Sabbath, 15—22. He opposes those who had married strange wives, and drives away the grandson of Eliashib, 23—28. His other services and prayers, 29—31.

ON that day "they read in the book of Moses in the "audience of the people; and therein was found written, that "the Ammonite and the "Moabite should not come into the congregation of God for ever;

2 Because they met not the children of Israel with bread and with water, but "hired Balaam against them, that he should curse them: howbeit "our God turned the curse into a blessing.

3 Now it came to pass, "when they had heard the law, "that they separated from Israel all "the mixed multitude.

4 ¶ And before this, "Eliashib the priest, "having the oversight of the chamber of the house of our God, was "allied unto Tobiah;

5 And he had prepared for him "a great chamber, where aforetime they laid the meat-offerings, the frankincense, and the vessels, and the tithes of the corn, the new wine, and the oil, "which was commanded to be given to the Levites, and the singers, and the porters; and the offerings of the priests.

they marched in a row opposite ways, in the circuit of the wall, the priests sounding the sacred trumpets, the Levites playing upon instruments and singing the praises of God, and the people accompanying them on each side. (Marg. Ref.) When they met on the opposite side of the city, they marched in a body to the temple, and offered sacrifices and thank-offerings, with rejoicings; for God, by enabling them to rebuild and fortify the city, had made them to rejoice with great joy: so that the praises and acclamations of so large a multitude were heard at a great distance. (Notes, Ezra, iii. 12, 13. Jer. xxxi. 10—14. Matt. xxi. 8—11.)—Zechariah, (35,) being descended from Asaph, of the line of Gershon, was no priest; and the word "namely" is improperly added. (Marg. Ref.)—Man of God. (36.) (Note, 22—26.)

V. 44—47. The attendance, and behaviour, of the priests and Levites, on this solemn occasion, seem to have greatly rejoiced the pious Jews: and therefore they were zealous to provide for them, that their incomes might be properly paid, and distributed by persons appointed for that purpose. Thus matters were settled, as they had been in the days of David and Solomon. (Marg. Ref.) Similar regulations had been made in the days of Zerubbabel; but they were completed, and put upon a durable footing, in the time of Nehemiah. (Notes, xlii. 5—14. 2 Chr. xxxi. 5—19. Mal. iii. 7—12.)—The tithes were paid to the Levites, as sanctified to their use; and the tithes of them was by the Levites sanctified to the use of the priests. (Notes, x. 35—39. Num. xviii. 25—32.)—The porters "kept the ward of purification;" (45;) that is, duly observed the orders about purification, in not suffering any unclean persons or unclean thing to come into the house of God. (Bp. Patrick.) (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The Lord raises up a succession of worshippers from age to age, who honour him by their "sacrifices of praise and thanksgiving:" (Note, Heb. xlii. 15, 16.) and who derive instruction and encouragement from the examples and actions of those, who have long before entered into their rest.—The believer should undertake nothing, which he cannot, and does not, dedicate to God, by seeking his direction and assistance in it, and his blessing upon it; by designing his glory, and by giving praise for success in all things: and whatever he possesses he should commit to the Lord's keeping and disposal, and use it according to his will. (Note, Ps. xxx. title, P. O. 1 Col.)—But all that we sinners do, must be purified by the blood of sprinkling, and by the grace of the Holy Spirit, or it cannot be acceptable unto God: and the whole church of God, which is "the lot of his inheritance," and the object of his choice and delight, being descended from fallen Adam, must be thus purified and rendered holy unto the Lord.—They, who would be instrumental in the conversion of sinners, and the sanctification of believers, must begin with themselves: and when we "acknowledge God in all our ways," he will so prosper and comfort us, as often to cause us to rejoice with great joy.—If our families be trained up to join in the solemn worship of God, and in attendance on his word, we may hope that they will share our joys and privileges: and the prosperity of the church gladdens the hearts of all true believers. When their affections are thus lively, they will be disposed to love, and rejoice in, those ministers, who are instrumental to their comfort; and to care for their suitable provision. But it is the wisdom of ministers to attend to their several duties, and not to be anxious about their interests; and then God will stir up the hearts of the people, to supply them in a comfortable and creditable manner. This they may receive with songs of praise and thanksgiving, and need not fear sanctifying a portion, even of their portion, to the more immediate service of God, and the support of his cause.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIII. V. 1—3. Some expositors think, that the events recorded in these verses, took place several years after those related in the former chapter, and that, during a great part of the time, Nehemiah had been absent at the Persian court. But the introductory language seems rather to imply, that they occurred immediately: and indeed, it can hardly be supposed, that when the gross abuses stated in the sequel prevailed, the public reading of the law at the temple was regularly kept up, and the people zealous to reduce it to practice. It is therefore more probable, that, before Nehemiah left Jerusalem, or, when he was first gone, the law was publicly read and expounded to the congregation. (Notes, vii. 1—8. 13—18. ix. 3, 4.) At that time, the passage here referred to, coming in course, excited peculiar attention; and the people of their own accord, without compulsion, but with the concurrence of the magistrates, resolved to separate from the intimate society of the mixed multitude, especially of Ammonites and Moabites, according to the meaning of the law. (Note, Deut. xxiii. 3—5.) Whether intermarriages with any of those nations, even when fully proselyted, or with their descendants, was, or was not, intended in the law, many instances would doubtless occur, in which a separation would be required; for probably few in comparison of those, with whom alliances had been formed, were fully proselyted.—It is supposed, that from the days of Ezra and Nehemiah, synagogues were built in every part of the land, where God was publicly worshipped, and his word read, expounded, or preached; which produced very salutary effects. (Notes, 2 Kings iv. 23. 2 Chr. xvii. 7—9.) A copy of the Scriptures then extant, was placed in every synagogue; and the whole was divided into portions or lessons, for the several days when they were accustomed to assemble for that purpose; and probably the same became the general usage in the court of the temple. (Luke iv. 16—22. Acts xiii. 13—15. xv. 21.)

V. 4. Eliashib had before this formed an alliance with Tobiah the Ammonite, but perhaps secretly, to escape censure. (Notes, ii. 10, 19, 20. vi. 17—19.) It does not appear, that the high priest was, or that his sons were, married to any of Tobiah's family: but he was confederated with him, and related to those who were; and his authority over the temple and all its buildings, enabled him to commit that scandalous profanation, which is next related.—The word rendered "chamber," seems to mean the out-buildings in general.

V. 5, 6. Nehemiah was first commissioned by Artaxerxes in the twentieth year of his reign; and his journey to court took place in his thirty-second year; so that twelve years had elapsed, concerning which we have little account.—When Nehemiah was gone from Jerusalem, Eliashib seems to have invited all manner of 'burdens, which they brought into Jerusalem on the sabbath-day: and 'I testified against them in the day wherein they sold victuals.

16 There dwelt 'men of Tyre also therein, which brought fish, and all manner of ware, and sold on the sabbath unto the children of Judah, and in Jerusalem.

17 Then 'I contended with the nobles of Judah, and said unto them, What evil thing is this that ye do, and profane the sabbath-day?

18 'Did not your fathers thus, and did not our God bring all this evil upon us, and upon this city? yet 'ye bring more wrath upon Israel by profaning the sabbath.

19 And it came to pass, that when the gates of Jerusalem 'began to be dark before the sabbath, 'I commanded that the gates should be shut, and charged that they should not be opened till after the sabbath: and some of my servants set I at the gates, that there should no burden be brought in on the sabbath-day.

4, 5. Heb. vi. 9, 10.) But it is also worthy of notice, that these good deeds, or kindnesses, which he had done to the house of God, consisted in using his authority to protect the ministers of religion, from those who defrauded them of their maintenance. There have been times, when enriching the clergy beyond all bounds, and without requiring them to attend to their ministry, was thought the height of piety; but it may be questioned whether rulers may not at present, as well as for some past ages, run into the contrary extreme; and Nehemiah's firm and prudent conduct in this respect, might be imitated with good effect by Christian princes and rulers. (Note, 2 Chr. xxxi. 5, 6. P.O. 1.—10.)

V. 18.—18. It can hardly be supposed, that in the course of one year of Nehemiah's absence, such gross and open profanation of the sabbath should have been introduced. (Marg. Ref. Notes, x. 31. Num. xv. 30—36. Jer. xvii. 19—27. John v. 10.—16.)—The Tyrians, as heathens, not regarding the sabbath, tempt the Jews to break it by trading with them. The magistrates must have been shamefully negligent, in conniving at these abuses, till they were become so notorious: and, the nation seemed to be proceeding, in many respects, as their fathers had done, in provoking the wrath of God against them.—Fish. (16.) How far the concessions made by our laws, in respect of the selling of some fish on the Lord's day, agree with this, or consist with hallowing the sabbath, may fairly be questioned.

V. 19. Some of, &c. (Notes, iv. 16. 18.—23. v. 14.—18.) Nehemiah could place more dependence in this case on his own attendants than on the porters appointed by the nobles of Judah, who probably countenanced this profanation, in order to indulge their luxury or avarice.

V. 20.—22. The merchants and dealers still hoped to find some opportunity of trading on the sabbath, either with the citizens, or countrymen; but, as they were endeavouring to induce the Jews to break the law of God, and that of their rulers; Nehemiah solemnly assured them, that if they did not desist, he would proceed to inflict punishment on them.—He also appointed the Levites to watch the gates, perhaps supposing they would be more regarded than his servants; and also because he would have the watch continued, even if he should leave Jerusalem.—This reformation seems to have produced very durable effects; for in the after ages of the Jewish church, they became exact even to superstition in observing the sabbath. Probably, his other regulations were at last equally effectual; but we have no more canonical history concerning them.

Remember, &c. (22.) 'Nehemiah had besought God to "remember his good deeds," (14;) but to shew that he did not think there was any proper merit or worthiness in them, which required a reward as a debt in justice due to them, he here explains himself; and desires to be rewarded, or rather pardoned, out of God's free goodness, according to the greatness or the multitude, of his mercies.' (Bp. Patrick) (Notes, 31. Ps. cvi. 4, 5. cxix. 132. Luke xxiii. 39.—43.)

V. 23.—30. Some time must have elapsed after Nehemiah's departure from Jerusalem, before the children of these marriages could betray their origin by their speech; yet probably they were not contracted before that event, and the reform

Tobiah thither: and though all Moabites and Ammonites had been publicly excluded from the congregation, according to the law of God; yet the high priest admitted this unproselyted Ammonite, who was as bitter an enemy to Israel as Balak himself had been, even into the chambers of the temple; casting out thence the consecrated oblations, to make room for him, (Notes, x. 35.—39. xii. 44.—47. 1 Kings vi. 5, 6. 1 Chr. xxviii. 12. 2 Chr. xxxi. 11.) and probably forming him a sumptuous apartment, by throwing many of them into one!—This was as great a contempt of the Divine law, profanation of the temple, and disgrace of the priesthood, as could well be imagined.

V. 7.—9. Nehemiah is generally supposed to have been absent from Jerusalem only one year: but the great abuses, which prevailed at his return, favour the opinion of those who think that about five years intervened; and there is nothing in the text that militates against it: for the words rendered "after certain days," or, at the end of days, (6. Marg.) do not necessarily signify after one year, but may denote a longer time. (Dan. xii. 13. Heb.) At his return, he was greatly afflicted and displeased at what had taken place, and he soon exercised his authority, in the most decided manner, to clear the temple from such a profanation, and to purify the chambers, that they might be restored to their proper use. (Notes, v. 6, 7. Ezra ix. 3.—15. x. 2.)—It is probable, that Eliashib was dead before Nehemiah returned; and that Tobiah would not choose to appear at Jerusalem to see after his furniture.

V. 10.—13. As the high priest had ventured profanely to appropriate the chambers of the temple, for the entertainment of an Ammonite; perhaps he had also sacrilegiously intercepted the revenues of the Levites for similar purposes; or the people were reluctant to pay their tithes, when so bad an use was made, or so little care was taken, of them. (Note, xii. 44.—47.) Thus the Levites were driven from their office, to get their living by cultivating the land, or by other secular employments; and the temple-service, especially the psalmody, was interrupted.—The rulers, who had been left in trust, ought to have exerted their authority to prevent such mismanagement; but probably they had concurred in it, out of regard to their secular interests; and therefore Nehemiah called them to account for this misconduct. Malachi is supposed to have prophesied about this time, and he seems repeatedly to refer to these abuses, (Notes, Mal. i. 9.—14. iii. 7.—12.) 'It is a great artifice of the devil, by his instruments, to defraud the ministers of religion of their necessary maintenance, that he may thereby abolish religion itself.' (Wolpius, in Bp. Patrick.) (Notes, 1 Cor. ix. 7.—18.) Nehemiah, however, not only recalled the Levites, but having, it seems, without difficulty, induced the people to bring their tithes, he placed the distribution of them in the hands of faithful men, in whom all parties reposed confidence. (Notes, 2 Chr. xxxi. 15.—19. Acts vi. 1.—6.)

V. 14. (Marg. Ref.) It is evident Nehemiah expected that the Lord would remember his good deeds, and vouchsafe them a gracious recompense, notwithstanding defects in them, and sin in him; after the same manner, as even the apostle Paul assures the Hebrews, that the Lord would not forget their work and labour of love; not as claiming "a reward of debt." (Notes, 22. Ro. n. iv.

seems to have been made very soon after his return. This separation also evidently was diverse from that recorded before, (Note, 1—3;) for that was the effect of reading the law, and by voluntary consent; this was by more vehement measures.—When this zealous reformer found these undeniable proofs of the people's guilt, he began without delay to put a stop to the evil. He contended, or vehemently argued the matter, with those who were concerned; proving the criminality and the fatal effects of such marriages, from the Scriptures, in an unanswerable manner. (Notes, 1 Kings xi. 1—13.) He then denounced the awful curse of God upon such as persisted in disobedience, and perhaps excluded them from the congregation: he punished such as were refractory, with immediate scourging; and put others of them under a disgraceful stigma, by plucking off their hair; and made them all solemnly swear to separate from their heathen wives. (Notes, v. 10—13. x. 29, 30. Ezra ix. x. Mal. ii. 1—16.)—Among the other examples of his impartial severity, he banished the grandson of Eliashib, who had married the daughter of Sanballat. (Notes, Lev. xii. 7—15.) Josephus relates that this young man was named Manasseh, and that at his instance Sanballat and the Samaritans built their temple upon mount Gerizim, in opposition to that at Jerusalem; at which he officiated, in some measure according to the ritual appointments of Moses. Hence schism, emulation, and rancorous enmity between the two nations, were perpetuated to future ages.

'It becomes all men, especially those who are employed in divine things, if they have done any thing good, to remember, that it was by God's help and assistance;—beseeching the Father of mereies, by his only begotten Son, to make it serviceable to his church, and beneficial to the doer.' Wolphius, in Bp. Patrick.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—14. The public reading of the whole word of God, as far as it relates to our faith and practice, is of immense advantage to true religion. Though we have heard many sermons, and have the Bible in our hands, few of us are acquainted with every part of it; and many live in violation of its injunctions, through ignorance or inattention. But when they, who are well disposed, hear the word of God condemn any part of their conduct, they are reminded to break off the sin, and attend to the neglected duty.—They who are unkind to the people of God, who attempt to afflict them, or who wish them evil, will be punished as his enemies; and he will turn their curses and malicious deeds into blessings to those who trust and obey him.—Alas, how prone is human nature to evil! When the restraints of influence or authority are withdrawn, men break out into those excesses of which they seemed incapable, whilst the eye and authority of God are treated with atheistical disregard.—They who have enjoyed the highest dignities in the visible church, by divine right, have sometimes been equally distinguished by sacrilegious impiety; and have openly committed those crimes, which the most profane of the laity would not have ventured on without hesitation and dismay! But if sacredness of character will not restrain men from setting a pernicious example, it should not shelter them from censure, or condign punishment by the magistrate. (Note, 1 Kings ii. 26, 27.)—As nobles have too generally, in every age and country, deemed themselves privileged to disregard the Divine law, and many human institutions obligatory on others; magistrates and reformers need courage and resolution, as well as impartiality and integrity.—Our grief, for the sins which we witness, should stimulate us to oppose them strenuously, according to the duty of our station, and induce us not to yield to unmanly despondency.—It is not expedient, that magistrates or ministers should be long absent from their respective charges: for "one sinner" will often take advantage of their absence, to destroy "much good;" and by example, insinuation, and influence, to subvert their most useful regulations, and to render their designs abortive.—Few ministers are willing, during any length of time, to labour in their ministry under the pressure or the prospect of indigence; but most of them will turn to more profitable occupations: so that depriving the clergy of a suitable maintenance forms one of Satan's projects, for causing the house and ordinances of God to be forsaken. Pious magistrates should peculiarly attend to this: they should take care that the ministers of the gospel be encouraged to labour in their proper places, and that a competent provision be made for them; nor are any, except men of approved fidelity, to be trusted in such concerns.

V. 15—31. The due observance of the Lord's day forms an important object for the attention of those who would promote true godliness; and the Christian magistrate should take proper measures to prevent that sacred season from being profaned by labour, merchandise, or those occupations which subserve the luxury and pride of life. As nobles too commonly set the example both of breaking God's commandments, and of disregarding royal edicts, in this particular; they must first be contended with, and vigorously urged to do their duty. Persons in the higher orders of society, in general, little consider the effects of their misconduct: if they violate the holy day of God, others will assuredly imitate their impiety; and thus the floodgates of ungodliness and wickedness will be thrown open, which must bring the wrath of God on guilty nations. Indeed the present state of unprincipled profligacy in these kingdoms, may be shewn in great measure to originate from the relaxed sentiments, which some time after the Reformation began to prevail concerning the spending of the sabbath. And as these have gained ground, that holy day has gradually become more and more the time, when the lower orders are let loose to corrupt one another.—It is also necessary to repeat the observation, that improper marriages have ensnared the wisest men, have always led to apostasies, and tended to the ruin of succeeding generations. The children readily imbibed the principles of the infidel or ungodly parent, and soon forgot the very language or appearance of piety; or substitute a corrupt religion in the stead of that which comes from God and leads to him.—Mothers likewise have a vast share in forming the manners of mankind; as the care of children in their tender years is almost wholly committed to them. It is therefore of great consequence to society, that females should be educated with a view to this most important employment, and qualified for the discharge of their duty in it. Every wise man, in contracting marriage, should consider whether the object of his choice would be a proper person to entrust with his children's tuition: and every mother should consider, that this is the most important part of her charge, and most of all calls for assiduity, prudence, and circumspection. (Note, 2 Tim. i. 3—5. iii. P. O. 10—17.)—In opposing fashionable and reputable vices; conclusive arguments, vehement expostulations, apposite examples, awful declarations of the wrath of God, and solemn engagements, may have the proper effect upon some: but the magistrate must often use more vigorous measures. He must disgrace, punish, and chase away, the ringleaders in iniquity, without respect of persons or families: and severity to a few will prove mercy to many. But in every thing the word of God must be our rule; the love and fear of God, our principle; and his glory, in the prosperity of his cause and the welfare of his people, our great object. Whilst we labour in this manner, we must expect the enmity and opposition of a wicked world: but we may go on with confidence in the spirit of faith and prayer. We may humbly hope, that the Lord will "remember us," and "not wipe out our services;" that he will "spare us according to the greatness of his mercy," accept both our persons and our defective endeavours to glorify him: and if he "remember us for good," that will be a sufficient recompense and happiness for ever: whilst they, who impenitently sin against him, and especially such as disgrace a sacred character, will be remembered for evil, to their everlasting shame, confusion, and destruction.

THE BOOK OF ESTHER.

This book, which takes its name from the principal character introduced in it, was most probably written by Mordecai, and inserted in the canon of Scripture by Ezra and his assistants, or by their successors: but there are various opinions among learned men on this subject. The Jews have always held the book of Esther in great veneration; and as the feast of Purim, (ix. 26—32,) is observed by them to this day, no reasonable doubt can be entertained concerning the authenticity of the narrative. Learned men differ also exceedingly about the time when it was written. It contains no prophecies, and it is not referred to in the New Testament.—It is also very remarkable, that there is no clear mention in it of any of the names, by which the God of Israel is distinguished in the sacred oracles: yet it is most evidently intended, as well as admirably calculated, to illustrate the doctrine of Providence; and the methods and instruments by which the great Ruler of the world accomplishes his purposes, both of mercy and of judgment. Perhaps this omission of the names of God was designed, Facts, well known, concerning the worshippers of JEHOVAH, the plot formed for their extirpation, and the wonderful deliverance vouchsafed them, were thus simply stated; in order that every reader might judge for himself, whether these facts did not demonstrate, that the God of the Jews was the great Ruler of the universe. Had this conclusion been urged on the Gentiles by a despised Jew, their prejudices might have been excited; let the simple narrative then speak for itself.—Several additional chapters are found in the Apocrypha; but they never were in the Hebrew text, and the Jews never received them: they principally contain repetitions, or additions, intended to decorate the history; but which in fact destroy its simple unity and beauty: and some things in them cannot be reconciled with the times to which the history must relate.—The preceding books form a specimen of the Lord's care of his church in Judea; this shews his favour to the nation at large. Many of those, who continued in remote countries, were blameable in that respect: yet he would not leave the nation in the hand of their enemies, or deprive them of his mercy and grace on that account.

Ahasuerus, king of Persia, makes a royal feast, 1—9. He sends for Vashti his queen, who refuses to come, 10—12. By the advice of his counsellors, he divorces her, and asserts, by a public decree, the authority of men over their wives, 13—22.

V. 6. The beds. On these the guests sat, or reclined, at table. (Notes, Am. vi. 3—8.)

V. 7, 8. (Notes, 1 Kings i. 22.) The absurd practice of urging people to drink more strong liquor than they are of themselves inclined to, has prevailed in all ages; though it is a most gross violation of common sense, freedom, and civility, as well as of morality and religion. It seems to have been devised and supported by drunkards, that the more sober part of mankind might be drawn in to keep them in countenance, by a reluctant intoxication.—The regulation enjoined by the king was very necessary in the midst of so many incentives to intemperance; and his mind, being thus made known, doubtless prevented many disorders which otherwise would have been committed.

V. 9. It seems, that the women were feasted by the queen, and kept separate from the men by express appointment; which made the subsequent order of the king appear the more unreasonable. (Note, 10—12.)

V. 10—12. When the customs of the Persians relative to their women, especially the wives of their kings, are considered, this injunction of Ahasuerus must appear highly improper and inconsistent. He sent seven of his chamber king was merry with wine, he commanded Mehuman, Biztha, Harbona, Bigtha, and Abagtha, Zethar, and Carcas, the seven ^achamberlains, that served in the presence of Ahasuerus the king;

11 To bring ^bVashti the queen before the king with the crown royal, to shew the people and the princes her beauty: for she ^cwas fair to look on.

12 But the queen Vashti ^drefused to come at the king's commandment ^eby his chamberlains; therefore ^fwas the king very wroth, and his anger ^gburned in him.

13 ¶ Then the king said to ^hthe wise men, which ⁱknew the times, (for so ^jwas the king's manner towards all that knew law and judgment;

14 And the next unto him ^kwas Carshena, Shethar, Admatha, Tarshish, Meres, Marsena, and Memucan, ^lthe seven princes of Persia and Media, which ^msaw the king's face, and which ⁿsat the first in the kingdom;)

15 ^oWhat shall we do unto the queen Vashti, according to law, because she hath not performed the commandment of the king Ahasuerus by the chamberlains?

16 And Memucan answered before the king and the princes, Vashti the queen hath not ^pdone wrong to the king only, but also to all the princes, and to all the people that ^qare in all the provinces of the king Ahasuerus.

lains, (which so far was honourable to his queen,) commanding her to appear in her royal attire, in order that a number of princes and nobles, who were heated with wine, might be gratified by a sight of her singular beauty! A reluctance therefore to an exhibition, so contrary to the decorum observed by her sex, became her rank and modesty: but as the king was peremptory, and every one must have known that she came at his command, it was very imprudent in her, to persist in a refusal, which could terminate only in an open contest and the most fatal effects.

V. 13, 14. These wise men, being acquainted with the records of the kingdom, might be able to bring precedents, how former kings had acted under circumstances in any respect similar, according to the laws and customs of the kingdom; as well as to understand in general what was proper to be done in the present emergency. (Note, 1 Chr. xii. 32.) And it was the king's manner, in all such matters, to confer with those who knew law and judgment.—The seven counsellors here mentioned had free access to the king, and were the first subjects in the kingdom. (Note, Ezra vii. 14.)

V. 15. Some suppose, that Ahasuerus was inclined to forgive Vashti, if it might stand with the honour of his government, and the laws of the realm. But others think, that he was disposed to divorce her, or otherwise punish her; but wished to proceed against her under colour of law and justice.

V. 16—18. Memucan is mentioned last of the seven counsellors: and it is supposed he was the youngest, or last in order, on some account; and that he was required to give his opinion first, that he might not previously be biased by the sentiments of his seniors, or superiors.—It is uncertain, whether Memucan really deemed the queen's disobedience a dangerous precedent, while it remained unpunished; or whether he paid court to the king, by counselling him to follow his own humour, and by suggesting a plausible reason for so doing. (Notes, 2 Sam. xiv. 7—22. P. O. 1—20.) He, however, argued that the queen's rank, and the notoriety and pertinacity of her disobedience, would encourage other women to despise the persons and authority of their husbands; which contempt in the women would excite the wrath of the men, and thus destroy domestic subordination and peace.—Yet if husbands had been careful not to act contemptibly, or to give foolish and improper commands, they might have ruled by reason and affection, without either such fatal consequences or violent measures. But despotism in civil government leads to despotism in domestic life: men imagine, that there is no way to rule, but by force and terror; and thus the superior relations become tyrants, and the inferior, slaves, submitting by constraint, without either conviction or affection.

V. 19—22. By this irrevocable edict, which was published in the various languages spoken through the vast empire of the Persians, that all might understand it, Ahasuerus's example was virtually proposed for general imitation: so that every husband was allowed to divorce his wife, if she disobeyed his command, even when evidently foolish and unreasonable! But whether pride, resentment, policy, or lust, predominated in the councils of Ahasuerus; the Lord was thus making preparation for defeating Haman's diabolical project, long before it ever entered into his heart, and before he arrived at the height of his power and prosperity. (Notes, iii. 6—15. viii. 8. Ps. lxxv. 10. Ez. xxxviii. 10.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-12. No extent of possessions or dominion can satisfy the human heart, and give contentment or felicity even in this present life. Cares, fears, and temptations are augmented by every accession; the power of doing good or harm is enlarged, and, alas! the latter is generally chosen. But "to whom much is given, of him will much be required," by the great proprietor, who is continually saying to 17 For ^athis deed of the queen shall come abroad unto all women, so that they shall ^bdespise their husbands in their eyes, when it shall be reported, The king Ahasuerus commanded Vashti the queen to be brought in before him, but she came not.

18 ^cLikewise shall the ladies of Persia and Media say this day unto all the king's princes, which have heard of the deed of the queen. Thus ^dshall there arise too much contempt and wrath.

19 If ^eit please the king, let there go a royal commandment ^ffrom him, and let it be written among the laws of the Persians and the Medes, that ^git be not altered, that Vashti come no more before king Ahasuerus; and let the king give her royal estate unto ^hanother ⁱthat is better than she.

20 And when the king's decree which he shall make shall be published ^jthroughout all his empire, (for it is great,) ^kall the wives shall give to their husbands honour, both to great and small.

21 And the saying ^lpleased the king and the princes; and the king did according to the word of Memucan:

22 For he sent letters into all the king's provinces, ^minto every province according to the writing thereof, and to every people after their language, ⁿthat every man should bear rule in his own house, and that ^oit should be published ^paccording to the language of every people.

monarchs, as well as subjects, "Give an account of thy stewardship; for thou mayest be no longer steward."—Ostentatious generosity and magnificence, for a man's own honour and glory, that his wealth, bounty, and taste may be admired and applauded, is a common idolatry of the great and noble: and, except grace prevail in the heart, self-exaltation and self-indulgence, in some form or other, will be the ruling principles. But indeed the honour of every endowment, possession, or achievement, of created beings, belongs solely to the undervalued, unchangeable Creator; his glory, in our felicity, and that of our fellow-creatures, should be our great end in every action; and all other considerations ought to be subordinated to it, and regulated by it.—But if the feast of an earthly monarch, when he would "shew the riches of his glorious kingdom, and the honour of his excellent majesty," was so magnificent; what will be that feast, which the King of kings hath prepared, to "shew the riches of his glorious kingdom, and the honour of his excellent majesty," "to the praise of the glory of his grace," in heaven, for ever and ever! There will be unfading splendour, inexhaustible abundance, and unalloyed pleasures, without interruption or satiety. There, will be no danger or fear of excess; nor the least discord to mar enjoyment, through all the ages of eternity. "All things are ready" for this feast; sinners without exception are invited: may we accept the gracious invitation; seek and find the wedding garment; and sit down at the marriage supper of the Lamb!—But in all other feasts, the pleasure is greatly alloyed, and soon palls; and too generally they prove unfavourable, not only to wisdom and piety, but even to present comfort and advantage. Seldom do any frequent them, without being led into some degree of excess, injurious to their strength of body and vigour of mind. They are scenes of temptation, suited to excite man's various evil propensities. The enemy of souls will be sure to avail himself of the unguarded moments, especially of such as are in reputation for wisdom and piety; and he has artfully prevailed to render it creditable, for men to become tempters of each other to intemperance; so that few public entertainments, even among professed Christians, are conducted by such good rules as this heathen feast. But real Christians must not only shun such scenes, and separate from those who frequent them; but likewise, by warnings and exhortations, endeavour to preserve their brethren from sin: and if, by this conduct at their own tables, they incur the censure of being penurious; "the poor, whom they always have with them," afford them a fair occasion of refuting the slander. Indeed, that will go very far in hospitality to the indigent, which is quickly wasted by pampering the luxury of the affluent. (Note, Luke xiv. 12—14. P. O. 12—24.) Indeed, seasons of peculiar festivity often terminate in vexation. Wine and jovial company elate the mind, add strength to the passions, and stun the voice of reason and conscience. On such occasions caprice generally dictates the conduct; unreasonable claims are started, or projects formed; and the eagerness of men's spirits ill brooks contradiction or affront, while it disposes to give them. Thus anger is excited and exasperated; and discords, revenge, duels, and murders, are the frequent consequences of pleasurable meetings! Propriety and decorum are also often disregarded: the respect and attention due to relatives are forgotten: improper requisitions are made, by which contempt and imprudent opposition are excited: affection is suspended, during the reign of haughty resentment; and all parties forget their reciprocal interests and duties, till their reputation and peace receive such wounds, as can seldom admit of a complete cure.—Let it also be specially noted, that superiors should be careful not to command what may ^{reasonably} be disobeyed; for this must weaken their authority, and prove a temptation to those over whom they rule: yet inferiors ought never to persist in a refusal, except when it is a point of conscience towards God. (Notes, Rom. xiii. 1—7.)

CHAP. II.

By advice of his servants, Ahasuerus causes fair virgins to be sought out in every province of his kingdom, that he may choose a queen, 1-4. Esther had been brought up by Mordecai, 5-7. She obtains favour with the keeper of the women; pleases the king, and is made queen, having observed Mordecai's directions, 8-20. Mordecai discovers a plot against the king; the criminals are punished; and his service is registered in the chronicles of the kingdom, 21-23.

AFTER these things, when the wrath of king Ahasuerus was appeased, ^ahe remembered Vashti, and ^bwhat she had done, and what was decreed against her.

2 Then said the ^cking's servants, that ministered unto him, ^dLet there be fair young virgins sought for the king:

3 And let the king appoint officers ^ein all the provinces of his kingdom, that they may gather together all the fair young virgins unto Shushan the palace, to the house of the women, unto ^fthe custody of ^gHege the king's chamberlain, keeper of the women; and let ^htheir things for purification be given ⁱthem:

4 And let the maiden which pleaseth the king be queen instead of Vashti. And ^jthe thing pleased the king; and he did so.

5 ¶ Now in ^kShushan the palace there was a ^lcertain Jew, whose name was Mordecai, ^mthe son of Jair, the son of Shimei, the son of Kish, a Benjamite;

6 Who had been carried away from Jerusalem, with the captivity which had been carried away with ⁿJecooniah king of Judah, whom Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon had carried away.

7 And he ^obrought up ^pHadassah, that is, Esther, ^qhis uncle's daughter: for she had neither father nor mother, and the maid was ^rfair and beautiful; whom Mordecai, when her father and mother were dead, ^stook for his own daughter.

8 ¶ So it came to pass, when the king's commandment and his decree was heard, and when many maidens were gathered together unto Shushan the palace, to the custody of ^aHegei, that Esther was brought also unto the king's house, to the custody of ^bHegei, keeper of the women.

9 And the maiden pleased him, and ^cshe obtained kindness of him; and he speedily gave her ^dher things for purification, with such ^ethings as belonged to her, and seven maidens ^fwhich were meet to be given her, out of the king's house: and he ^gpreferred her and her maids unto the best ^hplace of the house of the women.

11 And Mordecai ^lwalked every day before the court of the women's house, to know ^mhow Esther did, and what should become of her.

12 ¶ Now when every maid's turn was come ⁿto go in to king Ahasuerus, after that she had been twelve months, according to the manner of the women, (for so were the days of their purifications accomplished, ^oto wit, ^psix months with oil of myrrh, and six months with sweet odours, and with ^qother things for the purifying of the women;)

V. 13-22. There would be safety in the multitude of counsellors, if men did but welcome plain-dealing; and if the counsellors of princes did not generally consult their inclinations, rather than their interests.—Domestic subordination doubtless ought to be preserved; and the wife ought to honour and obey her own husband: yet surely this may be effected by other means, than severe laws, divorces, and measures more pernicious than the evil which they are intended to remedy! Regard to mutual interest, comfort, and reputation, serve to keep the world in tolerable order; the prudence and affection of the husband will do great things, where properly exercised; the general regard, which the more decent members of the community have to the precepts and authority of God, has considerable effect: true grace radically cures that evil, from which domestic discord arises; and where the peace of society is materially violated, the magistrate may properly interpose. All other evils arising from this source may better be tolerated, than to attempt a remedy, by making the men tyrants, and the women slaves; while it is evident that the former fail as much, and commonly far more, in the duty of their relation, than the latter. Nor should even the interests of kingdoms be promoted, were it possible, by evident injustice.—The example of the great has a very extensive effect, and they are the more concerned, not to exhibit a pernicious pattern to their inferiors; but human policy sometimes overshoots its mark; and to prevent the effect of one injurious precedent, forms another of still more fatal tendency. Let us then keep to the rule of God's word, and it will guide the humble obedient believer through all these labyrinths; and be "a lantern to his feet, and a light unto his paths." Let us be upon our guard against every incentive to our passions; watching and praying against wrath, pride, and self-will. Let us learn to bridle our tempers; to conquer by yielding; and to "leave off contention before it be meddled with." And let us rejoice that the Lord reigns, and will over-rule all the madness and folly of mankind, for the purposes of his own glory, and the safety and felicity of his people.

NOTES.

CHAP. II. V. 1. When the vehemency of the king's anger subsided, his affection for Vashti revived; and he was probably sensible, that he had acted with precipitation and severity, and had done her injustice. But with all his authority, he could not again receive her into favour, without violating a fundamental constitution of the Persian government; which required, that no edict, which the king had once established, should be reversed. The fatal effects of this absurd policy will be sufficiently illustrated in the sequel of this narrative. Under colour of ascribing infallibility to the sovereign, and thus flattering his pride, this restriction perpetually exposed him, in his unguarded hours, to be deluded into the most pernicious measures; and would not so much as allow him to remedy the injustice, or impolicy, into which he had been betrayed, when reflection and experience had made him sensible of his errors. (Notes, viii. 3-12. ix. 1-19. Dan. vi. 12-17.) And this was the more absurd and dangerous in its nature and effects, if they may be depended on, who inform us, that the Persian monarchs, and their counsellors, commonly framed their edicts at feasts, and when they were drinking.

V. 2-4. It is uncertain, whether this was the project of the seven counsellors before mentioned; (Note, i. 16-18;) or of some other servants, who more immediately ministered to the king's pleasures. It seems, however, to have been devised, in order to prevent him from thinking any more of Vashti, whose restoration to favour must be guarded against, for the safety of those who had counselled the king to exercise such severity against her: for, if he had been greatly desirous of Vashti's company, the law of the Medes and Persians would scarcely have prevented him from recalling her. This will appear by the following instance: Cambyzes, king of Persia, having conceived a violent passion for his own sister, enquired of his counsellors whether it was lawful for him to marry her? And they, dreading the effects of his resentment if they opposed his will, answered, that there was no law in Persia, by which a man was allowed to marry his sister, but that it was lawful for the king of Persia to do what he pleased.—(Note, 1 Kings i. 2-4.)

V. 5-7. Mordecai, though a Benjamite, is repeatedly called the Jew: for the whole nation was now called after Judah. (Notes, Gen. xlix. 8-10. 2 Kings xvi. 6.)—Some of Mordecai's ancestors, (perhaps Kish,) had been carried to Babylon with Jecooniah; (Note, 2 Kings xxiv. 8-16;) and the family afterwards settled at Shushan. But it seems that they were diminished in number, or impoverished: so that Mordecai's own cousin had been left an orphan; and he probably being much older than she was, had brought her up, and in all respects behaved as a father to her. Her Jewish name was Hadassah, but the Persians called her Esther.—The conjectures of some learned men concerning her, taken from rather a slight similarity of names between her and the wives of some of the Persian kings, mentioned in pagan historians, seem entirely groundless; as the dissimilarity of character, and other circumstances, vastly preponderate against them.

V. 8-10. As Mordecai was so scrupulous in respect to Haman, (Notes, iii. 2-5,) it has been wondered, how he could consent to Esther's becoming the wife, or concubine, of a heathen prince, contrary to the law of Moses. But it does not seem to have been left to the choice, either of Mordecai or of Esther. By a public edict, the most beautiful virgins were selected from all parts of Ahasuerus's dominions; and it would have been unavailing, as well as dangerous, to have opposed the persons employed in this business. "The word we translate "was brought," may be rendered was taken; and that by force, as the word sometimes signifies; and as the former Targum explains it, she was brought by violence." (Bp. Patrick.)—If Esther had made known her nation, it might have interfered with her advancement to the rank of queen, as the Jews were generally despised; but she could not have avoided becoming one of Ahasuerus's concubines. Polygamy was connived at by the Mosaic law; so that the situation of a concubine was not deemed dishonourable, or unlawful: and in her peculiar circumstances, the ritual law of not giving their daughters to those of another nation might not be thought obligatory.—The conduct of Providence, however, should be chiefly noticed; though it does not appear that either Mordecai or Esther could have acted otherwise, if they had been inclined.

V. 11-14. (Marg. Ref. P. O. 1-14.)

no more, except the king ^adelighted in her, and that ^bshe were called by name.

15 ¶ Now when the turn of Esther, the daughter of Abihail the uncle of Mordecai, ^cwho had taken her for his daughter, was come to go in unto the king, she required nothing but what Hegai the king's chamberlain, the keeper of the women, appointed. And ^dEsther obtained favour in the sight of all them that looked upon her.

16 So Esther was taken unto king Ahasuerus into his house royal in ^ethe tenth month, which is the month Tebeth, in ^fthe seventh year of his reign.

17 And the king loved Esther above all the women, and she obtained grace and ^gfavour ^hin his sight more than all the virgins; ⁱso that he set the royal crown upon her head, and made her queen instead of Vashti.

18 Then the king ^jmade a great feast unto all his princes and his servants, ^keven Esther's feast; and he made ^la release to the provinces, and ^mgave gifts according to the state of the king.

19 And when ⁿthe virgins were gathered together

V. 15—17. About four years were spent, before another queen was chosen instead of Vashti: so long a time had been employed in collecting the virgins from all parts of Ahasuerus's dominions, and in other preparations which were thought requisite. Ezra obtained his commission in the former part of this same year, if Artaxerxes were the same as Ahasuerus: and they who think, that Artaxerxes granted the desire of Ezra, through Esther's influence, suppose that Esther had been the favoured concubine of the king, a considerable time before she was made queen, which was in the tenth month of the seventh year of his reign. (Note, Ezra vii. 6—10.)

V. 18. (Note, 1—3. Marg. Ref.)

V. 19, 20. It is probable, that a number of virgins had been collected before Vashti was made queen; in relation to which it is here said, "When the virgins were gathered together the second time."—About this time Mordecai seems to have been appointed to some station in the service of the king: and the historian appears merely to have intended to connect the account of Mordecai's discovery of the treason, with Esther's advancement to be queen, as introductory to the subsequent narrative.—Esther, after her high preferment, still continued as attentive to Mordecai's command, as she had been before; out of gratitude for his kindness, and confidence in his wisdom, piety, and affection.

V. 21—23. Many conjectures have been formed of the cause of this conspiracy, and the manner in which it was discovered; but curiosity alone is concerned in such enquiries. It suffices for us to know, that a conspiracy was formed; that Mordecai detected it; and, by informing Esther, conveyed the intelligence to the king; and that the account of it was written in the records of the kingdom. The transaction itself was no wise uncommon; but the event shewed the hand of God in it, in a most remarkable manner, and for the most important purposes. (Notes, vi.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—14. Resolutions formed in anger, and executed without deliberation, make work for bitter recollection and repentance. A wise man therefore will not proceed even to punish the guilty, till passion has subsided, and reason resumed her sway.—The depravity of our nature, and the fallibility of our judgment, render it indispensable to our interest and happiness, that we should be allowed to change our sentiments and conduct, and correct our mistakes. Our gracious God hath mercifully placed us under a dispensation, which admits of this: and though many painful effects must follow from transgression, we shall not be ruined by it, if we avail ourselves of this provision. (Ez. xviii. 30.) But while pride and obstinacy seem to arrogate infallibility, and to aspire to a dignity incompatible with fallen nature: they forfeit the real advantages of our situation, and leave a man without redress, exposed to all the fatal consequences of every false step. No one, however, should be too proud, to confess that he hath been mistaken: and as this would preclude the absurdity of human laws, which may never be repealed or reversed; so it would strike at the root of that self-justifying pertinacious temper, which induces sinners to neglect the gospel, and go on in sin. But even when men are in some measure made sensible of their folly and iniquity, new projects, amusements, and gratifications are devised, to silence conscience, and to carry them forward without uneasiness in the broad road of ungodliness.—The servants of mighty monarchs, though themselves princes and nobles, have often stooped to be pimps and parasites, in order to support their present authority, to purchase impunity for past crimes, or to procure future and still greater preferment! (Gen. xii. P. O. 10—20. 2 Col.) But how degrading is it to our rational nature, that numbers of able men, of superior rank, as well as of inferior station, should exert all their ingenuity and diligence, in enabling an individual more devotedly to pamper those "fleshy lusts which war against the soul!" Even reason, (not to say religion,) if her voice could be heard, would command men to moderate and restrain their passions, and to teach them submission, by habituating them to brook denial. But the higher human beings are advanced in authority, the lower they often sink into the most abject slavery to their sensual appetites: as if the superiority were intended merely

CHAP. III.

Haman is advanced by the king, who commands his servants to bow down to him; but Mordecai refuses to do it. Haman, being informed, in revenge, purposes to destroy the whole Jewish nation, 1—5. He chooses a day, by casting lots, for executing his purpose. 7. By calumniating the Jews, he obtains a commission from the king to extirpate the nation, and publishes it through all the provinces. 8—15.

AFTER these things did king Ahasuerus ^apromote Haman, the son of Hammedatha the ^bAgagite, as a medium for the more unrestrained licentiousness, and to enable them to be ^cavowed in those excesses, which inferior libertines indulge with a more decent reserve!—How low is our nature sunk, when these are the leading pursuits, and the highest felicity, of many millions of rational creatures! When every consideration of decency, equity, and conscience; when domestic comfort, relative duties, and the natural rights of mankind; when even reputation, interest, and health; when life, and the immortal soul itself, are habitually sacrificed to such a vile and hateful idol! Yet after a prostituted ingenuity has done its utmost, disappointment, vexation, and loathing must ensue: and that man most wisely consults even the enjoyment of this present life, who most exactly obeys the precepts of the Divine law.—We ought also to be thankful for revelation, which is needful to teach us how to act in the common affairs of life. But without the supernatural efficacy of the Holy Spirit, men will not pay a due regard to that revelation: for, with the Bible in their hands, numbers deviate at least as widely from reason and scripture, as ever the Persian monarchs did; except, as the want of power and the laws of the land, restrain their licentiousness. For these laws indeed, and for many other advantages, we have great cause to be thankful; and especially that the children of Britons are not liable to be forced into the seraglio of any licentious ruler. Yet, alas! after all, who can bear steadily to contemplate the corrupt state of our favoured nation, in this respect, without a mixture of shame, regret, and consternation?

V. 15—23. It is peculiarly useful to consider the providential conduct of God fulfilling his wise, faithful, righteous, and merciful purposes, in the midst of the extravagancies occasioned by the mad passions of wicked men. He "careth for his people," and he is "the Father of the fatherless:" orphans are often peculiarly favoured in his providence, to encourage us to entrust our children to his care while we live, and when we are about to die and leave them.—It is our duty, in some cases, if we are able, to provide for the orphan children of our near relations; and by so doing, men often provide for their own comfort and safety, and for their families also.—The Lord not only confers personal and mental endowments, and enriches the soul with wisdom and grace; but he gives favour likewise: and notwithstanding prejudices, and general contempt, he can, when he pleases, secure to his people the most endeared affection of those who know him not. If wealth or kingdoms were good for them, they would certainly have them; but prosperity too generally feeds the distempers of corrupt nature, and poverty and obscurity are more advantageous. Even those high stations, which some few believers occupy for the good of their brethren, will be their cross, if not their snare; and their comforts must flow from the same source, and be of the same nature, with those of the poorest Christian; and are generally in more scanty measure.—We ought, however, to be passive in the Lord's hands; and only be careful to avoid sin, and to perform our duty, in whatever station we are placed.—Our profession of religion, and many things relating to it, must often be regulated and timed according to circumstances; so that we not only need to regard the advice of wise and experienced Christians, but daily to ask for that wisdom which is from above, or we shall be liable to perpetual mistakes.—It is a singular proof that men have obtained a good measure of that wisdom, when unexpected prosperity and favour leave them humble and teachable, attentive to every relative duty, grateful to benefactors, and disposed to listen to prudent and pious counsellors.—No men are exposed to so great danger, from treachery, resentment, and ambition, as absolute monarchs; and their servants, when really attached, often confer obligations upon them, which they never can adequately compensate. But the servant of God must be faithful to every trust, and watchful for the safety and interest of those who employ him; and though he seem at present neglected, he may be remembered hereafter. However, his conscientious and upright conduct is registered in heaven, and will be graciously rewarded by his God; when all his enemies shall be driven into utter destruction. (Note, Ec. ix. 13—18. P. O. 11—18.)

NOTES.

CHAP. III. V. 1. Haman is supposed to have been an Amalekite, descended from the stock of the ancient kings of that people, many of whom were named Agag. (Marg. Ref.)—If his descent was generally known, his advancement and advanced him, and set his seat 'above all the princes that were with him.

2 And all 'the king's servants, that were in the king's gate, 'bowed, and revered Haman: for the king had so commanded concerning him. But Mordecai 'bowed not, nor did him reverence.

3 Then the king's servants, which were in the king's gate, said unto Mordecai, "Why transgressest thou the king's commandment?"

4 Now it came to pass, 'when they spake daily unto him, and he hearkened not unto them, 'that they told Haman, to see whether 'Mordecai's matters would stand: for 'he had told them that he was a Jew.

5 And when Haman saw that Mordecai bowed not, nor did him reverence, then was Haman 'full of wrath.

6 And he thought scorn to lay hands on Mordecai alone; for they had shewed him the people of Mordecai: wherefore Haman 'sought to destroy all the Jews that were throughout the whole kingdom of Ahasuerus, even the people of Mordecai.

7 ¶ In 'the first month, that is, the month Nisan, 'in the twelfth year of king Ahasuerus, 'they cast Pur, that is, the lot, before Haman from day to day, and from month to month, to the twelfth month, that is, the month 'Adar.

8 ¶ And Haman said unto king Ahasuerus, There is a certain people 'scattered abroad, and dispersed among the people, in all the provinces of thy kingdom; and 'their laws are diverse from all people, neither keep they the king's laws: therefore it is not 'for the king's profit to suffer them.

9 If it please the king, let it be written 'that they may be destroyed; and I will 'pay 'ten thousand talents of silver to the hands of those that have the charge of the business, to bring it into the king's treasures.

10 And the king 'took his ring from his hand, and gave it unto Haman, the son of Hammedatha the Agagite, the Jews' 'enemy.

11 And the king said unto Haman, The silver is given to thee, the people also, 'to do with them as it seemeth good to thee.

to be the king's chief minister and favourite would be peculiarly displeasing to the Jews; as they were expressly commanded to extirpate the Amalekites. (Notes, Ex. xvii. 14-16. Deut. xxv. 17-19. 1 Sam. xv. 1-3.)

V. 2. It has been much disputed, why Mordecai so pertinaciously and absolutely refused to bow before Haman, when commanded by his prince: and many, supposing that nothing more was meant than civil obeisance, such as Joseph's brethren and the Egyptians rendered to him, and such as they suppose Ezra, and Nehemiah, and even Daniel, must have paid to the Persian kings, have ascribed Mordecai's refusal to his contempt of Haman's character, or his dislike to him as an Amalekite. But these reasons do not seem sufficient to justify his conduct, when the fate of the whole nation was at stake: yet he evidently acted conscientiously, and was accepted by the Lord. We must not therefore ascribe his behaviour to pride, moroseness, resentment, or envy. It is, however, well known, that the Persian monarchs required an obeisance, which even the Greeks often refused, or evaded, as express adoration: and it is not at all unlikely, that Ahasuerus required a similar act of adoration to be offered to his favourite. 'To bow the knee or body, to all great persons, was a common respect; for which there needed not a particular command, with respect of Haman.—There was therefore some kind of divine honour intended, such as was paid to the Persian kings themselves, to whom the Greeks would not pay this sort of respect, because it was accounted divine.—And the word reverence imports something beyond bowing; which was falling flat on their faces to the ground.' (Bp. Patrick).—The original words may be rendered, "They kneeled down and fell prostrate before Haman, or, they worshipped him: and perhaps the two expressions are never united, except when adoration is expressly meant. (Matt. iv. 9. Acts x. 25, 26. Rev. xxii. 8, 9).—In the apocryphal addition to this book, Mordecai is introduced as thus appealing to God: 'Thou knowest, Lord, that it was neither in contempt, nor pride, nor for any desire of glory, that I did not bow down to proud Haman: for I could have been content, with good will, for the salvation of Israel, to kiss the soles of his feet: but I did this, that I might not prefer the glory of man above the glory of God, neither will I worship any but thee.' (Esther xiii. 12-14.) Indeed, it is most probable that the homage required by Haman was idolatrous: and we may reasonably conclude, that the king himself dispensed with the customary ceremonies, out of regard to the conscientious scruples of those few Jews, who were admitted into his presence, and whom he peculiarly favoured; but that Haman, despising Mordecai and hating his people, was not so condescending. And though we do not read that other Jews refused Haman this honour; yet numbers might be of the same opinion, who were not put to the trial, not being employed in any places of honour or profit about the king: and indeed it does not appear that Mordecai was blamed by any of them, even amidst the most imminent danger to which the nation was exposed. (Note, Dan. iii. 1-7.)

V. 3-5. Haman seems not to have noticed Mordecai's singularity, (amidst the homage which he received from all others,) till it was pointed out to him by the other servants of Ahasuerus. These first remonstrated with Mordecai for his disobedience to the king: but when he disregarded them, they desired to know whether "his matters would stand; for he had told them that he was a Jew." This proves that he vindicated himself on the ground of his religion: and it implies, that he expected Ahasuerus to admit of this plea; which favours the supposition, that the kings of Persia had been used to excuse their Jewish servants from such obeisance as they could not conscientiously render.—It is probable, however, that these informers thought this a good opportunity of paying court to the favourite, or of obtaining Mordecai's post for some of them, or their dependants; and they did not approve of his singularity, by which he seemed to reproach their compliance.

V. 6. A wise man would have treated this information with neglect; and, had he even thought that Mordecai's conduct was the effect of pique, pride, malice, or insolence, he would have left him to his humour. But Haman was a man of a weak and vain-glorious mind, and intoxicated with prosperity. Being therefore fired with indignation, that these honours were refused him by one greatly his inferior, and having understood that the refusal was dictated by principles which were common to all the Jews; he considered the whole nation as his enemies, and determined, if possible, to involve them all in one common destruction.—The ancient enmity of an Amalekite seems also to have revived and perhaps he meant to revenge the quarrel of his nation, as well as the affront which he had received from Mordecai. His rank and authority, and his unbounded influence over Ahasuerus, emboldened him to expect success in the daring attempt. His self-importance made him think it a mean revenge, to crush an individual who had offended him; and his pre-eminence seemed only to suggest the idea of being able to do more mischief, and diffuse more extensive misery, than an inferior could have done. His diabolical ambition and cruelty thirsted for the extirpation of the whole people of the Jews at one blow; at least all of them who dwelt in the vast kingdom of Persia, including those in Judea, which was a province of that kingdom. (Note, Ezra ii. 1.) It may therefore fairly be concluded that the device was not his own, but was suggested by that ambitious spirit, who aspires to be "the god of this world," who has been a murderer from the beginning, and whose enmity to the "seed of the woman," to Christ and his church, is communicated to all his children. In this view, it was a plan worthy of the vast capacity, enmity, malice, ambition, and desperation of that arch-rebel against his Maker. (Notes, Gen. iii. 14, 15. Matt. iv. 1, 2. John viii. 41-47. 2 Col.)

V. 7. Esther had now been queen five years; yet her nation and kindred had not become publicly known: for Haman did not suspect that the queen was a Jewess, or that Mordecai was her near relation. (Note, vii. 6.) Had Mordecai been ambitious of preferment, no doubt he would have counselled Esther to make known her kindred, when she was first in high favour: but he seems to have foreseen, that she was advanced for some future service to her people, for which she ought to reserve herself. (Note, iv. 13, 14.)—The word "Pur," signifies the lot. And Haman, having formed his project, enquired of his idols, according to his own superstition, by casting lots, what day would be most propitious to its execution: for he made himself sure of the king's concurrence! and it pleased God, so to order it, that the day which had the favourable token, was above eleven months distant. Haman's superstition was such, that he did not venture to execute his design till that time came; though it can hardly be supposed, but he must have perceived, that many things might occur to prevent the execution of his intentions. The king might change his mind, or might die; or the Jews might take refuge in other countries, or make such preparations for their own defence, as to render the attempt most perilous, and the success of it very hazardous.—The event shewed the vanity of his oracles, or auguries; and illustrated the doctrine of a particular providence over all the affairs of men, and the care of God over his church.

V. 8, 9. Haman does not seem even to have mentioned to Ahasuerus the name of the people, whom he purposed to extirpate: supposing that they would be sufficiently known from his description of them. He probably acted as prime-minister under the king, who, like most of those Eastern monarchs, giving himself up to his pleasures, left the management of his affairs entirely to him. Indeed, the ascendancy of Haman was so absolute, that none of the other counsellors seem to have been advised with in this most important matter; and probably the proposal was made and consented to, while the king was heated with wine. (Note, ii. 1.)—The laws and customs of the people of God were indeed diverse from those of any other nation; but there is no proof that they refused obedience to the laws of Persia, except as Mordecai refused to worship Haman; for we do not find that the kings of Persia required them to worship idols, or even forbade them to observe their sabbaths, festivals, and ceremonial institutions.—It does not appear, that the horrible cruelty and injustice of the proposal at all startled the king! Indeed, Haman seems to have been more apprehensive, that he would object to the impolicy of diminishing the revenue, by decreasing the number of his subjects. He therefore offered the king ten thousand talents of silver, (about four millions sterling, if reckoned according to the talent of the Jews' Tables,) by way of compensation for the loss. But it seems, that he meant to indemnify himself from the property of the slaughtered Jews: and the expression, that "he would pay the money into the hands of those, who had the charge of the business," implies that he would engage to raise the sum at once, from the execution of his project; which would, as 12 Then were the king's scribes called on the thirteenth day of the first month, and there was written according to all that Haman had commanded, unto the king's lieutenants, and to the governors that were over every province, and to the rulers of every people of every province, according to the writing thereof, and to every people after their language; in the name of king Ahasuerus was it written, and sealed with the king's ring.

13 And the letters were sent by posts into all the king's provinces, to destroy, to kill, and to cause to perish all Jews, both young and old, little children and women, in one day, even upon the thirteenth day of the twelfth month, which is the month Adar, and to take the spoil of them for a prey.

CHAP. IV.

Mordecai and the Jews fast, and mourn exceedingly, 1—3. Esther, sending to enquire of Mordecai the reason, is informed of the decree, and required to petition the king for her people, 4—9. She excuses herself: but being shewn the consequences, she appoints a fast of three days, and consents to approach the king, though at the peril of her life, 10—17.

WHEN Mordecai perceived all that was done, Mordecai rent his clothes, and put on sackcloth with ashes, and went out into the midst of the city, and cried with a loud and a bitter cry; stand, and his religion excuse his obedience to unlawful commands, in human courts of justice, or not, he will certainly be justified in so doing before the tribunal of God.—Who can know the desperate wickedness of the human heart, or prescribe any bounds to its devices! When a man possesses the dangerous privilege of doing as he pleases, without control, and with impunity; when pride and ambition meet with an unexpected repulse, and when indignation and revenge occupy the heart; the most horrible and diabolical designs will be considered, as the evidences of a noble and daring mind. In such circumstances, the infuriated wretch will think scorn of the petty rapines, and assassinations, of inferior villains, and become ambitious of being as much distinguished by a vast revenge, as by the eminency of his rank: and what massacres and crimes will not in that case be perpetrated without remorse, and even with pride and pleasure; while vast numbers both fall victims to his fury, and are involved with him in the guilt of murder and other enormities! What cause then have we to be thankful for external restraints to our headstrong passions; and how ought we to watch and pray against pride, anger, malice, and every sinful propensity! for if left under the power of them, we cannot conceive how far they would hurry us.—Let us also remember to be thankful for a limited, mild, and equitable government; and to beg of God to extend the same blessing to all nations.

V. 7—15. The world, as lying in wickedness, must hate the people of God, who bear his image, and do his will: but they will be peculiarly obnoxious to tyrants; as they must refuse unreserved compliance with their mandates and humours; being the subjects of another kingdom, and governed by laws diverse from, nay, opposite to, their favourite maxims and pursuits.—They are indeed, and ought to be, a peculiar and singular people, not conformed to this world, while they are dispersed in the various parts of it: and they should be willing to be treated as precise, conceited, and unpliant. But they, who persuade princes, that it is not for their profit to tolerate them; and that they had better persecute, destroy, or banish them, are as much enemies to the state, as to the church of God. Whatever mere professors may be, true Christians are the best subjects under every government: not only because they are more peaceable, honest, and industrious than their neighbours; and conscientiously pay tribute, and render obedience in all things lawful; but because their examples and conversation edify many, and their prayers bring down a blessing upon the land in which they live in peace. No acquisitions of wealth therefore could compensate the loss of them, even in a political view; and without bringing into the account, the enormous load of national guilt, which persecution rapidly accumulates.—The ungodly are often lavish in expenses on their lusts; and thus, shame those Christians who are penurious in promoting the cause of God: they, however, frequently find means by one of their crimes to bear the expenses of the rest; and it is through defect of ingenuity, or power, if they do not always accomplish this.—Inconsiderate princes, who are the slaves of pleasure, and dupes to their favourites, may, though humane in their own dispositions, become as mischievous as the most bloody tyrants; by consenting, through false accusations, to that injustice and cruelty which they would have abhorred, if they had taken the pains properly to investigate the business. Thus the most important interests of millions are sacrificed to the humour, emolument, or revenge of some worthless wretch; who regards the honour of his patron no more than he does the happiness of the people, and is as insensible to gratitude, as to compassion. But we may cease to wonder that such things have been done, when we consider how individuals, in every station of life, sacrifice their credit, interest, health, and connexions, and even shorten their lives, as well as ruin their souls, for the sake of the most contemptible gratifications: and though sensible to their danger, they have no power to resist the importunity of an inordinate unreasonable inclination! When this becomes the case of one in authority, and unites with his other passions and partialities; intoxication and excess extinguish every remaining spark of humanity, and stupify conscience and reflection; and he and his companions will be revelling with unfeeling and unseasonable mirth, while thousands are deploring the fatal effects of their pernicious counsels.—But the Lord bounds the effects of man's malice, as he does the raging waves of the ocean; even superstition, though baneful in itself, may sometimes operate as an useful restraint on those who are free from every other; and it has often so dismayed unprincipled men, in the full career of prosperous wickedness, that they have postponed their designs, till opportunity has been given to render them abortive. Thus "the counsel of the Lord shall stand, and he will do all his pleasure:" and "they that trust in him shall never be confounded."

he pretended, be more than equivalent to all present or subsequent disadvantages.

V. 10, 11. Without much knowledge of the human heart, and the history of mankind, we should find a difficulty in conceiving, how any prince could be induced to consent to so horrid and pernicious a proposal, without objection or hesitation. It would be absurd to assign a reason for so infatuated a measure. But when an arbitrary monarch has become the dupe of a wicked favourite; it has always been observed, that the first object of his life, the chief, and almost the only, use which he makes of his power, is to gratify and aggrandize him: and the lives of subjects, or the interests of empires, have, on such occasions, often been wantonly sacrificed to the avarice, the ambition, the revenge, or the caprice, of a worthless minion!—So both are men that love their pleasure, to take any pains to distinguish between truth and falsehood. (Bp. Patrick).—As a token that the request was granted, Ahasuerus gave the ring, with his royal signet, from his own hand, to the enemy and oppressor of the Jews; and he also granted to him all the spoil, without making any payment into the treasury: thus Haman seemed about to obtain the most complete gratification of his revenge, ambition, and avarice. (Notes, Ez. x. 9, 10. Is. x. 13—15. Luke xii. 15—21.)

V. 12—15. Haman hastened to form the grant of the king into a decree, and to publish it throughout the empire: that the sentence might be looked upon as irreversible, and that all the subjects might prepare to carry it into execution, as they tendered the favour of the king, and of his minister. Thus he expected, that the hope of ingratiating themselves at court, and the enmity borne the Jews, would unite the inhabitants of every city, and province, in this bloody massacre: doubtless he intended to stir them up, and lead them to the attack, by his emissaries; and, further to encourage them, it seems probable, that they were allowed to take the spoil of the Jews to themselves as a prey. That his meaning might not be mistaken, he caused the edict to be drawn up with a remarkable repetition, and almost in the style of modern law; and the inhabitants of every province were expressly commanded, "to destroy, kill, and cause to perish," all the Jews in one day.—When this strange decree was published, it caused much perplexity and consternation, not only to the Jews, but to all considerate men, especially at Shushan: for they could not but tremble for themselves, when they perceived what a bloody tyrant had possession of authority; and they must foresee, that terrible effects would follow from such a mad and rash attempt, which would render an immense number of people desperate, and drive them to the most furious courage in their own defence. But Haman was insensible to every thing, but the gratification of his revenge; and in order to keep such reflections, and reports, at a distance from the king, he engaged him in pleasure and indulgence; and they sat down to drink as perfectly unconcerned in the event!—Eleven months intervened, between the publishing of the decree, and the day appointed for carrying it into execution.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—6. The favourites of earthly princes have too often been distinguished by their folly, pride, and profligacy; but those of the King of heaven are endowed with wisdom and grace, and prepared for usefulness in their several situations.—The vanity, and comparative worthlessness, of earthly dignities and possessions are shewn, by their being so commonly lavished upon the basest of the human species; "God having provided better things" for the objects of his special love.—The poison of the old serpent, infused by his first temptation, "Ye shall be as gods," still rankles in the human heart; and when the pride of man is emboldened by great prosperity, it is capable of openly affecting the honour and worship, which belong to God alone! (Notes, Gen. iii. 4, 5. Ez. xxviii. 3—5. P. O. 1—10. Dan. vi. 6—9. Acts xii. 20—23.) We are all by nature idolatrous, and self is the most favourite of our idols: and whilst we admire and glory in our own supposed excellences, we delight that others should join the incense of their adulation; we are pleased to be treated, as if every thing were at our disposal, and within the reach of our capacity, and that all around should submit to us, and bow before us. And when this vast ambition occupies a narrow mind, and the possessor climbs the pinnacle of earthly grandeur, he forgets that he is a man; and acts as if the world was made for him, and was to be governed by him; and as if all its inhabitants were created to be his slaves, and to worship at his shrine!—The desire of the favour of monarchs, and the fear of their wrath, influence most men to allow of such arrogant claims, and to conform to this strange idolatry; and those princes, who have literally demanded altars, sacrifices, and incense to their own deity, have generally met with a ready and zealous compliance from most of their subjects. But the true believer can neither obey such edicts and conform to such fashions, nor be induced, by any persuasions or menaces, to violate the law of God, or the dictates of his own conscience. He must "obey God, rather than men," and leave the consequences to him; and whether "his matters will

10 ¶ Again Esther spake unto Hatach, and gave him commandment unto Mordecai:

11 All the king's servants, and the people of the king's provinces, do know, that whosoever, whether man or woman, shall come unto the king into "the inner court, who is not called, there is "one law of his to put him to death, except such to whom "the king shall hold out the golden sceptre, that he may live: "but I have not been called to come in unto the king these thirty days.

12 And they told to Mordecai Esther's words.

13 Then Mordecai commanded to answer Esther, "Think not with thyself that thou shalt escape in the king's house, more than all the Jews.

14 For, if thou altogether holdest thy peace at this time, "then shall there "enlargement and deliverance arise to the Jews from another place; but "thou and thy father's house shall be destroyed: and who knoweth "whether thou art come to the kingdom "for such a time as this?

15 ¶ Then Esther bade them return Mordecai this answer,

16 Go, gather together all the Jews, that are "present in Shushan, and "fast ye for me, and neither "eat nor drink, three days, night or day: "I also and my maidens will fast likewise; and so will I go in unto the king, which is not according to the law: and "if I perish, I perish.

17 So Mordecai "went his way, and did according to all that Esther had commanded him.

danger, and to the proper method of seeking deliverance. Probably he was one of the most considerable Jews in Shushan, and so, immediately struck at by the decree; therefore he thus avowed his relation to the Jews, and called upon them to unite in seeking protection from God.

V. 2. Nothing was allowed to enter within the palace, which did not bear the aspect of joy or pleasure, or which could remind the king of misery or mortality. (Notes, Gen. i. 4.) Thus, whatever oppressions were committed upon the subjects, all complaints were discouraged, and care was taken to prevent the king from being troubled with the report of them. Mordecai, therefore, when expressing his grief by the customary tokens, might not enter to his usual place of attendance: but he walked as near it as he could, that, being noticed, Esther might hear of him; through whom he doubtless entertained hopes of deliverance. (Notes, 13, 14. i. 22.)

V. 3. We cannot doubt, that the fastings and weepings of the Jews were attended by constant prayers and supplications; yet all mention of them, and of the great object of their worship, seems to have been carefully and purposely avoided, both here and elsewhere. (Preface.)

V. 4. Some of the queen's attendants were, it seems, acquainted with her relation to Mordecai; and his excessive grief being noticed, she soon heard of it. As a token of her sincere sympathy with him in his sorrow, and her unabated affection for so kind a benefactor, she sent him change of raiment, according to the custom of the times; in order, perhaps, that he might resume his place: but she seems not to have known the cause of his affliction; and his refusal to be comforted would lead her to conclude, that it was for some very great and terrible calamity. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 5. The wives and concubines of the Persian kings were watched with such jealous strictness, that the queen herself had not liberty to go out of the precincts of the palace, to confer in person with so near a relative; nor might he have access to her, especially in mourning! So that she could only enquire the cause of his excessive sorrow, by the interposition of the chamberlains, whom the king had appointed to attend on her. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 6-10. (Notes, iii. 2-15. Marg. Ref.)

V. 11. It may be supposed, that this law was framed, under the pretext of securing the person of the king from the assaults of conspirators, and of maintaining his dignity; that, being seldom seen, he might be considered as a kind of deity: but it would serve also to protect his ministers and favourites from detection, in their oppressions or pernicious measures. For in general the king must see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and receive their reports: and if any one would venture to present to him a complaint, petition, appeal, or information, he must do it at the hazard of his life; as the king would seldom call for any person, in opposition to the advice of his counsellors and ministers. By this method the king also was excluded from liberal society and converse; so that his palace in the city, and his pavilions in the camp, became a kind of prison: and no wonder, that princes who were so immured, became morose and capricious, and prepared for every kind of tyranny and cruelty. (Notes, Neh. ii. 1, 2. Dan. vi. 6-9.)—As the law extended to the women likewise, we may suppose that this was intended to free the monarch from molestation, when his affections had been transferred from former objects to more successful rivals; for if the queen went into his presence uncalled, immediate death was the inevitable consequence, if he happened to be displeased at her intrusion. And as Esther had not been called for, during a whole month; she had some reason to fear that she had lost the king's favour; and that she should also lose her life, if she presumed to enter uncalled into his presence.—Probably, Haman had occupied the king's mind with every species of licentious pleasure, that he might think no further of the edict, which he had confirmed and published.

V. 13, 14. Mordecai represented to Esther, that in case the decree against her people should be executed, she would certainly be known to be a Jewess, and would be slain even in the king's palace, by some of the envious and malicious enemies of that nation. But, being "strong in faith," he was assured, that God would by some means deliver his people; and that, if she refused to venture her life in the cause, their enlargement would be attended by some remarkable judgment upon her, and all her remaining relations. (Notes, Prov. xxiv. 11, 12. Matt. xvi. 24-28. Marg. Ref.) He also thought it very likely that she had been advanced to her present dignity, on purpose to be the deliverer of her nation in this perilous crisis.—It is remarkable that sentiments, so replete with faith and piety, are conveyed to us, without the mention of God, or providence. This seems to have been done intentionally. (Preface.)

V. 15-17. (Marg. Ref.)—(Neither eat, &c.) (16.) Some think that this only means, that the Jews were required to abstain from all delicacies, and to fast each day till after sunset: but perhaps on this extraordinary occasion, all, who had no good excuse, fasted from the morning of the first, until some time on the third day, without eating any thing. (Notes, Dan. x. 2, 3. Joel i. 13-15. ii. 15-17. Jon. iii. 6-10.) The queen herself, however, conformed to the same rule which she prescribed to others: and she had obtained some attendants, who were willing to unite with her in the exercises of devotion, though it is not probable that they were Jewesses: and when preparation had been made, by solemn humiliation before God, no doubt accompanied by fervent, united, and persevering prayer, she determined, by a heroic act of faith and love, to venture her life in the cause of her people: and if it were the will of the Lord, that she should be put to death, she was ready to acquiesce in his appointment: (Notes, Neh. vi. 10-14. Acts xx. 22-24. Phil. ii. 24-30. 1 John iii. 16, 17.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-9. Public calamities, especially those which oppress the church of God, should more affect our hearts than any private affliction: and it is peculiarly distressing to a generous mind, to be even the occasion of suffering to others.—Vain is the attempt of man to banish misery from his heart, by any of those varied devices which he tries for that purpose. A refuge from the wrath to come is indeed provided; and an effectual support under temporal afflictions, and victory over death itself: but most men content themselves with striving to forget their misery, instead of seeking and securing happiness. Yet the approach of death, as well as its consequences, must be formidable, in proportion as it is unexpected and unprepared for.—Exalted stations and envied distinctions, abridge the liberty of the possessors, and preclude them from the most agreeable society. Pride, envy, suspicion, and other unreasonable passions, render them slaves to cumbrous forms; and to preserve their dignity, or from fear of giving offence, they often have less opportunity of enjoyment, or improvement, than their inferiors, and become the ignorant dupes of designing men in matters of the greatest importance. Too often laws also are framed to subserve men's lust: and under every government, the more cause is given for complaint, the less liberty is allowed to complain.—But let us rejoice that the Esther, venturing uncalled before the king, is graciously received; and, being encouraged to make her request, she invites the king and Haman to a banquet, 1-5. Being again asked what was her request, she invites them to another banquet the next day, 6-8. Haman, proud of this distinction, and elated by prosperity, is disquieted by Mordecai's neglect, and complains of it to his friends and his wife, 9-13. By their advice he erects a gallows for Mordecai's execution the next morning, 14.

NOW it came to pass ^aon the third day, that Esther put on her ^broyal apparel, and stood in the inner court of the king's house, over against the king's house: and the king ^csat upon his royal throne in the royal house, over against the gate of the house.

2 And it was so, when the king saw Esther the queen standing in the court, ^dthat she obtained favour in his sight: and the king held out to Esther ^ethe golden sceptre that ^fwas in his hand. So Esther drew near, and touched the top of the sceptre.

3 Then said the king unto her, ^gWhat wilt thou, queen Esther? and what ^his thy request? it shall be even given thee ⁱto the half of the kingdom.

4 And Esther answered, ^jIf it seem good unto the king, let the king and Haman come this day unto ^kthe banquet that I have prepared for him.

5 Then the king said, ^lCause Haman to make haste, that he may do as Esther hath said. So the king and Haman came to the banquet that Esther had prepared.

6 ¶ And ^mthe king said unto Esther at the banquet of wine, What ⁿis thy petition? and it shall be granted thee: and what ^ois thy request? even to the half of the kingdom it shall be performed.

7 Then answered Esther, and said, My petition and my request ^pis; righteous Lord reigneth, and upon a mercy-seat. To him we have access at all times; his golden sceptre is ever held forth to encourage our approach: we cannot come uncalled into his presence, when we plead the Saviour's name; our danger consists in keeping at too great a distance, not in drawing too near; if he have taken us for the objects of his peculiar love, he will never cast us off: and it is our own fault if we have not daily access to him, and communion with him. We never have any good reason to complain of his dispensations; though we have frequently cause to bemoan our afflictions, to deprecate the miseries to which we are exposed, and to appeal to him against our oppressors, persecutors, and tempters: and we are charged to present our daily petitions at his throne of grace, for the whole church of God and all the members of it, according to their several difficulties, trials, and services, as well as for the conversion and salvation of our fellow-sinners. For this purpose, we should enquire concerning the state of our brethren, how they fare, and of the cause of God, how it prospers; that we may be directed in our prayers, and in our endeavours to serve the common cause by the due improvement of our talents. And if we be thus disposed, we shall seldom want opportunities of comforting the mourners, protecting the oppressed, or succouring those who are in tribulation or necessity.

V. 10-17. As the enemies of the church are instigated by malice to be unwearied in mischief, surely we should be constrained by love to be unwearied in doing good. But we are prone to shrink from perilous and self-denying services; and to think ourselves sufficiently excused for neglecting an opportunity of important usefulness, if we can truly say, that it would have been embraced at the hazard of liberty, or life. Yet, as the disciples of him who laid down his life for us, we ought also, if properly called to it, "to lay down our lives for the brethren;" and no labour, loss, or suffering in the way, will justify us in neglecting the duty of our station. If then, Christians, who are placed in exalted situations, shew a disposition to consult their own ease and safety rather than the public good, they should be plainly remonstrated with, and reminded that their interest and that of God's people are inseparable; that their enemies are the same; that he, who sinfully determines "to save his life, shall lose it;" that enlargement and deliverance will arise to the church of God from some quarter; but if they, from selfish motives, refuse the privilege of being his instruments, the honour will be given to others, and disgrace or ruin will come upon them and theirs, for deserting the cause when the emergency called for their interposition; that Providence has raised them to their high stations, that they may serve God, and do good to mankind, and will they then neglect the opportunity which is presented to them? That, perhaps this was the very service for which they were raised up; and it is preposterous to fear man in doing the evident will of God. Such remonstrances, when urged by men of consistent character, have a powerful effect in exciting the timorous and reluctant to venture in a good cause.—They who are called to stand forth boldly in perilous services, have a right to demand the united prayers of all their brethren. And, in great emergencies and adversities especially, solemn seasons of fasting, humiliation, and prayer are peculiarly useful, to prepare the mind for expecting and receiving deliverance from the mercy of God, in a proper manner. Believers may have fellowship with each other in the same duties, when not able to meet in the same place.—They, who stir up others to self-denial should set the example of it: and a winning deportment, a pious conversation, and a holy life, will generally induce others to join us in seeking the Lord, wherever we are placed. Having solemnly commended our souls and our cause to God, we may venture under his protection upon any service, without distressing fear; we are perfectly safe, if he please to preserve us; and should we lose our lives in doing his will, that loss would be our greatest gain.—Indeed, all dangers are trivial, compared to the danger of losing our souls. When this is apprehended, the trembling sinner is often as much afraid of casting himself, without reserve, upon the Lord's free mercy, as Esther was of coming before the king. But let him venture, as she did, with earnest prayers and supplications, saying, "If I perish, I perish," and he shall certainly succeed in the event. And as the cause of God will at last be triumphant, it is our highest interest cordially to adhere to it, whatever cross we may be required to endure.

NOTES.

CHAP. V. V. 1-3. Esther, having entrusted herself to the protection of God, and put on her royal apparel, ventured into the presence of the king: most probably before the conclusion of the solemn fast, and while the Jews were still engaged in prayer. Her conduct was contrary to law: but the king, by holding forth the golden sceptre, granted her a pardon; and by his subsequent enquiry and promise, relieved her anxiety, and raised her expectations. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Gen. xxxii. 6-8. 28. xxxiii. 4. Neh. i. 5-11. Prov. xxi. 1. Acts ix. 3-6. xii. 5-11.)—The apocryphal addition to this book, says, that at first the king frowned, and Esther fainted; and that God then put it into his heart to behave kindly towards her.

V. 4. It appears probable that Esther intended to make a previous trial of the king's disposition, before she presented her important petition, which could scarcely be granted without the immediate ruin of his principal favourite. It might also be improper to make her request before the king's attendants; and she meant to do it in the presence of Haman. The delay likewise expressed her respect for the king, whom she reluctantly troubled, because the matter was urgent: and probably she well knew that blandishments and the exhilaration of wine, disposed him to grant such petitions as he would otherwise have rejected.

V. 5-7. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 8. Whether Esther's courage failed her, or whether she had some good reason for this delay; the providential wisdom of God was wonderfully manifested by it, as the event sufficiently shews. (Notes, vi.)

V. 9. He stood, &c. Mordecai had before refused Haman the exorbitant honours which he claimed: but now he "stood not up, nor moved for him," which, probably, he had before done; for Haman's prodigious wickedness rendered him unworthy even of common respect. Mordecai would also shew this base man, that, so far from abject submission from dread of his cruel revenge, he had trusted his cause with God, and did not "fear what flesh could do to him."—It seems that at the close of the solemn fast, Mordecai had hasted to put off his sackcloth, and to be found in his place. (Notes, ii. 21-23. iv. 1, 2.)

V. 11, 12. Haman's wife and friends must have before known the particulars of his prosperity: but he loved, it seems, to talk on these subjects; and the queen's invitation, which he supposed to spring from esteem and respect, was a recent distinction which flattered his pride.

V. 13. The neglect of Mordecai, by Haman's own confession, more than counterbalanced all his prosperity, and marred all his enjoyment. His proud heart rankled with malice and impatience, because this Jew still lived, kept his

CHAP. VI.

The king, unable to sleep, orders the records to be read, 1: and discovering that Mordecai's services had not been rewarded, he considers how to honour him, 2, 3. Haman, coming early to request that Mordecai might be hanged, is himself appointed to confer the highest honours upon him, 4-11. He is extremely cast down, and vexed: his friends and wife predict his ruin; and in this state of mind he is called to attend Esther's banquet, 12-14.

ON that night *could not the king sleep, and he commanded to bring ^bthe book of records of the chronicles; and they were read before the king.

2 And it was found written that Mordecai had told of ^cBigthana and Teresh, two of the king's chamberlains, the keepers of the ^ddoor, who sought to lay hand on the king Ahasuerus.

3 And the king said, ^eWhat honour and dignity hath been done to Mordecai for this? Then said the king's servants that ministered unto him, ^fThere is nothing done for him.

4 ¶ And the king said, ^gWho is in the court? Now Haman was come into ^hthe outward court of the king's house, ⁱto speak unto the king to hang Mordecai on the gallows that he had prepared for him.

5 And the king's servants said unto him, Behold, Haman standeth in the court. And the king said, Let him come in.

6 So Haman came in. And the king said unto him, What shall be done unto the man ^jwhom the king delighteth to honour? Now Haman thought in place, and refused to bow unto him. The destruction of the nation was determined on at a distant day; but he thirsted for Mordecai's blood, as an anticipation of that more complete revenge.—How small a matter will spoil all the satisfaction of those, who have arrived at the top of human felicity! Immense riches, glory, and honour, gave not Haman so much pleasure, as he felt pain from one man's disrespect.' (Bp. Patrick.)

V. 14. Zeresh and Haman's friends supposed, that he could not enjoy the royal banquet, if he did not previously gratify his malice by the death of Mordecai. They were confident, that at the first word the king would consent to Mordecai's execution; and they advised the immediate erection of a gibbet for that purpose, that no time might be lost: and, in order that all men might witness the death of him, who refused honour to the favourite, it must be more than twenty-five yards high! This cruel and foolish counsel was calculated to please Haman; and though night was approaching, the gallows was immediately prepared: but little did he dream for whom it was erected. (Notes, vii. 9, 10. ix. 13, 14.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In those things which must be done, and which require great courage, needless delays should be avoided; and it is best to proceed when our affections are lively, and our faith in exercise.—Costly or royal apparel is not the Christian's ornament, and it is utterly worthless when compared with wisdom and grace: yet, on some occasions and in some stations, it may and ought to be worn. (Notes, 1 Tim. ii. 9, 10. 1 Pet. iii. 1-4.) But it is a most deplorable evil that inferior persons will ape the fashions, and emulate the expense, of their superiors: and thus they often injure their families and creditors, or lavish that which belongs to the poor; and at the same time expose their own weakness and folly.—The best method of prevailing with men, is first to prevail with God by earnest prayer; for he can dispose the heart of any prince, or even persecutor, to favour his people, as far as he pleases. Yet while we trust in his omnipotent protection, we should be wise as well as courageous: and he will generally teach those who consult him, to conciliate men's affections by attention and respect, and to watch for favourable opportunities before they propose important matters. But, however largely men may profess or promise, it is best not to ask or expect too much from them.—A slight affront, which an humble man would scarcely notice, will torment a proud man even to madness; destroy all his comforts, and sometimes fill him with diabolical rage and misery. Such persons delight in boasting of the commendations, honours, and favours conferred on them; each new distinction gives a momentary gratification to their vanity; and they receive every attention, as a tribute to their merit, or as homage paid to their superior talents. They invite, and even hire, men to listen to their praises; and often glory most in those things, which tend to their immediate disgrace and ruin. For "vanity and vexation" are at last the inventory of all sublunary things. All availeth them nothing, while this is wanted, or the other wrong; now, that a beloved child or friend is dead, or an enemy lives and prospers; while some are mounted higher than themselves, and others refuse to render them the most servile flattery. Prosperity increases insolence and arrogance, which stir up envy and enmity, and provoke affronts and opposition; and thus the most envenomed resentments and tormenting passions are excited, and the fair edifice of fancied felicity vanishes, like the enchanted castles of romantic poets. May we then seek happiness in the favour of God, in peace of conscience, and dominion over our own spirits; and in that humble holy "love, which is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil, becometh not unseemly, seeketh not her own, rejoiceth not in iniquity,—and never faileth," but shall be perfected in the eternal felicity of heaven!

his heart, 'To whom would the king delight to do honour more than to myself?

7 And Haman answered the king, For the man ^qwhom the king delighteth to honour,

8 ¶ "Let the royal apparel be brought which the king useth to wear, and ^rthe horse that the king rideth upon, and the crown-royal which is set upon his head;

9 And let this apparel and horse be delivered to the hand of one of the king's most noble princes, that they may array the man ^swithal whom the king delighteth to honour, and ^tbring him on horseback through the street of the city, and ^uproclaim before him, Thus shall it be done to the man whom the king delighteth to honour.

10 Then the king said to Haman, ^vMake haste, and take the apparel and the horse, as thou hast said, and do even so to Mordecai the Jew, that sitteth at the king's gate: ^wlet nothing fail of all that thou hast spoken.

11 Then ^xtook Haman the apparel and the horse, and arrayed Mordecai, and brought him on horseback through the street of the city, and proclaimed before him, Thus shall it be done unto the man whom the king delighteth to honour.

12 ¶ And Mordecai ^ycame again to the king's gate:

examine the records of his kingdom! It does not appear, that he had any express intention, in having recourse to this extraordinary way of employing his sleepless hours, during the night: but the only wise God so appointed it. And he likewise so ordered it, that the reader opened the records in that part of the records, in which Mordecai's important service was written! (Note, ii. 21-23.) Had not this circumstance intervened, Haman no doubt would have prevailed in his request against Mordecai; and this would have been extremely unfavourable to the success of Esther's petition for her people, and against Haman. (Note, v. 14.)

V. 3. Instead of a reward, Mordecai, and all his people for his sake, were actually condemned to die! Probably some recompense had been intended: but so unassuming a person, who would not cringe and flatter, and who presented no requests for preferment, was soon forgotten by a mighty prince, surrounded by his courtiers and pleasures, and engrossed by a multiplicity of affairs. (Notes, Gen. xl. 23. 1 Sam. xvii. 55-58. 2 Sam. ix. 1. Ec. ix. 13-18. Luke xvii. 11-19.)—But there was a special providence in it, that he went without a reward then, which procured it for him most opportunely at this time.' (Bp. Patrick.)

V. 4, 5. 'Haman came early to court, that he might gratify his revenge, and go with more pleasure to the banquet. This was another part of God's providence, to bring him so soon to court, when the king was so disposed.' (Bp. Patrick.)—Even Haman might not enter the inner court till called for. (Note, iv. 11.)

V. 6-11. We may suppose, that Haman was much pleased to be so speedily called into the king's chamber: but his request was prevented, by his advice being asked on a very different business. Probably, the king was considering what good preferment was vacant, which might suit Mordecai, whom he should delight to honour and reward, as the preserver of his life: but he did not name the person; and Haman's thoughts were so engrossed about himself, that he could not think, the king would honour any one ^{above him}, or would ^{delight} to honour any one ^{beside him}.—His excessive vanity, ambition, presumption, and ostentation, as well as the emptiness of his worthless mind, are illustrated by the honours which he chose. He must, forsooth, have the use of the king's own robe, and horse, and crown; one of the most noble princes must be his lackey, and his herald; and by proclamation it was to be made known, what delight the king had in honouring him! Perhaps, Ahasuerus understood his meaning, and was disgusted at his exorbitant pretensions: and while he peremptorily commanded him to do all this to "Mordecai the Jew," he could scarcely help remembering the edict, which Haman had obtained against that people. Haman, however, did not venture to object, or demur; his request for leave to hang Mordecai was adjourned sine die; and he was constrained to become page to a man, comparatively obscure, whom he hated and contemned above all other men on earth, while this extraordinary honour was conferred on him! Imagination itself cannot devise a more painful mortification. It can indeed hardly be supposed, that Mordecai was greatly pleased with this unmeaning pageantry, which would confer no solid advantage, but expose him to greater envy: yet he, probably, considered it as a favourable presage of Esther's success, and of the deliverance of his people from their malicious enemies.—Some learned men think, that "the crown-royal" denotes an ornament by which the king's horse was distinguished; and not the crown which the king himself wore.

V. 12. Mordecai, in no degree elated with the honour which he had received, returned to his place and duty as if nothing had happened. (Notes, 1 Sam. iii. 15. Prov. xxvii. 21.) But Haman went home as a condemned criminal, aware of the consequences of this unexpected disaster. If Mordecai had been a person before unknown to Haman, it would have been no real degradation, to be employed in honouring him, as the preserver of the king's life; though his pride would have been mortified: but, as he was the man but Haman ^hasted to his house mourning, and ^having his head covered.

13 And Haman told ^hZeresh his wife, and all his friends, every thing that had befallen him. Then ^said his wise men, and Zeresh his wife, unto him, ^hIf Mordecai be of the seed of the Jews, before whom thou hast begun to fall, thou shalt not prevail against him, ^hbut shalt surely fall before him.

14 And while they were yet talking with him, came the king's chamberlains, and ^hasted to bring Haman unto the banquet that Esther had prepared.

CHAP. VII.

Esther, at the banquet, petitions the king for her own life, and the lives of her people; and accuses Haman as their enemy, 1-6. The king, in wrath and jealousy, condemns Haman, who is hanged on the gallows prepared for Mordecai, 7-10.

SO the king and Haman came to ^hbanquet with Esther the queen.

2 And ^hthe king said again unto Esther on the second day, at the banquet of wine, What is thy petition, queen Esther? and it shall be granted thee: and what is thy request? and it shall be performed, even to the half of the kingdom.

3 Then Esther the queen answered and said, If I have found favour in thy sight, O king, and if it please whom he mortally hated, and one of that nation whose destruction he had sought; he must conclude that this favour indicated the purpose of the king to prefer Mordecai; and consequently foreboded his own ruin. For in such a contest, there could be no alternative between victory and destruction. (Note, Prov. xxv. 8-10.)

V. 13. The "wise men," whom Haman consulted, seem to have been astrologers or magicians; (Marg. Ref.) and perhaps they pretended to found their judgment on the principles of their art. Yet what has been observed of the contest between Haman and Mordecai, and the sudden and rapid falls of court-favourites in absolute monarchies; as well as what they must have heard of the wonderful works of JEHOVAH in behalf of his people, were sufficient to convince them, that this unexpected turn was the forerunner of more fatal consequences. But they deduced no salutary counsel from these apprehensions: indeed, their conclusions were entirely calculated to drive Haman to despair. (Notes, 1 Sam. xxviii. 12-19.)

V. 14. Haman, in the anguish of his heart, seems to have neglected his appointment; and doubtless he would willingly have been excused from the banquet, to which he expected to go so cheerfully; (Note, v. 14:) but there was no alternative; he must attend, to hear his accusation, and the judgment in consequence awarded against him.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We are in every thing entirely dependent upon God; nor can the whole world purchase an hour's refreshing sleep, if he see good to withhold it: from him therefore we should seek this solace to our cares, and praise him when we have enjoyed it. But when by any means he withholds sleep from us, it is of great importance to employ usefully our waking hours. The cares and duties of our station in society may occupy our reflection, to the exclusion of those thoughts that are vain and injurious: but it is best, when we can think upon God and his works, his truths, precepts, and promises: and when we can bless him for his mercies, and pour out our hearts before him in prayer. (Notes, Ps. lxxvii. 2-12.)—The providence of God superintends the most minute concerns of men. Those actions which are the result of caprice, and appear unaccountable, fall in with his wise and gracious purposes, and not a sparrow falls to the ground without him.—Gratitude even to man, though commended by all, is practised by very few; and commonly least by those who have most in their power. Pride of rank and birth, a variety of pleasures and occupations, and the presence of agreeable flatterers, combine to induce neglect and forgetfulness of those, who have most faithfully and effectually served them; especially if obscure, modest, and unassuming. Yet thus they not only become guilty of the odious sin of ingratitude; but actually yield the superiority to the very man whom they affect to despise: for he that confers, is always superior to him who receives, an unmerited and unrequited favour.—Those qualifications which demand esteem, and those actions which merit a reward, generally expose men to neglect, if not to ill-treatment, in the circles of the great, and in the courts of kings.—The instruments of pleasure and amusement, who help them to forget their misery, and to waste their fleeting moments; the forward, the subtle, and the artful; and they, who can sacrifice conscience, honour, and honesty, to wit, ingenuity, and politeness, have hitherto always met with most favour from the great. Let us then learn to serve a Master, who will not let the least well-meant service lose its reward.—And if any reader should recollect, that nothing hath been done to requite some benefactor who aided him many years ago, let him not think that the obligation is out of date; but rather let him study how he may, effectually and without further delay, do that which should have been done long since; and delight to honour his benefactors, if he can do them no other service.—Pride, envy, and ambition are insatiable; and every sinful passion grows more exorbitant by indulgence. When a man heartily idolizes his important self, he readily fancies that others equally admire him, and are disposed to do him honour. If any one open his lips in commendation, doubtless he must be the object! if a favour be mentioned, it must be intended for him! if a preferment be vacant, who but he can be thought of to fill it, provided it be not beneath his acceptance!—But "before honour is humility, and a haughty spirit before a fall:" both God and man delight in rendering the mortification of proud worms proportioned to their ambition: and such characters meet with many presages of that everlasting contempt and misery which await them, if not cured of this diabolical vice. They who have flattered them in prosperity, will prove miserable comforters in the time of their distress: worldly pleasures will soon become tasteless, and even nauseous, to those who have a conscience burdened with guilt or appalled with terror: and even the wise men of this world have often foreseen the ruin of those, who engage in the unequal contest with the church of God.—But the depth of the believer's distress is the seed-time of his joys; and every victory and comfort is to him an earnest of his final triumph and felicity. The honour, which the Father delighteth to confer upon his beloved Son, is a pledge of the security and salvation of all whom he represents, and who commit their cause into his hand. Their bitterest enemies shall promote, and be constrained to witness, their exaltation; and to perceive "what shall be done to the men whom the LORD delighteth to honour;" and how much their "eternal weight of glory" exceeds the worthless, transient honours of the world: while the sight shall increase the anguish and despair of those, who expected to be gratified in effecting their misery and destruction.

NOTES.

CHAP. VII. V. 2-4. While the king repeatedly urged Esther to make her request; and, in language more expressive than before, promised to grant it, though it were to the value of half his kingdom; (iv. 4. 6:) she, with the greatest modesty and respect, and in the most simple and affecting manner, besought him, that her own life might be spared, and the lives of her people, which were all involved in one common danger. Without complaining of his conduct in any degree, she stated, that she and her people had been sold as sheep for the slaughter; alluding to the money, which Haman had offered to pay into the treasury for their destruction: she quoted the words of the unrighteous decree, "to be destroyed, to be slain, and to perish," as proving that her life, as well as those of the other Jews, was certainly in danger; (iii. 13:) and she added, that if they had been only sold for slaves, she would not have interposed; though the enemy could never have made up the loss which the king would have sustained, by thus oppressing his peaceable and industrious subjects. Some interpret the last clause to mean, that if the sufferings of the enslaved Jews, though extreme and undeserved, had not been likewise detrimental to the king's interest, Esther would have held her peace. The whole speech, however, was replete with natural eloquence, and suited to affect and persuade the king.

V. 5. Perhaps Ahasuerus at first scarcely recollected his edict against the Jews, or was not aware of its consequences; or he did not immediately perceive that Esther referred to it; and therefore he could not conceive that any one could be so daring, as to attempt the life of his queen, as well as the destruction of his subjects.

V. 6. The events, and presages, of the morning no doubt tended to increase Haman's terror on this occasion. He had found, that the king "delighted to honour" Mordecai the Jew; he now discovered that the queen was a Jewess, and strongly attached to her people; he had heard the king repeatedly promise to "grant her request, to the half of his kingdom;" and he could not but be aware that his own ruin was impending.

V. 7. We may suppose, that at the moment when Esther mentioned "wicked Haman," as the enemy of her and her people, the whole affair of the edict rushed into the king's mind, and appeared to him in its true colours; and that he was filled with rage, when he reflected how his worthless favourite had seduced him into a measure, calculated to ruin his kingdom, to take away the life of his beloved queen, and exceedingly to tarnish his own reputation; and that he walked about in agitation of mind, not knowing what could be done in such an emergency.

in the house? As the word went out of the king's mouth, they covered Haman's face.

9 And Harbonah, one of the chamberlains, said before the king, Behold also, the gallows fifty cubits high, which Haman had made for Mordecai, who had spoken good for the king, standeth in the house of Haman. Then the king said, Hang him thereon.

10 So they hanged Haman on the gallows that he had prepared for Mordecai. Then was the king's wrath pacified.

CHAP. VIII.

Haman's estate is given to Esther; and Mordecai, as her near relation, is preferred in Haman's stead, 1, 2. Esther, with tears, intreats the king to reverse the decree against the Jews, 3-6. The king authorizes the Jews to defend themselves, and sends letters to that effect, throughout the provinces, 7-14. The honours of Mordecai, and the joy of the Jews, 15-17.

ON that day did the king Ahasuerus give the house of Haman, the Jews' enemy, unto Esther the queen. And Mordecai came before the king; for Esther had told what he was unto her.

2 And the king took off his ring which he had taken from Haman, and gave it unto Mordecai. And Esther set Mordecai over the house of Haman.

3 ¶ And Esther spake yet again before the king, and fell down at his feet, and besought him with

V. 8. Haman had prostrated himself against the couch on which Esther reclined at the banquet. His only design was to deprecate, with the most abject submission, her displeasure, and to treat her to intercede for his life. But the king, being convinced that he was capable of any villany, and growing more enraged by reflecting upon his former machinations; suspected, or professed to suspect, him of having designs against the queen's honour also.—This word sufficiently informed the attendants of the king's determination: and they directly treated Haman as a condemned criminal, who was never more to see the face of the king, or even the light of the sun, but to be hurried away to immediate death.

V. 9. Harbonah, going to call Haman to the banquet, had seen the gallows, and discovered for what purpose it was prepared. Haman had doubtless been greatly envied for his prosperity, and hated for his insolence, in the midst of all the homage which was paid him. But now that the king's mind was evidently alienated from him, the courtiers were glad to please him and the queen, by assisting in his downfall.

V. 10. It is immaterial to us, whether Haman died by crucifixion, or was strangled, or put to death in some other way before he was suspended on the gibbet: but crucifixion seems to have been a Roman punishment, not in use at this early period. It is enough to know, that he suffered the punishment which he had devised for Mordecai. Nec lex est aequior ulla, quam necis artifices arte perire sua. 'There is no law more equitable, than that the devisers of death should perish by their own art.' (Notes, Deut. xxi. 22, 23. Josh. viii. 29. x. 24. 2 Sam. xvii. 23. xviii. 9. xxi. 9. Matt. xxvii. 3-5. Gal. iii. 10-14.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The repeated promises, even of weak, mutable, and selfish men, encourage us to make our requests to them with expectation of success; much more then should the exceedingly great and precious promises of the unchangeable God, embolden us to present many and large petitions to him, in behalf of ourselves and others, and with the full assurance of receiving far more than we ask.—If the love of life inspire such earnest and pathetic pleadings, with those "who can only kill the body;" how fervent and importunate should our continual prayers be to "Him, who is able to destroy both body and soul in hell!" And how affectionately should we pray for the eternal salvation of our relatives, friends, and neighbours, and all around us!—In supplicating the great men of this world, we must be very cautious not to withhold proper respect, or to give needless offence; even just complaints must be suppressed, and that asked as a great favour, which might equitably be demanded as a debt. But when we approach the King of kings, provided we come with humble reverence and uprightness of heart, we cannot ask or expect too much; for though nothing but wrath is our due, he is able and willing to "do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think."—Persecution is as impolitic as it is unjust: nor would the wealth of both the Indies compensate the loss, which must arise to every prince, who puts to death his conscientious industrious subjects, immures them in prisons, drives them out of his dominions, harasses them with oppressions, and tempts them to hypocrisy.—Men often commit crimes without remorse, which when described in their nature and consequences by proper language, or pointed out to them in the conduct of others, appear most horrible and atrocious; and when they find upon reflection, the nature and effects of their own heedless conduct, they are filled with anguish and remorse. (Notes, 2 Sam. xii. 1-14. Ps. li. 1-6.) Yet, alas! their indignation frequently alights upon their temptors or accomplices, instead of producing unreserved self-condemnation and abhorrence. But when such convictions are excited in those in authority; though they do not terminate in true repentance, they may yet produce many salutary effects, by inducing them to punish atrocious criminals, to protect the innocent, and tears, to put away the mischief of Haman the Agagite, and his device that he had devised against the Jews.

4 Then the king held out the golden sceptre towards Esther. So Esther arose, and stood before the king,

5 And said, If it please the king, and if I have found favour in his sight, and the thing seem right before the king, and I be pleasing in his eyes, let it be written to reverse the letters devised by Haman the son of Hammedatha the Agagite, which he wrote to destroy the Jews which are in all the king's provinces.

6 For how can I endure to see the evil that shall come unto my people? or how can I endure to see the destruction of my kindred?

7 ¶ Then the king Ahasuerus said unto Esther the queen, and to Mordecai the Jew, Behold, I have given Esther the house of Haman, and him they have hanged upon the gallows, because he laid his hand upon the Jews.

to rectify grievous abuses.—They who are most insolent in prosperity, are commonly the most abject in adversity: and the enemies of God shall all be brought down before his people, and made to know his love towards them. (Ez. xi. 8. Is. lx. 14. Rev. iii. 9.)—When men have proved themselves capable of the most daring and horrid crimes; they have no reason to expect any other, but to be suspected where they are not guilty, and to have the worst constructions put upon their most innocent actions.—The favour of men is deceitful and precarious: the higher wicked ambition climbs, the more rapid and terrible will be its fall. When haughty favourites, either of mighty princes, or of fickle multitudes, begin to totter upon their slippery eminence, all hands join to hurry them down, either out of envy, revenge, hatred, or similar ambition: and even they, who have most caressed and delighted to honour them, will often as much delight in their misery and ruin. Thus "the fear of the wicked cometh upon him," and that suddenly: he is "taken in his own net, and entangled in his own devices;" and "when he perishes, there is shouting." (Notes, Prov. x. 24. xi. 10, 11.)—At the day of final retribution, when the whole wickedness of the ungodly shall be discovered, and the justice of God displayed in their everlasting punishment; all the righteous shall joyfully exclaim, "So let all thine enemies perish, O Lord!" (Notes, Rev. xviii. 11-20. xix. 1-6.) but "they who love him, shall shine forth as the sun, in the kingdom of their Father."

NOTES.

CHAP. VIII. V. 1, 2. Some of Esther's attendants seem to have been acquainted with Mordecai's relation to her; (Note, iv. 4;) and probably the king knew that he was of Jewish extraction: but he did not know that Mordecai was her own cousin, and had been as a father to her, till on this occasion she disclosed it to him. Mordecai in consequence was introduced to Ahasuerus, and preferred by him; and as he had been so good a friend to the queen, and had preserved the king's life, none could have fairer pretensions. The ring with the royal signet seems to have continued with Haman, as denoting the high offices which he bore under the king, till he was deposed and condemned; when, being taken from him, it was given to Mordecai, as his successor. (Notes, iii. 10, 11. Gen. xli. 41-43. Is. xxii. 20-25. Jer. xxii. 24-27.) Haman's large estate also, being confiscated for his crimes, was given to Esther, and managed for her by Mordecai: (Notes, Job xxvii. 13-23. Prov. xiii. 22. xxviii. 8. Ec. ii. 24-26;) and if that haughty man could have foreseen these events, the prospect would have embittered his life, and even augmented the anguish of his death.

V. 3-6. Haman was dead, Mordecai was advanced, and the queen's person was protected: but the edict against the Jews remained in force, and their numerous enemies, in every province, would endeavour to carry it into execution; so that Esther had not obtained the deliverance of her people, and that lay nearest to her heart. Probably, she was sometimes called for by the king: but to shew that she was interested in the concerns of her nation, even more than in her own safety, she again ventured uncalled into his presence, to plead for them. She seems to have been peculiarly earnest and pathetic on this occasion; for she fell at his feet, and besought him with tears to grant her request. It may be supposed, that Ahasuerus hesitated in this perplexing case; as not knowing how to extricate himself with credit from so great a difficulty, and as reluctant to proclaim to all the world, the folly into which he had been seduced. But Esther, with great discretion, avoided every intimation that the king himself had issued the decree, and expressed herself as if it had been Haman's forgery. Indeed it had originated in his pride and revenge; his artful insinuations had decoyed the king to give an inconsiderate assent to it; and he had framed it in his own words, and to answer his own purposes. (Notes, iii. 6-15.)

V. 8. The decree against the Jews was irrevocable: but another edict might counteract its operation, and that would also become irreversible: and Esther and Mordecai were allowed to frame one for the purpose, as explicit as they 9 Then were 'the king's scribes called at that time in the third month, (that is, the month Sivan,) on the three and twentieth day thereof; and it was written, (according to all that Mordecai commanded,) unto the Jews, 'and to the lieutenants, and the deputies and rulers of the provinces, which are from India unto Ethiopia, an hundred twenty and seven provinces, unto every province according to the writing thereof, and unto every people after their language, and to the Jews according to their writing, 'and according to their language.

10 And he wrote 'in the king Ahasuerus's name, and sealed it with the king's ring; and sent letters 'by posts on horseback, and riders on mules, camels, and 'young dromedaries;

11 Wherein the king granted the Jews which were in every city 'to gather themselves together, and to stand for their life, to destroy, to slay, and to cause to perish, all the power of the people and province, that would assault them, both little ones and women, 'and to take the spoil of them for a prey;

Ahasuerus, namely, 'upon the thirteenth day of the twelfth month, which is the month Adar.

13 The copy of the writing, for a commandment to be given in every province, was 'published unto all people, and that the Jews should be ready against that day, to 'avenge themselves on their enemies.

14 So the posts that rode upon mules and camels went out, 'being hastened and pressed on by the king's commandment. And the decree was given at 'Shushan the palace.

15 ¶ And Mordecai went out from the presence of the king in 'royal apparel of 'blue and white, and with a great crown of gold, and with a garment of fine linen and purple: and 'the city of Shushan rejoiced and was glad.

16 The 'Jews had 'light, and gladness, and joy, and honour.

17 And in every province, and in every city, whithersoever the king's commandment and his decree came, the Jews had joy and gladness, 'a feast and a good day. And 'many of the people of the land became Jews; 'for the fear of the Jews fell upon them.

pleased. (Marg. Ref.) Thus, that most absurd law, or constitution, made it necessary to authorize a civil war throughout this vast empire; both parties acting by, and against, the king's authority, at the same time!—The maxim in our government, that 'no act can be so framed, but that the same authority which enacted it may repeal it,' is immensely more suited to the state of human nature: for no human wisdom can foresee all the effects of any regulation, till experience has evinced them. (Note, i. 1.)

V. 9. (Notes, 1, 2. iii. 12—15.) Probably Ethiopia, or the south of Egypt, is intended.

V. 10. These letters were sent by runners, (Note, 2 Chr. xxx. 6—9;) or by horsemen. The words for the other animals, on which some of the messengers rode, are unusual, and learned men are not agreed about the meaning of them. But the greatest speed was needful in this emergency, and every method was taken to secure it. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 11—13. This last decree evidently shewed the king's intentions, though the former edict remained in force: so that they who assaulted the Jews, were, in reality, though not formally, rebelling against his authority. The Jews were not allowed to assault their enemies: but they might legally assemble and combine in defending themselves, and slay any number of those who attacked them. As the children, women, and spoil, were included in Haman's decree, they were also mentioned in this: but the Jews did not avail themselves of the clause; neither did they take any spoil. (iii. 13. Note, ix. 6—10.) Haman aimed at extermination, they only at self-defence. If this edict had not been granted, the Jews would have been punishable for taking previous measures in order to defend themselves; so that they could not have engaged with concert or prospect of success, in any measure for that purpose; and they who escaped the massacre, would have been exposed as criminals to the sword of the magistrate, for resisting the execution of the law. They might, and doubtless would, when rendered desperate, have sold their lives as dear as possible; but they could have had little hopes of escaping, when overwhelmed by numbers, who were countenanced by the governors in every province. But now the advantage was entirely on their side: as none who valued the king's favour, would injure them, and they might prepare with union and concert to repel the assaults of others, and to inflict deserved punishment on their inveterate enemies. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 14. Though this decree was ratified above eight months before the appointed day; yet there would be time little enough to publish it throughout all the provinces of this immense empire, considering the great distance of many of them from Shushan; and to give the Jews opportunity to take proper measures for their own preservation. And the king himself hastened away the messengers, as dreading the consequences of the former edict.

V. 15. Mordecai, being now publicly recognized as the chief minister and favourite of the king, went from the palace, arrayed according to his rank, in conformity to the customs of the country. (Marg. Ref.) It seems that the people of Shushan in general, having a better opinion of his integrity and capacity than of Haman's, were greatly pleased with the change: (Notes, Prov. xi. 10. 11. xxviii. 12. 28. xxix. 2:) though the sequel shews, that there was a considerable party of rancorous enemies to the Jews, residing there.

V. 16. Had light, &c. That is, prosperity and hope. The dark cloud which had long hung over them was dispelled, and the returning favour of the king, in answer to their prayers, was a token of the Lord's care of them. So that their hopes revived, and they began, as it were, to walk in the sunshine, and were filled with gladness, and treated with respect by those who had despised them; being evidently in favour both with God and man. (Notes, Ps. xps. 9—12. xvii. 11. Prov. iv. 18, 19.)

V. 17. (Marg. Ref.) When the people saw the interpositions of Providence in behalf of the Jews, they were convinced that God was with them, and that they would certainly prevail in the contest: being, therefore, afraid of perishing among their enemies, and desirous of sharing the rising prosperity of his people, they embraced their religion, and united interests with them. We may suppose that some were true converts, and others only formal professors, as it commonly happens in such cases. Haman's plot, however, to destroy the Jews, was over-ruled, to increase their numbers. (Notes, Zech. viii. 19—23. Acts xii. 1—4. 24.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—6. Many of those who most prosper in the world, would have little alacrity in their pursuits, or joy in their possessions, if they could foresee to whom their riches would devolve, and what use would be made of them. It is, however, a good thing when, consistently with justice, that wealth, which has pampered pride and luxury, and increased insolence and oppression, is transferred to those who will improve it to the glory of God and the benefit of mankind.—No advancement should render us forgetful of our indigent relatives, or indifferent about the public good, and the peace and prosperity of the church. These especially should be dearer to us than life itself; and when we have obtained our requests for ourselves, we should be the more fervent in prayer for our brethren, and in using our influence, and venturing all consequences, for their good.—If we would affect others, we should study to get our own hearts suitably impressed; and, in many cases, we may be more importunate in asking favour for our friends and brethren, and for the poor, than we ought to be for ourselves.—It is a good plea, when we are praying for the conversion of our children, or relatives, to say, "How can I endure to see the evil that shall come upon them? How can I endure to see the destruction of my kindred?" And it forms an argument equally forcible to induce us to use every means for their good, with assiduity and perseverance.—Bad examples, unjust laws, rash projects, and wicked books, often prove an extensive and durable curse to the world, when the authors of them are removed: no wisdom suffices to prevent their fatal tendency; and, as we must all be answerable for the consequences of our misconduct, this should render us very circumspect, lest guilt should accumulate even after our death. (Note, Luke xvi. 27—31.)

V. 7—17. Every regulation in society, however apparently reasonable and beneficial, which does not advert to the fallen nature of man, will, on trial, be found unsuitable to his real condition, and inconsistent with his best interests; and all provisions made to humour the ambition and passions of princes, will eventually embarrass and ensnare them. We are, however, indispensably bound to adopt every method of preventing the fatal effects of our past mistakes, or crimes; even though we should be constrained to proclaim our own folly to the world: and much expedition should be used, when men's lives are in danger, or their minds distracted with terrors.—If it was proper that the decree of Ahasuerus should be communicated to every nation in its own language, how reasonable and necessary is it that the holy law and gracious gospel of our God should be put into every one's hands in his own tongue!—They who sow in tears and prayers, may expect speedily to reap with joy.—External decorations are insignificant in the judgment of the wise and pious: yet they may properly distinguish those in authority; and, while they procure them respect from the multitudes, who look no further, they should remind them of the duties to which their dignities call them.—The preferment of wise and pious men ought to be matter of rejoicing to all: but the people of God have the most cause for gladness. They may expect to be delivered from the darkness of oppression, to enjoy the light of peace and prosperity; and to meet with honour, in some measure proportioned to the contempt which they before endured. And when believers "have rest, and walk in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, they will be multiplied." Indeed, the attempts of Satan and his agents to destroy the church by cruel persecutions, have uniformly tended to the increase of true Christians. May the Lord speedily "destroy every enemy who hath done evil in his sanctuary;" may the princes of the earth become nursing fathers to his church; may his people have "light, and joy, and honour, a feast and a good day" on earth, anticipating the joy and gladness of heaven; and may Jesus himself reign, by the power of his grace, wherever the sun diffuses his beams, and fill the earth with truth and righteousness! Amen.

CHAP. IX.

On the day appointed, the Jews, aided by the rulers, slay their enemies; and among the rest five hundred men in Shushan, and Haman's ten sons, 1-10. The king hearing this, at Esther's request, allows the Jews in Shushan to stand against their enemies on the day following, when three hundred more are slain; and he causes Haman's sons to be hanged on the gallows erected by Haman, 11-15. The Jews throughout the provinces slay seventy-five thousand men, 16. They rejoice with feasting on the two following days, 17-19. These days are appointed as an annual festival, in commemoration of this deliverance, by Esther and Mordecai, and called the feast of Purim, 20-32.

NOW "in the twelfth month, that is, the month Adar, on the thirteenth day of the same, when the king's commandment and his decree drew near to be put in execution, in the day that the enemies of the Jews hoped to have power over them, (though it was turned to the contrary, that the Jews had rule over them that hated them;)

2 The Jews gathered themselves together in their cities, throughout all the provinces of the king Ahasuerus, to lay hand on such as sought their hurt: and no man could withstand them: for the fear of them fell upon all people.

3 And all the rulers of the provinces, and the lieutenants, and the deputies, and officers of the king, helped the Jews; because the fear of Mordecai fell upon them.

4 For Mordecai was great in the king's house, and his fame went throughout all the provinces: for this man Mordecai waxed greater and greater.

5 Thus the Jews smote all their enemies with the stroke of the sword, and slaughter, and destruction, and did what they would unto those that hated them.

6 And in Shushan the palace, the Jews slew and destroyed five hundred men.

7 And Parshandatha, and Dalphon, and Aspatha, 8 And Poratha, and Adalia, and Aridatha, 9 And Parmashta, and Arisai, and Aridai, and Vajezatha, 10 The ten sons of Haman the son of Hammedatha, the enemy of the Jews, slew they; but on the spoil laid they not their hand.

11 On that day, the number of those that were slain in Shushan the palace was brought before the king.

NOTES.

CHAP. IX. V. 1, 2. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Is. xiv. 1-6. Rev. xi. 7-12.)—As the Jews were not charged with exceeding the limits assigned them in the king's edict, it may be concluded that they assaulted none, except such as appeared in arms against them; but when they were attacked, they vigorously pursued their advantage. Neither the fear of God, nor that of the king, could overcome the desperate enmity of numbers against the Jews, whom they had hoped to extirpate; so that, perhaps urged on by the enraged friends of Haman, and all his party, they attacked them on the day appointed, in every part of the empire; yet they were every where speedily intimidated, and yielded the Jews an easy and decisive victory.

V. 3, 4. The late decree, and the report which accompanied it, of Mordecai's increasing greatness, rendered all the governors afraid of offending him, lest they should fall under the king's displeasure; so that they generally assisted the Jews, which gave them a vast advantage in the bloody contest. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 6-10. The sons of Haman seem to have combined against the Jews, by way of revenging their father's death, as the king and Mordecai were out of their reach. At the head of their retainers, probably, they led on the attack in the royal city of Shushan, but they were all slain, with five hundred of their party.—As the Jews professed only to defend their own lives, they would not take the spoil of their enemies; and there is no intimation that they injured their families, or any individual, who was not found in arms against them, (Notes, iii. 12-15. viii. 11-13.)

V. 13. As it cannot be supposed that Esther was actuated by revenge in this request, it is probable she had learned from Mordecai that Haman's retainers still formed a faction, not only dangerous to the Jews, but to the state, and were prepared to renew the attack on the next day. She therefore desired that the Jews might defend themselves, and pursue their assailants, in order that the party might be crushed, or finally intimidated; and also, that the bodies of Haman's sons might be suspended on the gallows prepared by their father, to shew all concerned, that, by assaulting the Jews, they would expose themselves to the indignation of the king. (Note, vii. 10.)

V. 15. Some think that many of those slain in Shushan, and in other parts of the empire, were Amalekites; and that thus the prediction concerning the utter destruction of Amalek was exactly accomplished. (Notes, iii. 1. Ex. xvii. 14-16.)

V. 16. Seventy-five thousand, &c. All this vast number lost their lives, through the pride and revenge of one wicked man, but by their own malice and 12 ¶ And the king said unto Esther the queen, The Jews have slain and destroyed five hundred men in Shushan the palace, and the ten sons of Haman; what have they done in the rest of the king's provinces? now what is thy petition? and it shall be granted thee: or what is thy request further? and it shall be done.

13 Then said Esther, If it please the king, let it be granted to the Jews which are in Shushan to do to-morrow also according unto this day's decree, and let Haman's ten sons be hanged upon the gallows.

14 And the king commanded it so to be done; and the decree was given at Shushan; and they hanged Haman's ten sons.

15 For the Jews that were in Shushan, gathered themselves together, on the fourteenth day also of the month Adar, and slew three hundred men at Shushan; but on the prey they laid not their hand.

16 But the other Jews, that were in the king's provinces, gathered themselves together, and stood for their lives, and had rest from their enemies, and slew of their foes seventy and five thousand; but they laid not their hands on the prey.

17 On the thirteenth day of the month Adar, and on the fourteenth day of the same rested they, and made it a day of feasting and gladness, 18 But the Jews that were at Shushan assembled together on the thirteenth day thereof, and on the fourteenth thereof; and on the fifteenth day of the same they rested, and made it a day of feasting and gladness.

19 Therefore the Jews of the villages, that dwelt in the unwall'd towns, made the fourteenth day of the month Adar a day of gladness and feasting, and a good day, and of sending portions one to another.

20 ¶ And Mordecai wrote these things, and sent letters unto all the Jews that were in all the provinces of the king Ahasuerus, both nigh and far;

21 To stablish this among them, that they should keep the fourteenth day of the month Adar, and the fifteenth day of the same, yearly, enmity to the worshippers of JEHOVAH. Thus the power and spirits of the enemies of the Jews were broken, and peace and rest were prepared for them. It is not recorded that any Jews were slain on this occasion; and, probably, their preservation was as remarkable as the destruction of their assailants.—They were, indeed, placed in the most extraordinary circumstances; but as they were sanctioned in what they did by the king's authority, and stood in defence of their own lives; as they slew none but those who attacked them, and universally declined availing themselves of the king's permission to enrich themselves with the spoil; they must be allowed to have acted in an unexceptionable manner, and were no more chargeable with the blood shed by them, than if they had been engaged in the most necessary defensive war.

V. 17-19. (Note, 21-32.)

V. 20. "Mordecai wrote these things," or the history contained in this book, (as the words most obviously imply;) and not merely the letters afterwards mentioned, as many understand it. It is most probable, that he wrote an account of these interesting transactions, and sent it with his letters into all the provinces of the empire. This, no doubt, included Judea and Jerusalem; the inhabitants of which were as much aimed at in Haman's decree, as the Jews dispersed in other countries were.—The contrast betwixt his style and that of Nehemiah is very remarkable. The latter is interspersed with ejaculations and pious reflections; (Notes, Neh. iii. 4. iv. 4. 5. v. 19. vi. 5-9. xiii. 14. 22. 31.) the former treats of divine things, without any explicit mention of God and religion. (Note, iv. 13, 14.) The different situation in which the two writers were placed, and the objects which they aimed at in writing, might have as much influence in causing this difference, as their different dispositions. Nehemiah's manner is in general most worthy of imitation; yet in some circumstances men are not to be censured, if they deem it expedient to imitate Mordecai. (Preface.)

V. 21-32. These verses contain the institution of the feast of Purim, which the Jews observe to this day. When the second decree of Ahasuerus was published, they had in every place "joy, and gladness, a feast, and a good day." (Notes, viii. 16, 17.) And when they prevailed in the contest in all parts of the empire, on the thirteenth day of the twelfth month, they with one common impulse observed the fourteenth as a festival, with joy and gladness. But the Jews at Shushan were, on that day likewise, engaged in conflict, and the fifteenth of the month was their day of joy and festivity. (17-19.) Mordecai therefore wrote to his people in every place, proposing the observance of both these days annually, in commemoration of their deliverance, by both Jews and 22 As the days wherein the Jews rested from their enemies, and the month which was turned unto them from sorrow to joy, and from mourning into a good day: that they should make them days of feasting and joy, and of sending portions one to another, and gifts to the poor.

23 And the Jews undertook to do as they had begun, and as Mordecai had written unto them:

24 Because Haman the son of Hammedatha the Agagite, the enemy of all the Jews, had devised against the Jews to destroy them, and had cast Pur, that is, the lot, to consume them, and to destroy them:

25 But when Esther came before the king, he commanded by letters, that his wicked device which he devised against the Jews, should return upon his own head, and that he and his sons should be hanged on the gallows.

26 Wherefore they called these days Purim, after the name of Pur. Therefore for all the words of this letter, and of that which they had seen concerning this matter, and which had come unto them,

27 The Jews ordained, and took upon them, and upon their seed, and upon all such as joined themselves unto them, so as it should not fail, that they would keep these two days, according to their writing, and according to their appointed time every year;

28 And that these days should be remembered and kept throughout every generation, every family, every province, and every city; and that these days of Purim should not fail from among the Jews, nor the memorial of them perish from their seed.

29 Then Esther the queen, the daughter of Abihail, and Mordecai the Jew, wrote with all authority, to confirm this second letter of Purim.

30 And he sent the letters unto all the Jews, to the hundred twenty and seven provinces of the kingdom of Ahasuerus, with words of peace and truth, 31 To confirm these days of Purim in their times appointed according as Mordecai the Jew, and Esther the queen, had enjoined them, and as they had decreed for themselves, and for their seed; the matters of the fastings and their cry.

32 And the decree of Esther confirmed these matters of Purim; and it was written in the book.

CHAP. X.

The greatness of Ahasuerus, and the advancement and usefulness of Mordecai, 1-3.

AND the king Ahasuerus laid a tribute upon the land, and upon the isles of the sea.

2 And all the acts of his power, and of his might, and the declaration of the greatness of Mordecai, whereunto the king advanced him, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Media and Persia?

3 For Mordecai the Jew was next unto king Ahasuerus, and great among the Jews, and accepted of the multitude of his brethren, seeking the wealth of his people, and speaking peace to all his seed.

proselytes, throughout their dispersions, and to all future generations. And upon the receipt of these letters, the Jews every where consented to the proposal. Yet it seems that they afterwards grew negligent; and therefore a second letter was written, with all authority, by Esther and Mordecai, enjoining the observance; which was accompanied "with words of peace and truth;" (30;) that is, with affectionate good wishes, prayers, and congratulations; and with wholesome counsels and instructions. The festival therefore was appointed by authority and by royal proclamation, yet under the direction and according to the mind of the Spirit of God. It was evidently proper to perpetuate the memory of so extraordinary a deliverance: and no doubt Esther and Mordecai did right in requiring the Jews, on this great occasion, thus to keep it in remembrance, and transmit the memorial of it to their posterity. It was thus appointed that these days should be spent in feasting and joy, in hospitality and liberality to the poor. But, as the prayers, which without doubt attended the fasting of the Jews in Shushan, are not mentioned; (Note, iv. 13, 14;) so we may be sure that praises and thanksgivings to God at first attended their feasting and rejoicing, though not recorded. Even to this day, the Jews are used to assemble, at the time appointed, in their synagogues, to read over this book of Esther, and to perform some acts of religious worship: but the feast has long since degenerated into a season of riot and excess.—The word Purim signifies the lots, (being the plural of the word Pur;) in remembrance of the lots cast by Haman, by which the day was deferred till time was allowed for defeating the whole design, and all his tokens were frustrated. (Note, iii. 7.) The fastings, lamentations, and prayers, which preceded the deliverance, were to be remembered with peculiar joy and gratitude. (31.) Some think it was intended, that the thirteenth day should be observed as a day of fasting and prayer, as an introduction to the festival; and the Jews at present profess to observe it as such: but the decree does not admit of this construction. Finally, the decree was added to this book of Esther, in which the history of these transactions was recorded, that the institution might never be forgotten.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-16. The obstinate enemies and persecutors of the church are often left to act in the most infatuated manner; being urged on by malice, in opposition to the most evident dictates of prudence. (Notes, Ex. xiv. 5-9. 21-23.) For the records of history shew, that when the enemies of God's people "have hoped to have power over them," it has generally been "turned to the contrary," and they have gained the advantage "over them that hated them." Yet, neither observation, nor experience, nor demonstration, can subdue the enmity of the carnal mind, which seizes every opportunity of exerting itself: and even the protection of the ruling powers, if not very decisive, has generally been found insufficient to repress the spirit of persecution; though men commonly fear the displeasure of a king, or of powerful courtiers, more than the wrath of almighty God.—The aggressor is answerable for all the blood shed in unjust war; provided the advantages gained by those, who stand in their own defence in a good cause, be not pushed on with revenge and cruelty: and when whole nations are attacked on account of religion, they have as good a right to defend themselves, as when the assault is made on any other unrighteous pretext.—But in every case the servants of God should manifest a disposition to humanity and disinterestedness; and frequently they ought to refuse advantages, which might legally be obtained.—Prosperous sinners often bequeath their vices and enmities to their posterity; the effects of which remain, when their ill-gotten or abused affluence is dissipated: but children will never be ruined by the crimes of their parents, unless they imitate them. (Notes, Ex. xx. 5. Ez. xviii. 2-4. 14-17.)—The pertinacity of some offenders renders it necessary for the most merciful rulers to use severity: and the enmity and obstinacy of wicked men will display the justice of God in their final and eternal destruction, when the whole world will know all their crimes. But what dire effects to thousands may result from one malicious, or even incautious action! (Notes, iii. 8-11.)

V. 17-32. When the sense of recent mercies is lively in our hearts, we should hasten to pour out our praises to the Lord. Gratitude to him, when united with liberal kindness to the poor, will sanctify our rejoicing, and render a day of feasting a good day to our own souls, and to our brethren. (Notes, Neh. viii. 9-12. P. O. 9-18.)—In reviewing our mercies, we should advert to our previous fears and distresses: we should consider, how our "sorrow hath been turned into joy;" what imminent danger of death or destruction we have escaped; what cries, prayers, confessions, and vows we have made; and with what remarkable circumstances our deliverances have been attended, our enemies disappointed, and our comforts renewed. When our mercies are personal, we should be careful that we do not by forgetfulness lose the comfort of them, and withhold from our God the glory due unto his name. When they are very public and remarkable, rulers in church or state should unite authority, with admonitions and "words of peace and truth," to prevent the memorial of them from perishing; and that all, who shall eventually share the advantages, may join in rendering praise unto the Lord. But, alas! the best institutions are liable to be perverted by human depravity; and to degenerate, not only into a form, but into an occasion of sin. Holy joy in God is supplanted by sensual indulgence and carnal mirth: under pretence of celebrating great deliverances, or even of commemorating the mysteries of redemption, professed Christians often behave, as if they were the devotees of Bacchus or of Momus; and, instead of "a good day" and a feast unto the Lord, they imitate the worshippers of the golden calf, and "sit down to eat and drink, and rise up to play?" (Note, Ex. xxxii. 1 P. O. 1-14.) Nothing more disgraces religion, or stupefies the conscience, than such abuses. May the Lord then teach us to rejoice with that holy joy, which anticipates and prepares for the felicity of heaven!

NOTES.

CHAP. X. V. 1-3. These verses close the narrative, as it stands in the original Hebrew; and are very improperly detached from the preceding chapter. As, however, they here stand, they begin another chapter, which is continued in the apocryphal supplement to this book, which opens with the fourth verse of the tenth chapter.—The nature of Ahasuerus's tribute, and the acts of his power, are not declared in the sacred Scripture; but the preferment of Mordecai proved no diminution of the king's greatness, or detriment to his subjects at large; and it was peculiarly advantageous to the Jews. (Marg. Ref.) Mordecai neither concealed his religion nor grew shy of his people, though they were generally poor and despised. His authority seems to have been durable; and he was greatly honoured by all his brethren: for he used his power to protect them, and promote their welfare; and he behaved towards them with all condescension and affection.—This book is placed in our Bibles the last of the historical records of the Jews; though the events recorded by Nehemiah seem to have occurred subsequent to most, if not all, in this book. (Note, Neh. ii. 6.)—However, for above four hundred years, that is, till the coming of the Messiah, the scriptural narrative of that favoured nation is suspended—A compendious view, of the most material events which are transmitted to us by other writers, is added, at the close of this book, in order to connect the Old Testament with the New.—It has been observed, that no pagan writer mentions any of the events recorded in the book of Esther: but, in fact, little comparatively is known concerning the Persian kings, except as connected with the history of Greece, and as recorded by Grecian historians: and it cannot be supposed, that the concerns of the Jews, as dispersed through the vast empire of Persia, would at all attract the attention of that proud people, who considered all nations, except themselves, as barbarians; and who peculiarly despised the Jews, as a bigoted and narrow-minded race; because they would not conform to any of their varied idolatries, or embrace any of their systems of sceptical philosophy.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The concerns of the despised worshippers of God are deemed more important by the Spirit of inspiration, than the greatest exploits of the most illustrious monarch upon earth.—They, who enjoy the benefits of civil government, are reasonably required to contribute to the expense of it: but it is happy for the people when taxes are imposed with justice and equality; and the advancement of wise and good men forms the most honourable part of the conduct of powerful princes. Rulers should consult the advantage of all their peaceable subjects: but they are peculiarly required to seek the welfare of the church, by protecting it from oppression, and encouraging the worship and ordinances of God.—The greatness is truly honourable which is usefully employed: and when those fill exalted stations, who behave with humility and condescension, and who manifest a due regard to religion, and affection for their inferiors; they will be most likely to escape envy, and to be honoured and accepted by the multitude of their brethren.—Contentment, diligence, and fidelity in lower employments, form a hopeful presage of good conduct in more important and exalted situations: and though men of superior talents and excellency may for a season appear to be buried in obscurity; yet if the Lord have work for them to do, he will bring them forth to more extensive usefulness. We should be thankful for equitable and peaceful rulers and temporal privileges; but all earthly grandeur is passing away;—may we then seek those riches, and that glory, which shall endure to all eternity!

EPITOME OF THE HISTORY OF THE JEWS,

And the surrounding Nations, as far as connected with the Jews, from the close of the sacred Canon of the Old Testament, until the Times of the New Testament.

Soon after the events, recorded by Nehemiah and in the book of Esther, or perhaps before the close of them, Artaxerxes Longimanus died, and was succeeded by Darius Nothus, (B. C. 423.) He dying, was succeeded by Artaxerxes Mnemon, (B. C. 405;) in whose time, Johanan, the high priest, murdered his brother Joshua in the temple, and the nation was fined by the Persians. After some other successions, of little consequence to the narrative, in our present view of it, Darius Codomannus, the last king of the Medo-Persian empire, ascended the throne. (B. C. 336.) During these years the Jews were entirely a province of the Medo-Persian empire.

Xerxes, the father of Artaxerxes Longimanus, had before this unsuccessfully attempted to subjugate Greece, (Note, Dan. xi. 2—4.) This so exasperated the Greeks, that they long meditated a design of subverting the Persian empire.—Various events, not material in this epitome, made way for Alexander the Great, king of Macedon, to be appointed commander of a Grecian army, which was raised for the purpose of invading the Persian dominions. With about thirty thousand select troops, he passed over into Asia, (B. C. 334;) and with a celerity unexampled in history, having vanquished the immense armies of Darius in three pitched battles, the last of which was followed by the murder of Darius by his own servants, he terminated the Medo-Persian empire, and assumed the dominion over all the nations contained in it, (B. C. 330.) (Notes, Dan. ii. 39. vii. 6. viii. 5—7. xi. 2—4.) In a short time, Alexander having still more enlarged his vast dominions, died at Babylon; and after many severe and bloody contests his empire was divided into four kingdoms, Macedonia, Thrace, Syria and Egypt, (B. C. 323.) (Notes, Dan. vii. 6. viii. 8.)—The Jews however had little concern for some ages with any of these, except the kings of Syria and of Egypt, called by Daniel, the king of the north, and of the south, (Note, Dan. xi. 2—6.) Judea lay between the dominions of the successive rulers of these kingdoms; and was, for a long time, under the power of one or the other of them, (Notes, Dan. xi. 5—20;) and exposed to the ravages of the armies which marched through the land. At first they formed a part of the kingdom of Egypt, under Ptolemy Soter: after his death, Ptolemy Philadelphus, his son and successor, shewed them much favour; and during his reign, the Hebrew Scriptures began to be translated into Greek, for the benefit of the Jews who lived in Egypt and other places, where the Greek was known.—This translation is called the Septuagint; and by means of it, many of the learned Gentiles acquired considerable acquaintance with the Old Testament.

The Jews having been cruelly oppressed by Ptolemy Philopater, (who, attempting to enter into the holy of holies, was opposed and hindered by the priests and rulers, which he indignantly resented;) revolted from him, and submitted to Antiochus the Great, king of Syria. But Antiochus, having rashly engaged in war with the Romans, was vanquished, and reduced to make an inglorious peace; which gave the Romans, the fourth kingdom, their first entrance into the dominions of the Grecian empire, or the third kingdom; (Notes, Dan. ii. 39—43. vii. 7, 8. xi. 17—19. 31.) After the death of Antiochus the Great, and the inglorious reign of his son, Seleucus Philopater; (Note, Dan. xi. 20;) Antiochus Epiphanes, called by Daniel “a vile person,” succeeded, and most cruelly oppressed and persecuted the Jews, causing all the worship at the temple to cease, and even dedicating it to his own idol. (Notes, Dan. viii. 9—12. xi. 21—30.) But Mattathias, a priest, and his sons called the Maccabees, opposed him; and being wonderfully assisted and prospered, in many bloody contests, under Judas Maccabeus, the power of Antiochus was overthrown, his persecution terminated, the temple was recovered, and its service restored; and Antiochus soon came to a miserable end. These events are recorded, in the books of the Maccabees, the first of which especially, is allowed to contain authentic history. (Notes, Dan. xi. 31—35.) From about this time, (B. C. 153;) the Jews, taking advantage of the enfeebled state of the contending kingdoms, (Syria and Egypt,) became independent under the government of the Maccabees, who united in general the high-priesthood with the sovereign authority; but without the name of king, till the time of Aristobulus, son of Hyrcanus, (B. C. 107.) This epithet must exclude the notice of the intestine contests of the different parties among the Jews; which were many, fierce, and often bloody.

At length, however, the Romans greatly extending their conquests, the kingdom of Syria was reduced into the form of a Roman province, by Pompey the Great. He, not long after, besieged Jerusalem: and having taken it, he entered into the holy of holies, (B. C. 63;) but after that, he never prospered. (Note, Dan. xi. 31. Conclusion.)—From this time the Jews became dependent on the Romans.—At length Antipater, the father of Herod the Great, an Edomite, by the favour of Julius Cæsar, (who had prevailed against Pompey, and obtained dominion at Rome,) was made ruler in Judea: (B. C. 47.) After Antipater's death, Herod his son, called by Matthew, "Herod the king," by the favour of the Romans, and by force of arms, obtained possession of Jerusalem, and was established in regal authority; being by birth an Edomite, but proselyted to Judaism; which authority was at length confirmed by Augustus Cæsar. (B. C. 30.) This dignity he maintained with great ability, but most atrocious cruelties, in his own family, as well as among others, till the birth of Christ. In this interim, he had built many cities, and almost rebuilt the temple. (Notes, Hag. ii. 6—9. Matt. xvi. 13—16. John ii. 18—22. Acts xxiii. 35.) His atrociously cruel attempt to murder the infant Saviour, is recorded by the evangelist; and soon after he died most miserably. (Notes, Matt. ii.) After some years, in which the dominions of Herod were divided into four tetrarchies under the sons of Herod; (Note, Matt. xiv. 1, 2;) Judea became a Roman province, the sceptre departed from Judah; for Shiloh was come, (Note, Gen. xlix. 9, 10,) and under Pontius Pilate, the Roman procurator, in the reign of Tiberius Cæsar, the successor of Augustus, the Lord Jesus was crucified.—Galilee, however, still remained under the government of Herod the tetrarch, son of Herod the king, who beheaded John Baptist: but after some other changes, at length the whole Jewish state was subverted under Titus the son of Vespasian.
